School of Ed Moves Into New Era All Courses Graded Pass-Fail

The revolution continues. Led by the dean and guided by the faculty and students, the University of Massachusetts School of Education moves into a "year of action" this fall, seeking "the impossible dream of creating a School of Education which would serve as a model of both relevance and excellence, a vital new force in American Education, an institution which would make its mark in a meaningful way on the fabric of our social order," according to Dean Dwight W. Allen.

Dean Allen, beginning his second full year at UMass, explains, "We devoted all of last year to planning, to studying all the old concepts, techniques and models, to investigating new methods to weeding out, and to combining. This year, our 'revolution' moves into an active stage."

Old courses, degree and certification requirements have been discontinued. A totally new curriculum, free from the rigid requirements which characterize many schools, is being implemented.

All courses within the school will be graded pass-fail this year. The School of Education is the only school in the University and only one of several across the country employing total pass-fail grading.

Dean Dwight Allen

Students within the College of Arts and Sciences can elect an Education course and take it pass-fail, without it counting as the one pass-fail elective allowed in each Junior and Senior semester.

But this new curriculum does not exclude the old just because it is old.

"The keynote of the year of planning," Allen explains, "was to place the traditional and the innovative on the same intellectual footing - to require as strong a rationale for continuation of the old as for insertion of something new.

"Education in the 70's will have to be extremely flexible if it is to remain relevant to the changing technical, social, and intellectual world. We must, in order to meet this challenge, develop a school flexible enough and innovative enough to turn out teachers who are flexible and innovative," Allen went on to say.

In short, the School of Education is trying to institutionalize change, to create an institution where change is the norm and not the exception, according to the Dean.

Thousands Tripple Up Some Relief in Sight

More than 3000 UMass students came back to school this fall to find themselves living in triple rooms. Nearly three-quarters of the Freshman class has been assigned to triples, and a larger than normal number of upper classmen will be living in the crowded conditions for at least the next few weeks, and probably for the entire first semester.

Dean of Students William F. Field explained that many of the students now living in triples will be able to move into double rooms by the end of September. "As soon as empty rooms or rooms with one occupant have been identified, we will reassign students from triples to fill all available spaces," Field said.

However, it is unlikely that the majority of students now tripled up will be able to move until second semester.

Under Board of Trustee regulations, students who live in triple rooms for longer than four weeks are entitled to a 20% reduction in room rent.

There are several reasons for this situation, Dean Field explained. For example, there are some students who will not return to UMass this fall, but have not notified the University. Also, despite the fact that upperclass students have an opportunity in the spring to select rooms for the fall semester, there is no room-deposit system at present to commit them in advance to take a room. As a result, many students who plan to live off campus sign up for residence halls as a form of insurance.

Another factor contributing to over-crowding is the lack of large quantities of low-cost housing in the surrounding communities.

If the University guaranteed all freshmen a double room at the beginning of their first semester, the number of students who could be accepted would have to be cut drastically, according to Dean Field.

"Until we know exactly how many students we have in residence, we have to maintain a policy of tripling," he said.

New residence halls now under construction will be completed before September, 1970, relieving the over-crowding problems next year.

Trustee Subcommittee Discusses Open House, Alcohol, and Co-ed Dorms

By JOEL FOX
Managing Editor

Meeting in Boston today, a subcommittee of the University Board of Trustees, chaired by Louis M. Lyons, will discuss and make recommendations to the full board on open housing, alcoholic beverages, picketing codes and co-ed dorms. The recommendations will be presented to the full board at its September 15th meeting.

Representing the students at today's meeting will be Student Senate President Bruce Balboni, Senate Vice-President Cindi Olken, Senate Secretary Pat Beharry, Open House Subcommittee Chairman Steve Carroll, former Chairman of Student Matters Steve Walt, and the present Chairman of Student Matters, Bob Kentfield.

The method which the Senate proposes for open house is that, "Each Residence Unit shall determine through its duly elected student government the procedures, if any, to be followed with regard to visitors of the opposite sex within the Unit," according to section B of the Room Visitation Policy.

The point that the Senate will hope to change regarding policies on alcoholic beverages is that a duly licensed "21 Room" be established in the Student Union in which beer and wine can be sold.

The subcomittee will discuss the faculty and the Student Senate picketing code recommendations which both stress the right to orderly demonstrations. Both policies list a procedure for dispersing demonstrations that are in violation of the picketing standards as 1) a verbal attempt to persuade to desist, 2) warning of the possible consequences 3) requesting names and if not given voluntarily, to try to obtain names "by any means short of force", 4) calling in University police if all else fails, 5) if police are unable to handle the situation, outside authority may be called in. The principle difference of the two reports is that the faculty recommends that demonstrations take place only outside buildings whereas the student act allows for picketing within buildings.

The subcommittee will also discuss plans for a co-ed dorm. Greenough's experimental co-ed dorm which was supposed to begin this semester did not come up in front of the board in time for approval for this semester. However, approval of the dorm by the subcommittee may mean Greenough could begin its new set up as early as February, 1970.

Student Vote on Board of Trustees Now Law

BOSTON - Gov. Francis W. Sargent has signed into law a bill allowing a student from UMass to be a voting member on the University's Board of Trustees.

The proposal also provides one student voting member on each board of trustees of Lowell Technological Institute and Southeastern Massachusetts University be elected from the student body of each institution.

Within the next few weeks, according to a source in the Governor's office, an elections committee will be established to promulgate procedures for the election at each institution or group of institutions, of a student representative to sit on that institution's board of trustees.

The committee, to be appointed by the Governor, will consist of fifteen members, three of which will be UMass students.

The bill, passed in the last hours of the past legislative session, considers both branches of the University, Amherst and Boston, to be one unit. Thus unless a new interpretation occurs, it would appear that the student representative on the UMass Board of Trustees would alternate each year between the Amherst and Boston campuses.

Concerning the bill, Gov. Sargent said, "This legislation means that Massachusetts will take action to move from confrontation to dialogue, to encourage dissent with reason rather than dissent with violence. It will shape our colleges and universities into true communities of active participants. It will open new channels of communication between young and old, between student and administration."

Since the legislation was proposed the Governor has had demands from a faculty, alumnae, and administrative groups, demanding that the y too have an elected representative on the boards of trustees. As a result, Sargent is establishing a task force on education to decide how all these groups can be best represented.

The bill signed by the Governor also provides for one student to be elected from each community college to form an advisory committee to the Massachusetts Board of Regional Community Colleges, and then one of their committee to be elected to become a voting member of the Regional Community College Board of Trustees.

UMASS, HOME FOR 18,000 INDIVIDUALS

By MARK SILVERMAN
and GAIL SULLIVAN

The University of Massachusetts, New England's largest university in terms of full-time enrollment, begins a new academic year this week with a record 21,785 students.

In cars packed to the roof with clothes, books and the necessities of life, 18,185 students and their families crowded the highways of western Massachusetts this weekend on their way to the State University in Amherst.

Another 3600 students will be jamming the subways on their way to the University's Boston Campus, as that institution begins its fifth year after graduating its first class in June.

As Dr. John W. Lederle begins his 10th and final year as President, the University has increased its enrollment by more than 15,000 students in a decade and added major campuses in Boston and Worcester.

Registration for 3500 graduate students was held Friday for 3400 freshmen on Saturday, and for undergraduates today. Classes begin on Wednesday.

Where They Come From

UMass students come from more than 95 percent of the 351 cities and towns in Massachusetts.

At the undergraduate level, nearly two-thirds come from the eastern part of the state, as determined by drawing a line north and south to the west of Worcester. The heaviest representation comes from the communities of Springfield, Amherst, Boston, Worcester and Newton.

Of the University's living 27,000 alumni, more than half live in the Commonwealth. Alumni officials expect that this number will increase now that larger numbers are being graduated each year. Many go on to graduate school out of state or spend time in the service, but when they finally settle down, more than half will return to their home state.

Statewide System

Abandoning its century-old role as "The University in Amherst" five years ago, the University began to build a state wide system in accordance with the Harrington-Willis bill. The bill provides for a public higher education system headed by one university with branches, and a series of state colleges, community colleges and technological institutes, each with special roles.

The University's Boston campus, entering its fifth year, has just received $50 million to go ahead with the first phase of construction of the permanent campus at Columbia Point.

Ground will be broken this fall in Worcester to prepare that site for the $124 million Medical School, and the first class of 16 will enter next year.

With additional facilities in the communities surrounding Amherst and on Nantucket Island, Waltham and East Wareham, UMass is truly the University of all Massachusetts.

"As rising costs at private colleges put an education beyond the reach of many families, more and more parents are turning to the once overshadowed public institutions for a low-cost, high-quality education," according to the University administration. "Tuition at UMass is $200 a year compared to the $2,000 that some private institutions now have to charge. This means that a UMass student in Amherst can get by on about $1900 a year, including room, board, tuition, fees, books and other expenses. A student at Boston can make it on about $500 a year."

As a result, this year more than 20,000 Massachusetts high school seniors applied for 3400 places in the freshmen class at UMass-Amherst. Dr. William D. Tunis, Dean of Admissions, says that the University had to turn away more than 9000 fully qualified students.

In an effort to take care of more of these students, the University instituted a "swing shift" program several years ago. This summer 347 swing shifters took their first semester during summer school. They "drop out" in September and rejoin their class in February, taking the places of those who graduate in mid-year or leave for medical or other reasons during the first semester.

Contrary to popular belief, says Dean Tunis, "College Board scores are not the most important factor in gaining admission to the University. Careful studies over the last few years have shown that the high school record of a student is the best indicator of future success in college."

Last year's freshman profile looked like this. The men were in the top 19 percent of their class, and women in the top 9 percent. The median verbal college board score was 539, the math score 574. Scores for engineers were higher in the math and generally

Who Really Heads UM?

Responsibility for the statewide university system is entrusted to the leadership of four key men.

Dr. John W. Lederle heads the list. President of the mushrooming University that calls the state its campus, he is the chief executive of the university system and oversees all of its academic and administrative functions in Amherst, Boston, and Worcester. The University's fifteenth president, Dr. Lederle came to the Amherst campus in September of 1960 from his post as director of the Institute of Public Administration at the Universities of Michigan to initiate an era of academic and physical development. Dr. Lederle will leave his post as President next June after a decade of leadership, to return to fulltime teaching.

Political scientist and attorney, he earned his A.B., A.M., LL.B. and Ph. D. degrees from the University of Michigan and taught political science both there and at

Pres. John W. Lederle

Brown University where he was later assistant dean of the college. A former controller for the state of Michigan, Dr. Lederle has worked as a legislative consultant to the U. S. Senate and the U. S. House of Representatives.

Dr. Oswald Tippo, University Provost, is the chief academic officer at UMass-Amherst. To meet the demands of an ever-increasing student population on the Amherst campus, much of his time is now spent in recruiting top administrators and faculty members. Dr. Tippo received his B.S. from UMass and his M.A. and Ph. D. degrees from Harvard University. Head of the department of botany at Yale University for a number of years, he went on to become dean of the University of Illinois Graduate School, Provost of the University of Colorado and Executive Dean of Arts and Sciences at New York University. He returned to his alma mater as Provost in

Dr. Lamar Soutter joined the staff of the University in 1964 as the first dean of the new UMass Medical School in Worcester. A graduate of Harvard College and Harvard Medical School, he has had extensive experience both in private practice and in medical education. He was visiting surgeon and Chairman of the Committee on Teaching at the Massachusetts General Hospital (MGH). He has taught at Harvard University and at MGH and has also served as Associate Dean, Acting Dean and Dean of the Boston University School of Medicine. From 1961 to 1963, he served as Boston Area Chief of Surgery and was Area Consultant in Surgery for the Vet-

Thousands of Students Discover They Can't Take Desired Courses

By RICHARD W. STORY

Approximately 4200 students will discover this Registration Day that they have not been scheduled for at least one course for which they pre-registered. Familiar problems with registering students are more intense this Fall than at nearly any time in the past; and the best available indications at this time are that very little can be done to alleviate this serious shortage in some major fields.

According to the Provost's Office, the basic reason behind this almost unprecendented scheduling difficulty is the inability of academic departments to add sections where they are needed. Compounding this has been the problem of last-minute cancellations of previously-established course sections, often because of a shortage of teaching help. The ultimate reasons behind this teaching shortage are budgetary, said the Provost's Office.

In a long interview aimed at uncovering the explanation of this shortage of sections and seats, H. Hills Skillings, Schedule Officer, began by explaining some of the basic mechanics of the computer scheduling procedure. Normally, this processing aims to allow a 5% "air space" or excess capacity over demand. This usual allowance of "air space" was not present this year, he said, for a number of reasons. In the case of some specialised courses, for example, particular laboratory space was limited; some lecture courses were unable to schedule appropriate-sized lecture halls; in other cases particular supplies could not be provided for financial reasons. Teaching talent, of course, at both the faculty and graduate assistant levels, was in short supply in many departments. In the end, then, fewer sections of large courses could be established than desirable.

With this input situation, then, scheduling of 14,238 4-year undergraduates had to proceed. There are only a fixed number of class meeting schedule combinations (such as MWF 9:05, for example) that can be used; and these time schedules are being taxed to the limit this year. More and more courses attempt to schedule in certain popular hours of the day; and these hour arrangements cannot accommodate all the sections of all the courses that would like to use them. The increased use of the two 75-minute periods per week (such as TuTh 1:00 to 2:15, for example) arrangement is also beginning to cause problems this semester, Skillings reports.

Certain topics exhibit a "vogue" popularity each season - this year is no exception, Skillings continued. It is extremely difficult to predict what areas will be heavily subscribed - when this does occur, though, demand almost always exceeds supply; and this causes students to lose out on registering for a course. This year the most popular courses are those that deal with race or racial relations: such courses are very heavily over-subscribed this Fall, according to the Schedule Office. This has had the effect of causing students to miss out on placement into a course.

These, then, are the basic problems and constraints which have faced the Schedule Office as it has attempted to do its job for this Fall semester. In terms of actual numbers, Skillings reported that there had been about 3800 student course registrations dropped. Most of these affected only one student each; but slightly more than 10% of this number were students who lost two or more courses. In addition to these losses, about 900 additional students could not be scheduled for one or more of their selected courses for reasons of conflicts - two courses elected which had to use the same time period. Skillings said that the trial hour plans made during counseling periods did not always show these conflicts because students assumed that other sections would be open to them - sections which, by the time they were actually scheduled were, in fact, closed or cancelled. This too was unpredictable.

In sum, then, about 4200 individual students have been affected by scheduling difficulties of one form or another this Fall. Most students have felt it in the sense

Campus Security System Comes Under Scrutiny

Two special committees have been formed to improve the working of the campus security system at the University of Massachusetts, Assistant Dean of Administration William C. Venman has announced.

Both include student representation and are an outgrowth of a review and evaluation of the UMass campus security system, done the past year with the assistance of the John W. Powell consulting firm.

The Advisory Committee on Campus Security is a liason body between the campus community and the security department. Associate Provost Jeremiah Allen is chairman and the eight members represent students, faculty and administration.

The Campus Security Fact Finding Committee is a complaint and suggestion agency designed to work both ways - handling complaints by members of the University community about the security forces and complaints by the security people about members of the University community.

Professor of Management Max S. Wortman is chairman. Members are Terence Burke, associate professor of geology, and Cindi professor of geology and Cindi Olken, senior from Sharon and Student Senate vice president.

Any member of the campus community with a complaint about the security department may call a member of the Campus Security Fact Finding Committee, Dr. Venman or the Dean of Students office at once, Dr. Venman advised.

Telephone numbers are: Dr. Wortman, 545-2776; Dr. Burke, 545-2794; Miss Olken, 546-8252; Dr. Venman, 545-2333; Dean of Students, 545-2684. Callers will be put in touch with the fact finding committee, whose role is to ascertain facts, assess blame where possible and make a written report to the Dean of Students office.

LEDERLE RESIGNS; EFFECTIVE IN JUNE SAYS 10 YEARS ENOUGH AS PRESIDENT

By MARK SILVERMAN
News Editor

John W. Lederle has resigned as President of the University of Massachusetts, effective at the close of this academic year.

The surprise announcement came in a letter to Board of Trustee Chairman Joseph P. Healy in June, and signaled the beginning of the end for the ten year administration which has led UMass to a prominent position among state Universities.

The trustees are expected to appoint a committee to search for a successor within a few weeks, however the choice probably will not be made before the first of the year.

Another committee has been appointed to study the structure of the University administration itself, to study the problems the new President will face, and to provide him with the structural means needed to cope with them.

Lederle said in the letter that he hopes to remain at UMass as a Government professor after he leaves Whitmore.

TEN YEAR LIMIT

In the resignation letter, the President said he based his decision to resign on a belief "that a President makes his major contribution within his first 10 years. Although there are some tasks which remain to be done, it is better that the Board of Trustees appoint a new man, one who can bring new ideas in a day of dramatic social change."

Lederle thanked an "outstanding faculty", and a "dedicated group of administrators" for any success of the University during his years in office. He also said, "One of my greatest satisfactions and challenges has been the opportunity to work ... with outstanding and responsible students."

THE STATE'S ROLE

Thanking the State government for its financial support, he commented, "It is only because the Commonwealth started from such a low base that the real effort of recent years has been obscured."

While both Lederle and Healy stressed that the decision to resign has nothing to do with the school's recent budgetary problems with the Legislature and Governor, the President did warn Beacon Hill that it would have to do more for public higher education in the future.

"I would be remiss," Lederle said, "if I did not express my grave concern for the thousands of qualified applicants we are forced to turn away each year. Without greatly increased financial support. . .thousands of Massachusetts youths will find the door to college slammed in their faces."

Commenting on Lederle's letter, Healy said, "Unless something is done to lessen the frustrations of top administrators in American Universities, a period much less than 10 years may be the realistic term for any successor to Dr. Lederle."

And at least one member of the University's Board of Trustees attributed the President's resignation directly to the budgetary problem.

"Disappointment at the failure of the various governors and legislatures, during the past 10 years, to grant the University the funds necessary to support its ever-growing commitments has multiplied over his administration," Trustee Louis M. Lyons said.

"And the increased frustration of having his budget slashed unmercifully this year, coupled with the 5 year fight over the Medical School culminating in this year's debate," he added, "has openly bothered him."

The Cambridge Trustee concluded, "One might assume that if President Lederle had gotten more cooperation from the state government in the past, 10 years might not now seem such a long time to be President."

Another Trustee, Edmund Croce of Worcester said that Lederle's resignation might change some thinking of Beacon Hill.

"Perhaps the legislature will review its position in light of the President's move. . .there is considerable room for improvement," he explained.

PRESIDENT PRAISED

When the resignation became public, persons both on and off campus flocked to praise the departing President for his 10 years of service.

Provost Oswald Tippo said, "He's made a tremendous contribution during his 10 years, and he will certainly go down in history as a great president at the University."

"He has been during his 10 years the real spokesman for all higher education - the state university, state colleges and community colleges," said Dean of Students William F. Field. "His broad vision of what higher education has had to do during this period," he went on to say, "has had a profound impact. He understood the broad function and made others understand."

President John W. Lederle

Dean Field also said during Lederle's time the University "has made its greatest growth, not only in quantity, but also in quality, and that speaks something for the man."

Seymour Shapiro, acting dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said, "The University has advanced enormously over the nine years he has been president."

"He has made strides that one has seen in only a few state universities," Dr. Shapiro said, "and his impact will remain with this institution for many years to come."

Shapiro went on to say, "According to his statement, which I heard on the radio, he planned to stay no longer than 10 years, feeling he would make his impact on the University in that time. The University has improved, and he now sees that whatever he can give it has already been built in."

The feeling of the Board of Trustees as a whole was summed up by Dennis M. Crowley of Boston, who said of Lederle, "I terribly regret that he is leaving us, he is truly a great educator. In the 10 years of his administration, a great University has been built, and it is obvious that he has made a major contribution toward the well being of the State."

Major Accomplishments of The Lederle Administration

The following is a list of some of the major strides the University has taken during the 10 year administration of John W. Lederle, as compiled by the University News Bureau.

--Enrollment increase from 6,495 in 1960 to a projected enrollment of more than 21,000 at Amherst and Boston next September.

--An increase in the average faculty salary from $7528 a year to $13,500 a year.

--An increase from 366 faculty at Amherst to 1157 by September, and another 233 at Boston.

--An increase in number of graduates each year from 901 in 1960 to 2240 this June in Amherst and another 525 in Boston.

--Growth in the graduate program from 768 to 3500 students. Doctoral programs have grown from 16 in 1960 to 44 this year.

--During his tenure, 70 buildings have been built on the Amherst campus, 28 of them by the UMass Building Authority at no cost to the taxpayer totalling $54,029,000, and 42 academic buildings and additions at a cost of $84,271,000. At the present time another eight buildings, including a campus center, a 28-story library, and a 17-story graduate research center are under construction.

--Passage of the fiscal autonomy bill in 1962 which allows trustees to set appropriate salary ranges for professional staff within state salary schedules, to transfer funds within state subsidiary accounts, to follow modern purchasing procedures, to establish tenure rules and establish trust funds for gifts and self-supporting programs. The establishment of fiscal autonomy for the University is considered by many to be the most important step taken in the quality growth of that institution.

--Establishment of a campus in Boston in 1964. A year later the first class of 1200 entered, and this past June the first class of 525 graduated. The establishment of UMass-Boston is one of the amazing feats in higher educational history - five years from establishment to the graduation of the first class, when it usually takes nine or ten years. Plans are under way to build the first phase of the permanent campus at Columbia Point.

--Establishment of the medical school in Worcester in 1962. Plans are ready to build the medical school and are nearly complete on the hospital. Funds totalling $35 million have been granted by the federal government for the two facilities, and the first class is expected to enter in 1970.

An Editorial

Time and a Man's Decision

By DONALD A. EPSTEIN
Editor in Chief

It really wasn't shocking news.

We predicted the resignation of UMass President John Lederle over two months ago, but didn't expect the announcement until next spring.

John Lederle and his team have transformed a 1960 cow college of 6500 students into one of the nation's best and fastest growing state universities with a projected enrollment of more than 21,000 next September. For this we will be ever grateful to him.

In his letter of resignation, Lederle states that when he came here in 1960, he set for himself ten years as the outside limit of his tenure as president. "I have always felt that a president makes his major contribution within his first ten years. Although there are some tasks that remain to be done, after ten years it is better that a board of trustees select a new man, one who can bring new ideas and suggest different educational paths for a university as called for in a day of dynamic social change." he said.

Being president of any university or college today is a very demanding job. Being president of the state university of Massachusetts has probably been for John Lederle a little bit more so.

Although the 57 year old president cites his long tenure as the main reason for leaving, the current problems between Beacon Hill and Whitmore hastened Lederle's resignation. The University has experienced four bad budget years under Republican governors and weak Democratic legislative leadership. Governor Sargent, with an eye toward the electorate and the so called "taxpayers revolt", cut the request for public higher education by over $30 million. The UMass-Boston budget alone was slashed 20% by the Governor. The Worcester Medical School, which John Lederle has worked so hard to bring about, is fighting for its life because of pressure put on Gov. Sargent by the Harvard, Boston University and Tufts medical schools.

However, the fault does not completely rest on Beacon Hill. Several legislative leaders, who are considered to be friends of the University, have said the University administration has not done its job in selling the University to the legislature and to the public. Many in the Boston area still consider us to be the University of Western Mass. Too often the administration has waited until it had its back against the wall to take the offensive.

The Lederle team has been breaking up over the past year. The resignations of Edward Moore, Dean of the Graduate School; Mark Noffsinger, Assoc. Dean of Students; Leo Redfern, Dean of Administration; Robert Hopkins, Dean of Men; I. Moyer Hunsberger, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and Francis Ryan, Chancellor of UMass Boston, have affected John Lederle. The final blow was the April 24th announcement that Provost Oswald Tippo, John Lederle's right arm man and closest University friend, intended to resign.

Since these announced resignations and the resultant game of administrative musical chairs, near confusion has reigned as times in certain high Whitmore posts. One gathered the impression that at times one office hasn't known what the next one is doing. The most recent example is the apparent chaos in the current swing-shift program where, until yesterday, no one really knew what administrator headed the program. There are now 347 swingshift freshmen enrolled when only last week 300 were expected.

Again we thank John Lederle for what he has given us. At all times he has treated us and thought of us as adults. On innumerable occasions he has stated that the University should not play the role of baby sitter, that this is the place where students learn to confront the real world.

But ten years is a long time for any college president. It's a killing job. The time has come for new ideas and new vitality in the upper echelons of Whitmore. It takes a man of John Lederle's stature to realize this and to act accordingly.

New Roles For President, Chancellor Seen in Future

By MARK SILVERMAN
News Editor

In the two months since John Lederle announced his resignation, Whitmore has begun to look into the future, and while the name of the new President will not be known for several months, if then, most administrators agree that the new administration will be, at least structurally, different from the "Lederle team."

The biggest change, obviously, will come in the President's office. Most people feel that the new president will work in Boston, rather than in Amherst.

This, they reason, will afford the new Chief Executive greater contact with the State Government and the Boston press.

If there has been one shortcoming of the Lederle administration, it has been the consistantly strained relations with Beacon Hill, a situation which has resulted in the meager budgets of the last five years. This problem has grown increasingly more serious as communication between the leaders of State Government and top University officials has deteriorated.

Thus, most administrators feel that it is necessary for the new President to be located in Boston, so that at least physically, the ties between Beacon Hill and the University can be strengthened. This, they reason, is a must if the University is to financially survive.

This same reasoning leads many people to believe that the new man himself will be essentially a politician, rather than an academician. A politician, it is reasoned, will have a common ground to begin with in his dealings with Beacon Hill. The stigma of "ivory tower intellectual" may, in this way, be removed from University officials who bargain with legislative leaders each year.

The new man, many believe, will be a former Federal official of either the Kennedy or Johnson administrations, a semi-active state politician, or an academician who has served as an advisor to a President or a Governor.

With the President living and working in Boston, many administrators feel that a Chancellor will be appointed to lead the Amherst campus, such as Francis Broderick heads UMass Boston. This appointment, assuming that the position is created, will involve a great deal of University politicking.

The first Chancellor, it is assumed, will be a man who is already a UMass administrator, and the leading candidate is Provost Oswald Tippo.

As chief academic officer at UMass since 1964, Tippo has directed the dramatic academic growth which the University has enjoyed in recent years. He has brought several academic deans and leading faculty members to campus, and his ascension to the Chancellorship would mean a continuation of the general progress toward academic liberalism which he has led.

However there is a strong camp within the administration that opposes Tippo, and that is led by Treasurer Kenneth Johnson. Many administrators have labeled Tippo and his supporters as "academic liberals," and say they are opposed by Johnson and his "academic conservatives."

Complicating this whole matter is the fact that Tippo is disliked by a group of Beacon Hill lawmakers. This stems from the Provost's undated resignation, issued last year in the midst of the Spring budget battle. At that time several legislators, notably Sen. James F. "Blackie" Burke (D-Brockton), criticized Tippo for his urging the legislature to give more support to public higher education.

Thus, the Provost's opponents are able to claim that the legislature's dislike for Tippo would harm the University if Tippo became Chancellor. Tippo's supporters claim, however, that the Provost's accomplishments in the academic development of the school, and his close ties with the major academic deans outweigh any legislative hostility toward Tippo.

They also argue that Tippo would be Chancellor and not President, that with the President in Boston, Tippo would have very little contact with the legislature, and thus, last year's battle with Burke would not really hurt UMass in the future.

This battle will probably be decided by the Board of Trustees, and one administrator, a Tippo man, admits that the Provost and the Treasurer are about even in Board support at this time.

Aside from the Presidency and the Chancellorship, there probably will be very few personel changes in Whitmore.

The Secretary's office is vunerable to a change at the top: the Secretary's office is in charge of University Relations, and a new President might want his own man to head this office. But Secretary McCartney's job, while not 100% safe, is not in terrible jeopardy.

It is possible that, with the President in Boston, the Secretary and a part of his office may also move to the Hub, but this is only a possibility.

One major office within Whitmore which appears secure is the Student Affairs office. "Dean Field has become an institution in himself" one administrator has said of the Dean of Students.

It is hard to speculate further about the future of administrators, but it is clear that the majority of people now sitting behind desks in Whitmore will still be there a year from now. The change, under a new President, will come in what they do behind their desks.

Text of The Presidents Letter of Resignation

Dear Mr. Healey:

When I came to the University of Massachusetts in 1960 I set for myself ten years as the outside limit of my tenure in presidential office. I have always felt that a president makes his major contribution within his first ten years. Although there are some tasks that remain to be done, after ten years it is better that a board of trustees select a new man, one who can bring new ideas and suggest different educational paths for a university as called for in a day of dynamic social change.

For some time past I have been the senior state university president in New England. I have already held office longer than the national norm. If I may indulge in some humor currently prevalent among my presidential colleagues: "It is a good idea to quit before one falls farther behind."

I therefore write to apprise you, and through you the Board of Trustees, of my resignation as President to become effective at the end of the academic year 1969-70. I give you this notice now so that you may have ample time in which to search for my successor. Pending his arrival I shall, of course, devote my full attention and energy to the advancement of the University system in Amherst, Boston and Worcester.

My decision is based on my firm belief in what is good for the University. I resign with the highest regard for the members of the Board of Trustees and with deep appreciation for the privilege they have afforded me to lead the University during this period of rapid growth not only in size but in quality. It is hard to realize that enrollment has increased from slightly more than six thousand students in 1960 to a planned twenty-one thousand next fall.

As I have said many times, "The University is people!" In the popular mind the President gets the credit, but the truth is that any success we have achieved is due to the backing of an outstanding faculty and of a dedicated group of administrators who have worked ably as my administrative team. If there is any discredit, as President I am glad to assume that alone.

One of my great satisfactions and challenges as President has been the opportunity to work both in Boston and in Amherst with outstanding and responsible students. The University has pioneered in the involvement of students in the development of policy at all levels clear up to the Board of Trustees. We have established and will continue to develop a tripartite academic community in which students, faculty and administration work cooperatively toward the common goal of academic excellence.

I have been grateful as President for the hand of friendship extended by governors, state legislators, and state house administrators. Although our budget requests have frequently been cut and we have not received the kind of financial support which would put us in the forefront of public institutions, we have made tremendous progress. It is only because the Commonwealth started from such a low base that the very real effort of recent years has been obscured.

I would be remiss if I did not express my grave concern for the thousands of qualified applicants we must turn away each year. Without greatly increased financial support for public higher education - community colleges, technical institutes, state colleges and the University - thousands of Massachusetts youth will find the door to college slammed shut in the years just ahead, and our greatest natural resource will be lost to us.

When I leave the presidency next year I should like to return to my professional field of political science in a faculty position where I can teach and do research. This will also permit closer contact with students which I have missed. I shall continue to promote the University's welfare, albeit in a different role. I look forward to the day when the University will be truly recognized as the "People's University," and I will continue to support the Board of Trustees in bringing this dream to fruition on behalf of the youth of the Commonwealth.

Sincerely,
John W. Lederle
President

Student Co-op Organized For Housing Action

By JOHN STAVROS
Senior Reporter

In the wake of several demonstrations this summer directed at the people involved in the administration of the town and housing in general, a student at the University is attempting to form a student co-op.

At the present time Richard Meier, organizer and director of SCAT, (Student Co-operative Association, Today) is in the process of conducting a membership drive.

In explaining the organization Meier states. "SCAT is a non-profit corporation designed to engage in Co-operative ventures in a democratic manner," in which the power of the co-op will lie directly with the members and not the board of directors.

Meier went on to say that there are three basic parts that will go into making up SCAT. Its members, who join through a $10 membership fee, will be the voting body with a committee elected from amount themselves, and a director who has the duty of soliciting membership and calling the first meeting of all the members. "Each membership bought," stated Meier, "will assure the member one vote in the co-op, with each person able to buy as many as ten memberships."

When asked about the size of the membership Meier stated there was a potential of 2500 members. "Based on initial sales and aware of the interest that is being generated by conditions in the 5-college area for an effective and constructive alternative to high rents, absentee landlords, and lack of places for student to rent, caused by shortage and unwillingness to have students as tenants, SCAT projects an initial sale of between $15,000 to $25,000 worth of memberships."

"The co-op, when formed has more potential than might be believed," Meier continued, "at the present time a student co-op at the University of Michigan is working with a $1.24 million loan made available to them by the U. S. Housing Agency. This could be a direction for our co-op to move in. The state has even passed a bill which requires 1.5% of any towns property to be given over to low income housing. These developments make the time ripe."

Meier concluded by stating anyone interested in the Co-op should get in touch with him for further information, at 58 Shumway St. in Amherst.

A shuttle bus will provide students with transportation to and from the University bookstore in the physical plant building September 10, 11, 12, 15 and 16.

The bus service will operate as a shuttle run from the physical plant to the Quad, Orchard Hill, Baker, the Central Area and Southwest. The service will operate from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m. each day.

Senate GOP Leader Dirksen Dies of Heart Attack

WASHINGTON (AP) - Senate minority leader Everett M. Kirtsen died last night in Walter Reed Army Hospital, two hours after suffering a cardiac and respiratory arrest. The Illinois Senator had been reported to be doing well after undergoing an operation for lung cancer a week ago.

The announcement by hospital officials said that attempts at resuscitation after the arrest proved unsuccessful.

Through his skillful leadership of a Republican minority that sometimes composed less than one-third of the 100-seat senate, Dirksen became one of the most powerful men in Congress.

When Democratic presidents John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson were in power, they went out of their way to seek Dirksen's support for their programs. He was widely credited with having played a decisive role in Senate passage of the limited nuclear test ban treaty of 1963 and the far-reaching civil rights act of 1964.

And when Republican Richard M. Nixon became President in 1969, he found his Senate leader, at times, more of an obstacle to his will than Johnson and Kennedy had - even more, sometimes, than Democratic leader Mike Mansfield.

It was Dirksen's championing of opposition from within the American Medical Association, for example, that forced Nixon to overrule his friend, Robert Finch, who wanted to appoint Dr. John Knowles an Assistant Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare.

And within days of Dirksen's attack on Clifford Alexander, Chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission, the White House announced Alexander would no longer be Chairman. He later resigned from the Commission entirely.

The wild and wavy yellow-gray hair that cascaded over his brow made Dirksen one of the most readily recognized public figure. And he spoke, as a newsman once wrote, "As though his tonsils were marinated in honey." Critics sometimes referred to him as "The Wizard of Ooze."

In recent years, Dirksen was frequently hospitalized for short periods because of stomach and intestinal disturbances which, he said, were due to tension. He also suffered from a bleeding ulcer, a pinched nerve in his back, and emphysema, a lung ailment. He was a heavy cigarette smoker.

Dirksen served in the House from 1932 to 1948 and had been a Senator since 1950. He became Senate GOP leader in 1959.

He is survived by his widow, the former Louella Carver, whom he married in 1927, and by their only child, Danice Joy - Mrs. Howard Baker, Junior.

Dirksen plunged into the national political spotlight in 1950 when he unseated Senator Scott Lucas - at the time Senate Democratic leader - by more than 300,000 votes.

Two years earlier, Dirksen had retired from the House of Representatives because of badly failing eyesight, a condition that improved in his two years of political retirement, spent practicing law in his native Pekin, Illinois.

In 1952, Dirksen was one of the leading supporters of the Presidential candidacy of Senator Robert Taft of Ohio. Taking the rostrum at a particularly tense point in the maneuvering between the Taft forces and those of General Dwight Eisenhower, Dirksen shook his finger at New York Governor Thomas Dewey, leading Eisenhower's campaign, and bellowed:

"We followed you before and you took us down the path to defeat."

Later, Dirksen made the nominating speech for Taft. But after Eisenhower was nominated, Dirksen became one of his closest advisers, both in the campaign and afterwards from his seat in the Senate.

WMUA On Air

WMUA, the University's undergraduate radio station, will begin broadcasting today on 91.1 FM, according to Dick Stadlen, station manager.

During the next two weeks, much of WMUA's programming will originate live from the Power Plant, where textbooks are being sold.

Student Trustee

The same procedure would occur for the state colleges.

There are currently 23 voting members on the UMass Board of Trustees.

At least four other institutions have just put students on their board of trustees, but they were appointed to fill regular vacancies and the student seats are not guaranteed by statute. The four include the University of Maine, Princeton, City University of New York, and Coker College, a girl's school in South Carolina.

Gov. Sargent was not the first state official to file such a bill. Earlier in the legislative year, Rep. George Rogers, (D - New Bedford), House chairman of the Education Committee, filed legislation simply to have students on the boards of trustees.

Ambassador Elbrick Freed by Kidnappers

RIO DE JANEIRO (AP) - In a statement issued by the U. S. Embassy in Brazil, Ambassador C. Burke Elbrick said: "To coin the understatement of the year, I'm glad to be back."

Elbrick was released last night by kidnapers who held him for more than 78 hours, awaiting the release in Mexico of 15 political prisoners. The prisoners were Elbrick's ransom.

The embassy statement quoted the Ambassador as saying he was glad the kidnapers "lived up to their word" and let him go.

The embassy said Elbrick received a confidential telephone call from President Nixon shortly after his release by the terrorists.

Embassy press officer Ernest Weiner said "The Ambassador was hit over the head with a pistol as he was being transferred from one to car to another during the kidnaping. Weiner said, however, that Elbrick appeared in good physical condition.

The Ambassador had a small injury on the right side of his forehead, and the skin was tinted red with a disinfectant.

Elbrick arrived at his heavily-guarded residence seven hours after the prisoners were delivered by a Brizilian Air Force plane to Mexico City. The Ambassador appeared in a taxi, wearing a coat and tie. He was immediately escorted inside for a reunion with his wife, Elvira.

Police held back a crowd of about 800 people who surged forward as Elbrick arrived.

Firefighters had a hard time reaching the engine room due to smoke and fumes. Police and city hospital ambulances were rushed to the scene. The Challenge For All

The class of 1973 finds itself in a relatively unique position as far as the American university goes. It is the first class in recent history which comes to the university already exposed to the contemporary phenomenon of student activism. In high schools throughout the state and the nation just within the past year, students became concerned and then active. In previous years, such events were reserved until the college years. Now these students, concerned and active, have arrived at the university.

The role of this, and any university is indeed complex. The most important function of the university in today's society is to help guide its students towards acquiring the ability of thinking creatively. Whether the field be art, English, zoology, engineering or business, the aim of the next four years is to learn how to think, and then question.

There are many ways this ability can be acquired; whether in the classroom, the newspaper office, or on the athletic field. However, it is impossible to say that any one way is the best way. It is up to each freshman to find the way which best suits him.

As one editorial writer wrote recently: "The challenge (confronting freshmen) is to first find themselves, then to find others, and finally, and probably most difficult, to find their place with them."

If you accomplish this within the next four years, you will have taken the giant step towards actual self-realization.

The university is a site and source of ideas, of their evaluation, and their application. Listen to all the ideas, whether you consider them radical or reactionary, and then reflect rationally upon them. In the coming years many emotional appeals will be made on this campus. Don't blindly accept them, but then again, don't blindly reject them.

One of the strongest forces existing in American society today is that of conformity; conformity not only towards existing standards but also towards possible future radical changes. This is dangerous, not only for the individual student but also for society.

In order to succeed at the University, it takes initiative and patience. Don't ever be afraid of the size of this institution. In the coming days you will certainly learn about the many problems resulting from administrative bureaucracy and red tape (ie. registration, triples, meat tickets). They can all be overcome with some initiative and much patience. In the end it will be worth the trouble.

The University of Massachusetts is indeed a large, cumbersome institution. However, in terms of the numerous opportunities available to every student who attends UMass, its tremendous size is only an advantage. It is not an exaggeration to say there is something here for everyone. Opportunities are abundant. The student who doesn't take advantage of them must take much of the blame himself.

Finally, take advantage of the faculty and administration. Most faculty members and administrators are here to help students. There are a few who are more concerned with their own self-interest. However, you can usually get around them by going one step higher. Whether your problem be academic, social, or health, advice can be found with a little initiative on your part.

Welcome to the University of Massachusetts and good luck with the many challenges it brings.

The 1969 INDEX

The 1969 MASSACHUSETTS INDEX is now available.

The Index staff has once again taken a year of happiness and tragedy, tranquility and confrontation, and placed it at our fingertips.

For the first time in several years, the yearbook is controversial. But the book had to be so if it was going to actually tell-it-like-it-was. The entire campus community owes a deep gratitude to Lowell H. Fitch, editor of the 1969 INDEX.

However, the new Index editor, Alan Marcus, has warned that the quality of the 1970 yearbook will be diminished due to severe cuts in its current operating budget. The Student Senate should restore the funds as soon as possible so as to guarantee a great 1970 INDEX.

Soldier Says Let Dow Come to Campus

To the Editor:

I read quite a bit about the demonstrations put on against the use of napalm in Vietnam.

The protestors on campus don't seem to realize that napalm saves American lives, over here, every day.

The picture I enclosed saved my life along with my buddies lives. There are two companies of N.V.A. soldiers in the treeline, about 1,000 meters away from us. Jets came in with canisters of napalm and cleared out the area for us, destroying booby traps and bunkers.

In my opinion, the representatives from Dow Chemical Company, should be allowed on campuses throughout the United States without blockades.

A lot of these students don't realize what is happening in Vietnam. The only response I have is, I hope they could be here and experience the effects of napalm during a heavy conflict. They would have a different attitude, I'm sure.

I'll tell you about myself now. My name is Ken Staback; I live in Palmer, Massachusetts. I am 21 years old. I attended Springfield College, and finished out my freshman year. When I get back to the world, I am definitely going back and graduating.

Then I will be proud and know that I did something for my country.

Sir, I wish this letter could be read by some of the students at the U of M.

Thank you, Sirs.

Foreign Student Comments on Kennedy Incident

(Ed. note: The following letter was written by a foreign UMass graduate student. The spelling and grammar mistakes are minor, while the message is important.)

To the Editor:

I was very much disappointed after reading Senator Kennedy's controversial accident in Cape Cod in many leading news papers and magazines. I am greatly discouraged in noting the fact that newsmen and reporters have gone out of the way to ask highly immoral and baseless questions in order to demoralize the Ted. Unrealistic, onesided and poor attitude of these people is highly deplorable. Being a foreigner I shall try to put my independent and impartial views on the whole issue and hope you will publish this letter in your newspaper.

From the letters of many people published in news papers and magzines it is very obvious that people and reporters have attempted to take undue advantage of the Senator's realistic silence. Senator Kennedy is equally well known here as well as abroad and what so ever has happened to him can happen to any human-being. Under the abnormal situations especially in fatal accidents any one could be shocked and upset. Knowing the fact that Senator Kennedy is one of the human beings on this earth why people are unnecessarily trying to defame and demoralize him with selfish and personal motives. Recent inquest planned by Mr. Dinis is a lively example.

Everyone has got two phases of life - one EXTERNAL and the other INTERNAL and same applies to Senator Kennedy. In his external life, one should treat Kennedy as a great leader and most active senator fighting for the cause of human-being on the political platform of USA and it is this phase of life which took him to international fame. In his internal life whatever TEDDY has been or is, in my opinion is nobody's business. In this world no one is perfect and ideal. I can't believe that people's intentions could be so mean and meagre that they have tried to trace his past history which has got no concern with the accident at all. Few people have gone to the extent of calling him a CHEATER who has cheated second time. DO these people think that by digging the past they can defame him and prevent him from great leadership. Never, they are perhaps mistaken and mislead. No one on the earth is faultless and sinless and I sincerely urge these people to forget Teddy's internal and personal matters and to concentrate more on his achievements.

An Opening at the University

WASHINGTON--My friend Rory has a boy 18 years old, who was turned down for admission by four colleges. On his fifth try he received a letter from a university asking him if he would come for an interview.

The man behind the desk asked, "How do you like the school?"

"Do you see any way we could improve it?"

"Well, I only got here an hour ago, but I'm sure there are many ways that the school could be improved."

"I like that," the man said. "How do you get along with students?"

"Just fine, I guess. I mean, I've always gotten along with them well."

"No generation gap trouble then?"

"None that I know of."

"Do you like meeting people?"

"I suppose so. I'm an extrovert at heart."

"Do you like to entertain?"

"No, sir. I don't like to entertain at all. I keep my nose to the grindstone."

For the first time the man behind the desk seemed disappointed. "That's too bad."

Rory's son reacted immediately. "Of course, if you want me to entertain, I'd be glad to. Heck, I used to give parties at home all the time."

"Are you any good at raising money?"

"I don't think so. I mean, I can always get a sawbuck off my old man."

"I was talking about big money," the man said.

"I can get up the tuition, if that's what you mean."

"I mean big, big money."

"Hey, what the heck kind of school is this?"

"Well," said the man behind the desk. "I believe I'd better level with you. We don't have an opening for our freshman class."

"Then what did you waste my time for?" Rory's son asked angrily as he got up.

"But we do have an opening in the school."

"As what?"

"President of the university."

"You want me to be president of the university?"

"Why not? It's a way of getting into the school. As acting president you would get first preference from the admissions office once there was an opening in the freshman class."

"But why me?" Rory's son asked.

"We've been trying for a year to fill the job. No one will take it. Then one of the board of trustees suggested we take a freshman applicant for the university and offer him the position. The incentive would be that if he agreed to act as president, he would eventually be admitted as a student."

"I don't want to be a president," Rory's son said. "I may want to go to college, but I don't want to go that badly."

The man behind the desk was desperate. "It pays $50,000 a year. You get a house and servants and a chauffeured car."

"Forget it," Rory's son said.

"You don't have to be in at any time and you get the best seats at the football game."

"Look, if I wanted to do it, my mother and father wouldn't let me. They want me to come back from college in one piece."

"I'm sorry you feel that way, son. From your high school record, I thought you would make a very good president."

"I may not be smart enought to get into this place as a student, but I assure you I'm not stupid enough to take a job as head of a university."

Rory's son got up and walked out. Another student walked in. As the door slowly closed, Rory's son heard the man ask the student, "How do you like the school?"

Student-Teacher Battle Next?

BERKELEY, Calif. - The campus rebellion up to now has largely pitted students against university administrations, with faculty members either on the sidelines, acting as mediators or siding at least passively with the students. Some observers feel that professors tend to vote for peace in order to get back to their own academic pursuits, but often also because they, not unlike the students, see the administration as the hostile "system."

But in the view of many experts, the disaffected students have been misreading the realities of academic power. While the administration is the visible establishment, the faculty determines whether academic reformes will be carried out, what course are to be offered, whether the grading and examination system is to be changed, how many requred course are to remain on the scholarly menu. Even in the burning issue of defense research, willingness of individual faculty members to accept contracts is the heart of the matter.

Last week, the Center for Research and Development in Higher Education at the University of California at Berkeley issued a report that warned: "Where the confrontations of the past have pitted students against administrators over issues of all university significance (e.g., support of the war, racism and student rules), now STUDENT ACTIVISTS ARE INCREASINGLY CONFRONTING THE FACULTY OVER ACADEMIC ISSUES."

Professional Dichotomy

This conclusion was drawn from a detailed sampling of faculty attitudes and characteristics. Questionnaires were sent to more than 1,500 professors at six institutions, large medium-sized and small, public and private, located around the nation.

The crux of the findings is in faculty attitudes toward student power in matters of social regulations as against those of academic policy. Most professors appeared happy to let students run their own lives outside the classroom, but were extremely reluctant to give them extensive powers over curriculum matters.

Indeed, the study found that from the faculty point of view, the concept of the university's role in loco parentis is " a dead issue." Two-thirds of the respondents would give the students extensive powers over dormitory regulations, discipline, student government, dress regulations, curfews in women's dormitories, and the use of alcohol and even marijuana. Sixty-five per cent of those who replied thought the college should not prohibit an unmarried student couple from sharing an apartment.

But the response to student participation in setting academic policies appears, understandably, to be quite another matter. At the two extremes, 4 per cent said students should play no role in formulating academic policies and 9 per cent were willing to grant students an equal voice with the faculty. But only slightly more than one-third would agree to giving students any formal role such as voting power.

The Berkeley Study underscores that student involvement in academic affairs challenges professors in their areas of competence and runs head-on into those powers and privileges which the faculties have fought hard to attain and which, historically, they have defended against intrusions by administrators, trustees and state governments. They therefore may have been quite pleased to side with the students' battle against the same establishment forces, but letting the students interfere with faculty power is quite another matter. Is it not, the faculty seems to be saying, teachers' sole responsibility to determine what can and should be taught?

Faculty bureaucracies are, like all established systems, essentially conservative. Requirements, once spun into the curriculum, are not easily removed, even when they are obsolete.

Those student activists who are interested in educational reforms rather than mere political power plays now are discovering that their academic demands are more of a threat to the faculty than to the administration. The administrators are paid for full-time service to, and on, the campus; but many faculty members wouldfind such an interpretation of their contract an intolerable limitation of their freedom.

On the Extremes

But while the findings of the Berkeley attitude study underscore the likelihood of growing student - faculty confrontations in general, another important conclusion can be drawn from it. The two extreme minorities among the professors-the 4 per cent who would give the students no voice and the 9 per cent who would give them complete equality-were found to share one characteristic; they were equally commited to teaching. They differed only as to teaching's goal. The "no voice" group sees its task as the transmission of knowledge for successful scholarship and careers; the "equal voice" group stresses the student's search for self-knowledge and personal identity. Undoubtedly, this division of goals exists among students as well, but the radicals sneer at career orientation.

The danger therefore is that the extreme and uncompromising minorities among the faculties will also be activists in the coming battle - the ones fighting against any student voice and the others for total abdication to student demands. If - as has been the case in many past campus crises - the majority in the middle is unwilling to face up to the real reform issues and hopes instead to buy temporary peace and personal detachment, then the guerrilla warfare will become intensified and campus reform will become more illusive than ever.

By MARK SILVERMAN

A majority of college students are deeply committed to making the world a better place in which to live, and the best way for the federal government to end campus disorders, a product of this committment, lies not in passing repressive legislation, but in correcting the ills of society.

These are the findings of a five-man Congressional study team on campus disorders, which filed a report with Congress last month.

Led by Congressmen Donald W. Reigle (R-Mich) and Paul L. Pettis (R-Calif), the Commission states that most students on most campuses can be listed in four major groups: extremists, radicals, moderates, and the uninvolved.

Extremists, the Commission says, make up less than one percent of the average campus population and are, the report states, dedicated to revolution.

Radicals, according to the commission report, comprise a much larger segment of the campus population, about 15%, and are motivated to change and improve the "American system", rather than to tear it down, as the extremists are. Radicals are in favor of using various means of disobedience - sit-ins and building takeovers - to illustrate their committment.

Radicals feel, the study reports, that it is necessary to work outside of the existing system because of the corruption within the system.

Campus moderates, the study states, share most of the same feelings as radicals. They seek a similar society, but generally frown upon many of the radical tactics. However, the report goes on to say, they often "teeter on a razor's edge and radicalize on certain issues as they become frustrated by the government's lack of response to their grievances."

Together, radicals and moderates comprise a majority of today's campus population.

The remainder of the students, the reports explains, are uninvolved with anything beyond their personal success, and are interested only with obtaining career training. This group, which has been dwindling rapidly in the last three years, is disliked by the other three groups, the Commission reports.

The report goes on to outline the basic frustrations which plague college students, and which turn moderates into radicals when government agencies ignore student pleas for action.

The major frustrations are headed by Vietnam, the war which most college students, the report says, feel to "be illogical, morally wrong, and generally abhorrent." Students see elements of society which they dislike - the military and big business - as partially responsible for the war, the commission explains.

Students are also concerned with national priorities. The reports explain, "Students want to know why going to the moon is more important than ending poverty, and why military spending is more important than educational spending."

The American legal system, "which makes no distinction between a war-resister and a felon is a constant irritation to many students.

The Commission rdports that there is one great, overriding concern which most all students hold. "This is a preoccupation with finding a truly human set of values."

"Students have been 'turned off' by our society and its apparent lack of morality, and they seek to find a better way of life for themselves."

Students see their schools as microcosims of society, the report says, and it is natural for them to try to change their campuses as they wish to change the country.

"The way to end campus violence," Rep. Reigle explains, "is to provide students with active government programs which are responsive to their just grievances."

He goes on to say, "We must give pressing thought to our order of priorities. . .we must give serious consideration to student demands for draft reform, tax reform, congressional reform, racism, and poverty."

Reigle admits that, before he undertook this investigation, "I didn't really appreciate the deep feeling and the wide-spread sentiment among the students, and how many students really were committed to seeking a better world."

"The worst thing Congress can do," the Michigan law-maker concludes, "is to pass repressive legislation. . .this will only serve to prove to students that we are their enemies. . .and we must show them that we can and will work together."

Prior to serving on this commission, Riegle voted for one such repressive bill, one which would deprive student demonstrators of federal aid.

SIGN OF THE TIMES - Senior Robert S. McDonnell posted this sign in front of Whitmore the day after John W. Lederle resigned as President last summer. McDonnell was motivated by his disgust for "the State's second class treatment of a first class institution. The others referred to in the sign are Richard Millard, Chancellor of Higher Education, Oswald Tippo, UMass Provost, Leo Redfern, Dean of Administration, and Mark Noffsinger, Associate Dean of Students. Donahue Wants Dem. Conv. At UMass Next Summer

One of the most ideal opportunities to meet a favorite candidate may develop here at the university, if the Massachusetts Democratic State decides the democrats will come to Amerst for their 1970 convention.

Senate Pres. Maurice A. Donahue suggested recently that the quadrennial party conclave be held next June on the UMass campus.

If adopted by the Democratic State Committee, this would be the first time a state political convention has ever been held at the university, removed from the big-city atmosphere of Boston, Springfield and Worcester.

Donahue, a Democratic candidate for governor urged in a letter to Gloucester Rep. David Harrison, that "thoughtful consideration" be given to the university as "full exploration would reveal adequate facilities for all the requirements of our State convention."

Donahue went on to suggest several advantages involved in the UMass proposal.

Since regular classes have terminated by convention time, Donahue said several large facilities would be available for plenary sessions of the convention and could be readily adaptable for the delegates, guests, and media.

Also considered advantageous was the lower costs that would be involved in using dormitories and cafeterias on the campus.

Further, the Senate Democratic leader said the selection of the UMass campus would, "symbolize the close ties of the Democratic Party and the intellectual community, particularly the young people of our state."

This, he continued, would prove a "striking new image for a recognized necessity of a strong alliance between the Democratic Party, the academic community, and young people, as essential elements in any effective political coalition."

Periodically in the past, Democratic delegates have sought to escape from Boston's political influences. Until Donahue's suggestion, there appeared no other place to go.

It is believed that very positive "behind the scenes" action is being taken at the present time to make this proposal a reality in June.

Round Robbins Begin This Week

Sorority Rush started Sunday with a "Round Robins" tour of UMass sororities.

Upperclassmen as well as freshmen are urged by Greeks to participate and investigate this unique way of campus life. Registration for Rush will be held in the Student Union lobby Monday and Tuesday of this week. For later registration, Debby Barlow, Panhellenic Rush Chairman, can be contacted at 1113 Coolidge Tower or by phone at 546-8093.

Various guest speakers and programs will be presented by the different houses at cultural parties on Sept. 18. This is just one of the many open parties offered during Rush, all of which have varied themes.

One of the most important concerns during Rush will be to help the freshmen adjust to the academic environment.

Hanke Named to First History Dept. Chair

Latin American expert Lewis Hanke has been named the first Hering Professor of History at the University of Massachusetts, the first such chair in the UMass history department.

The chair honors Clarence H. Hering, who died in 1960 after a 37-year career as a teacher, scholar and housemaster at Harvard University. Hering was one of the first Americans to devote himself to Latin American studies and published several books, on both the colonial history of Latin America and the modern relationship between the United States and Latin American nations.

Prof. Hanke's international reputation can be measured in part by the number of honorary degrees he has received from Spanish and Latin American universities. He has lectured at South and Central American schools, holds decorations from several South American governments, and in 1965 was made an honorary citizen of Potosi, Bolivia.

In 1959 the Pan American Institute of Geography and History, meeting in Ecudor, approved a "homage to Prof. Hanke for his historical work, 'The Spanish Struggle for Justice in the Conquest of America.' "

Prof. Hanke has served as special assistant to the U. S. Undersecretary of State for Latin American Affairs, and chairman of the Library of Congress Latin American History Department.

The author of more than 80 articles and books on Latin America and the current editor of the Hispanic-American Historical Review, Dr. Hanke received his

Appley Named Graduate Dean Succeeds Moore and Gentile

Dr. Mortimer H. Appley, head of the University of Massachusetts psychology department, has been named dean of the Graduate School.

Dr. Appley succeeds Dr. Edward C. Moore, who resigned a year ago to become vice-president for graduate studies and research at the State University of New York at Binghamton. Dr. Arthur G. Gentile, associate dean of the Graduate School, has been acting dean during the past year.

Over the past 20 years Dr. Appley has accumulated a distinguished record in teaching, research, administration and professional service. He is widely known as co-author of "Motivation: Theory and Research," generally regarded as the outstanding advanced textbook in the field of motivation, and as co-editor of a book on psychological stress. "Psychology in Canada," his most recent work, was published simultaneously in French and in English.

In the last 10 years the Graduate School has grown from 975 to more than 3,000 students, sponsored research has increased from $259,000 to over $7 million a year, the number of master's degree programs has grown from 22 to 55, and the number of doctorates from 12 to 44.

Now under construction at the Amherst campus is an $18 million Graduate School facility, the Graduate Research Center. The building includes a 17-story chemistry laboratory tower, a computer science wing and a physical sciences library. The building is scheduled from completion during the 1970-71 academic year.

Prior to his appointment at U-Mass in 1967, Dr. Appley was the Dean of the Faculty of Graduate Studeis at York University, Toronto, Canada, and acting director of the Institute for Behavioural Research. Before that he was professor and chairman of the department of psychology at York for four years. From 1960 - 1962, he was the chairman of the psychology department at Southern Illinois University.

Dr. Appley received his bachelor's degree from City College of New York, his M.A. from the University of Denver, and his Ph. D. from the University of Michigan.

Currently he is chairman of the Education and Training Board of the American Psychological Association. He is a Fellow of the American Psychological Association, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and the International Council of Psychologists. He is an editorial consultant for the "Psychological Review," "Physiology and Behavior," and the "Canadian Journal of Psychology."

'A Damn Good Team'

Competing the College World Series was termed by UMass baseball coach, "something we have always pointed for." It was also the high point of success for a UMass athletic program, that has known virtually nothing but success.

After an initial win, the Redmen were eliminated from the tourney with two straight losses. They finished fifth in the tourney. Maybe this sounds even better when it is realized that the three teams below the Redmen were UCLA, possibly the most powerful athletic school in the country, Mississippi, a perennial collegiate powerhouse, and Southern Illinois, who was runnerup in the 1968 tourney and ranked number one in the country prior to the tourney.

UMass was competing against schools such as these, and schools such as Texas, Arizona State, who played approximately 80 games during its season and numbers among its graduates Reggie Jackson and Sal Bando.

But, and this was maybe the most pleasurable and important thing about the whole tourney, UMass was the equal of any team in that tourney. Equal of schools that play baseball year around, that load their rosters with freshman, that are virtually all scholarship athletes.

UMass proved something to many people during their stay in Omaha. They proved that schools from the East can compete with schools from the rest of the country. They also proved that a team of players playing solely for the sake of playing, a team that does not go to school merely to play baseball, can play evenly with virtual professionals.

Or maybe put into more simple English by a UCLA player, "We never heard of you guys when we came out here, but you have one damn good ballclub."

How The Redmen Got to Omaha

District One Regional Playoffs

UMass earned the right to compete in the College World Series by winning the District One playoffs held at UMass May 30-June 1. The Redmen were automatic selections for the playoffs when they won the Yankee Conference title with a 9-1 conference record. Others selected for the district playoffs were Dartmouth and Boston University, two teams UMass had previously defeated in the regular season.

After B.U. had outlasted Dartmouth, 13-10 in the first game of a May 30 double header, and the opener of the double-elimination tourney, UMass faced the Indians in the nightcap. Playing before a large Varsity Field crowd, UMass ace righthander John Kitchen, flirted with no hit fame while enroute to pitching a three-hit, 5-2 UMass victory.

The Redmen meanwhile actually put the game away in the first inning. The first two hitters, first baseman Ellerbrook and shortstop Joe DiSarcina both singled. Then, left fielder Bob Hansen unloaded a three-run home run over the right center field fence.

UMass added single tallies in the second on Kitchen's single, an Ellerbrook sacrifice and Hansen's line drive single, and in the sixth on two passed balls and an error packed around a Kitchen single and a walk to third baseman Steve Stanford.

UMass began what amounted to a best two out of three tourney with B. U. Saturday May 31, by winning a comeback 8-6 victory. Don Anderson, the Redmen tied the game with three of their own in the fourth. After two singles and a walk loaded the bases, Stanford drove in one run with a single, pinch hitter Paul Sulzicki another with a sacrifice fly and DiSarcina, the third, with a bases loaded walk.

B.U. got a go ahead run in the fifth, without a hit. Three Redman errors handed the Terriers a gift run. UMass went back on top in the seventh inning, with two tallies one coming in on some fine baserunning by DiSarcina and another on a timely Dick Pepin double. Right fielder Pepin, however, sprained his ankle and was forced to leave the game. The injury sidelined the hard hitting senior for the rest of the season.

The Terriers tied the game in the bottom of the seventh but UMass went ahead to stay in the eighth inning on a DiSarcina sacrifice and a Hansen single that produced three runs. B.U. picked up one tally in the ninth frame but Bernardo retired the Terriers to pick up an important win.

Chinappi got his second triple and third hit of the game to start things off with one out. Ring followed with a run-scoring single.

Center fielder Mitch Salnick then scored Ring with a triple. Second baseman Tom Semino followed with a sacrifice fly for UMass' sixth and final run.

Colabello put the icing on the cake, when he struck out the side in the top of the ninth.

Behind a gritty route going five hitter by sophomore left hander Lou Colabello, UMass earned its way to the College World Series in Omaha by eliminating B. U. 6-1 Sunday, June 1 and won the Destrict One baseball title.

Colabello allowed one run and two hits in the first inning and gave up two more hits in the second. He however, blanked the Terriers on one hit the rest of the game as he struck out nine men.

Hansen personally wiped out that early one run deficit in the bottom of the first inning, when after Ellerbrook walked, he lashed another roundtripper, his second of the playoffs and sixth of the season. The Redmen added a third run in the inning when catcher Tony Chinappi tripled and Steve Ring, playing in place of the injured Pepin, rescued him with a sacrifice fly.

Kitchen Signs With Cardinals
DiSarcina, Hansen Shun Offers

John Kitchen, who played so big a part in the success outlined on these pages, and who was eligible for another collegiate season, signed a contract this past summer with St. Louis Cardinals. Kitchen received a reported $10,000 bonus from the National League team.

The junior Chicopee native, who was eligible for the professional draft, since he was over 21 years of age, was signed while competing in the Cape Cod League. The night he was signed, Kitchen pitched a 13 inning shutout for his Harwich team.

The big righthander notched an 8-1 record this past season. Though drafted late in the selection process by the Cards, Kitchen's performances against Dartmouth in the District One playoffs and his shutout win in the College World Series convinced the St. Louis organization of his professional potential.

Joe DiSarcina, who was a high draft choice of the San Diego Padres, apparently will not sign with the new expansion team, but return to school this fall to complete his degree requirements and await to be re-drafted in the January player selections. The classy shortstop was displeased with the Padre offers.

Bob Hansen, who was drafted by the Seattle Pilots, will also return to school. Hansen, a junior with another year of eligibility, was dissatisfied with Pilot contract negotiations and will complete his college career at UMass.

Redmen are Entertained Royally by Genial Omahans

The 1969 College World Series was the 23rd annual NCAA baseball tourney. It was held in Omaha for the 20th consecutive year. The Championship was moved to Omaha in 1950 and has become a permanent fixute.

It might be called a love affair between the city and college baseball. Omaha mobilizes all its available hospitality to make the stay of the approximately 160 college baseball players a pleasurable one.

Each team is sponsored by a local civic group of area business men. These groups are virtual mother hens to the players, driving them to and from the stadium, arranging activities during off days, and any other service they could render.

The Cosmopolitan Club squired the Redmen about Omaha and under the direction of President Dyke Newcomber did their job perfectly.

UMass arrived in Omaha Thursday June 12 and that night the Cosmopolitan Club treated the entire party to dinner at a local restaurant.

The next day the tourney officially opened at a luncheon given by the NCAA, which featured as its guest speaker, former New York Yankee immortal Lefty Gomez. Later in the day the club members drove the UMass team to a local field for a practice.

On Sunday, an off day for all teams, the Cosmopolitan Clubtook the Redman contingent on a visit to nearby Boy's Town. Later in the day, one of the club members had the entire group, which numbered around 40 to his home for a cookout.

Tuesday afternoon the group was given a luncheon by the club prior to the Arizone State game. Wednesday as the Redmen awaited their departure following the elimination, a large group were taken to nearby Ak-Sar-Ben race track.

Baseball was of course the main order of business for the team in Omaha. But aside from the glorious win over Southern Illinois, possibly the most memorable thing about the trip for the players was the friendly and outgoing friends they made in a city that has taken college baseball to heart.

After Big Win Over So. Ill., Redmen Are Eliminated

Kitchen Fires Shutout NYU, ASU, Silence Bats

UMass began the College World Series play with a big gap to fill in right field. Dick Pepin who had played there all season, and had led the country in doubles was left home due to an ankle injury, suffered in the District One playoffs. His replacement, hard hitting Steve Ring, did not make the trip due to an academic ineligibility.

Thus UMass coach Dick Bergquist was forced to look for a third outfielder. Along with his assistant coach Arlan Barber, he decided to insert regular third baseman Steve Stanford in the right field spot. Stanford had had some outfield experience.

As luck would have it, Stanford injured his arm in a early game in the tourney, and UMass then had to use converted Paul Sulzicki in the outfield. Both Sulzicki and Stanford did the job they were called on to do but the experience of Pepin and Ring was solely missed.

* * * * *

On June 14, UMass made its debut in the 1969 College World Series, and came out with possibly its greatest victory. The Redmen, led by brilliant John Kitchen, defeated top-ranked, and highly favored Southern Illinois, 2-0.

Southern Illinois, who entered tourney play with a 36-7 record, and were loaded with blue chip pro prospects. They were also a team that had a flair for the unusual, what with bat girls and bermuda shorts for uniforms. Unfortunately for the Salukis, their hitters were no better facing Kitchen than the bat girls.

The big UMass right hander had a no-hitter until one out in the seventh inning. He only faced 20 batters during the time. Kitchen went to three ball counts on only three batters and struck out all three as he did not walk a single man. He fanned 11 So. Illinois batters, in what was possibly the finest pitched game of the entire tourney.

Second baseman Tom Semino, meanwhile, took care of the Redman offense, as he doubled in Bob Hansen, who had singled, in the fourth inning for the first run, and singled in Hansen in the eighth, after the left fielder had reached on his second safety. Catcher Tony Chinappi, also had two hits for the Redmen.

The win put the underdog Bay Staters into second round play against New York University June 16. The Violets reached the round by upsetting Mississippi, 8-3.

* * * * *

N.Y.U., unleashed a 12 hit barrage and stifled UMass bats in clutch situation enroute to a 9-2 victory on June 16. The win put the Violets into the third round undefeated, while sending UMass to the brink of elimination.

UMass took an early one run lead in the third inning when Ray Ellerbrook doubled and Joe DiSarcina singled him in. However, N.Y.U. came right back in the bottom of the third with four runs.

The Violets had threatened in the first inning but a fine throw from right fielder Steve Stanford caught a runner at the plate.

However, four N.Y.U. hits along with a hit batsman accounted for the runs off of starter and loser on Anderson. The big blows were two run singles by center fielder Jim Cardasis and third baseman Jeff Kalish.

The New Yorkers added a single tally in the fourth on a Fred Levine R.B.I. and this brought UMass reliever Norm Elliott who shutout the Violets for two innings.

Elliott gave way to Jack Bernardo in the seventh. The sophmore got himself in trouble with an error and wild pitch and then a bloop double that just was fair produced two runs. Left fielder John Latourette then came through with a triple and N.Y.U. had three runs.

UMass picked up one run in the fifth inning when Tony Chinappi tripled in Bob Hansen who had reached on a walk. N.Y.U. added the final run of the game in the ninth without the benefit of a hit as UMass made the third of their errors.

Tom Collins was the winning pitcher for N.Y.U. as he went the distance for his sixth win.

* * * * *

UMass was eliminated from the 1969 College World Series June 17 by Arizona State, the eventual national champions. The Sun Devils, behind the pitching of undefeated freshman Craig Swan and 18 game winner Larry Gura, edged the Redmen 4-2.

The strong Arizona pitching duo held UMass to five hits and struck out 11 batters, the most UMass men struck out all season.

Arizona St. put together one big inning, scoring four runs in the fifth. They were held well in check the rest of the time by UMass starter Lou Colabello and relievers Jack Bernardo, and Norm Elliott.

Bob Hansen put the Redmen in the lead when he crashed a one out home run in the fourth inning. It was Hansen's seventh home run of the season, and it was a tremendous shot well over the 370 mark in right center field.

However, in the fifth inning three Sun Devil triples, a double and a single produce four runs. Second baseman Larry Randle, led with a double. After two outs, shortstop Roger Deiter, lined a triple to right center. Right Fielder Ralph Dick singled and All-American left fielder John Dolinsek tripled, a blow that just fell out of reach of Redman right fielder Paul Sulzicki. Paul Ray Powell, the center fielder, then tripled for the final run.

UMass came back with one run in the seventh when after Tony Chinappi walked and Sulzicki singled him to second, third baseman Tim Berringer singled in Chinappi with the second UMass run. Gura however then shut the door on the Redmen and sent Arizona St. into the fourth round and on their way to the title.

MEET THE SWINGER - UMass third baseman-right fielder Steve Stanford lashes at a Southern Illinois pitch during first round action.

CONGRATS ALL AROUND - Bob Hansen gets a welcome from Lou Colabello, after scoring the first UMass run in College World Series play. Hansen had been driven in on a Tom Semino double.

Small Budget Forces University Belt-tightening

By JOHN STAVROS
Senior Reporter

The great budget battle is just about over for another year at UMass, as the University, for the fifth year in a row, has emerged on the short end in its struggle with Beacon Hill over operating expenses.

Late in June the University's original budget request of $49 million was cut drastically by the House and the Governor while President Lederle stated, "severe belt tightening" will be necessary to operate the University under the $38 million appropriated. The Governor had cut the original request by about $10 million and the legislature shaved an additional $663,700.

Commenting on the cuts at a meeting of the University Trustees, Provost Oswald Tippo told the trustees the University will only be able to spend $16 per student for supplies, library books and services - $18 less than last year. Provost Tippo also said that unless the requested funds are restored, the University may have to freeze filling new faculty positions and all other vacant positions, resulting in the cancellation of dozens of class sections and some courses this fall.

Other alternatives outlined by Provost Tippo were elimination of the 1970 summer school, cutting down many student dormitory counselors and heads of residences, reducing the use of part-time and student help, and permitting no increase in the 1970 student enrollment.

Further details were presented by David A. Gugin, Assistant Dean of Administration and the man who speaks for the University on Beacon Hill.

Gugin stated that although the budget in its present state is an increase of 11.2% over last year's allowance, several programs important to the development of the University will be cancelled.

Among the programs that would be cancelled the Dean mentioned six that he called "more glamorous":

1) $431,000 for education in computer science through the Computer Research Center
2) $800,000 for "vitally needed" library books on the Amherst Campus.
3) $100,000 needed for the education of disadvantaged students.
4) A grave shortage in research and instructional equipment.
5) No development of an educational T.V. project.
6) $4,200,000 for salaries in the 01, 02, and 03 fund areas.

According to Gugin this also puts the University in a very difficult position regarding the future of quality education in Amherst. He explained that "because the University must enroll 1500 new students each year... funds must be available to supply them with the type of education the University provided in the past. . ."

He went on to say that no matter what the budget's final status was this year, the 1500 accepted students will be able to attend the University. "However," he stated, "if the Governor insists on making cuts like this, the future outlook is not good."

In an attempt to remedy the situation a supplemental budget of uation a supplemental budget request of $10 million was filed and acted upon in August. Out of the requested $10 million the State Legislature OK'd $485,000, 5% of the supplemental request. Action is now being taken on possible cutbacks of programs mentioned.

In other related action the so-called "punitive" bills operating with a very liberal definition of campus demonstrators and aiming fines and imprisonment for demonstrations were sidetracked by House Speaker David Bartley for the next legislative session.

Bills were passed however outlawing guns on State Campuses without authorization and outlawing the use of Molotov Cocktails by any state resident. Until this last legislative session there were no laws directly concerning the use of the Molotov Cocktails.

School of Ed. Offers Special Media Course

The School of Education has a new program scheduled to begin with the fall semester to prepare professional media personnel to work in schools for hearing handicapped children. This program is NOT designed for students who plan to teach.

The U. S. Office of Education, Bureau of Education for the Handicapped will provide traineeships and graduate fellowships for fifteen students who chose to become professional media specialists in schools for the deaf. This program will be three years in duration beginning with the junior year and leading to a bachelors and a masters degree.

Stipends are provided for fifteen students for each of the three years of the program. Junior year support is $300; the student must pay his own tuition. Senior year support is $800 plus a tuition waiver and a dependency allowance of $600 per dependent.

Students who have successfully completed two years of college and show potential and interest in the areas of special education and educational media will be considered for the program. Student transcripts, letters of recommendation, personal interviews, and biographical data will be used as criteria for selection.

Interviews for interested juniors presently enrolled at the University will be conducted from 9-5 on September 9-12, 1969 in Room 2 of Thompson Hall (southwest corner downstairs). For further information contact Raymond Wyman, Director, or Joseph Panko, Coordinator, in Thompson Hall. Telephone 545-2455.

University Faculty Members Win Pay Hike From State Legislature

A section of the state employees' pay raise bill that would have eliminated merit raises for more than a thousand University of Mass. faculty members, has been deleted from the final version passed by the state legislature.

An amendment offered by Senate President Maurice Donahue of Holyoke cut out the restriction that had been placed on the pay raise bill in the House during debate in July. The bill was passed during the legislature's rush to prorogue this weekend. As it now stands, UM faculty members and teachers at other state colleges and universities will receive, as in past years, the merit raises that accompany promotions or increased responsibility.

The original amendment had been made by Rep. Edward Coury of New Bedford and said that anyone who received a merit raise after Dec. 28, 1968 was ineligible for another, and could only receive the 12 per cent or $20 raise authorized in the standards for all state employees.

Donahue's amendment survived a floor fight Saturday in the House as Rep. Oiver of Amherst and Education Committee Chairman George Rogers of New Bedord prevailed against Coury's arguments against the merit raises, 141-4.

Harriman Calls for Move To End War on T.V.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Former Ambassador Averell Harriman says the death of Ho Chi Minh (Ho Chee Meen) presents an "obligation" for a new American bid to end the Vietnam War. He made the comment in a broadcast interview (CBS "Face the Nation").

The former chief U.S. negotiator at the Paris peace talks urged President Nixon to have U.S. forces observe the three-day ceasefire proposed by the Communists. He said he is disappointed that the American forces are following the example of the South Vietnamese in rejecting the enemy offer of a stand-down.

Dean Cites New Budget As Cause of Course Cutbacks

of having lost one course; but some have lost two or more. The prospects for correcting this on course change day are bleak, it appears, unless great numbers of students do not actually show up on campus, unless students will be willing to accept a different roster of courses than they had planned on, or unless more teaching help, class and lab space, and financial resources can be found. The prospects for these last alternatives seem faint at this point.

Skillings concluded by saying that many seat vacancies do exist on campus, however; but many are in courses which relatively few students take - in courses which are generally under-subscribed in the normal run of events. Such outlets as these provide little real relief for the great majority of students.

In an effort to get back to the antecedent financial constraints which are at the heart of the scheduling difficulties, Acting Dean Seymour Shapiro, of the College of Arts and Sciences, elaborated on the academic difficulties facing many departments. The greatest proportion of the seat shortages are in the larger "service courses" offered in Arts and Sciences - courses which many students from all areas of the University take to satisfy core or distribution requirements.

Dean Shapiro began by pointing to the dire predictions which were being made last Spring during the consideration of the University's budget. These dire predictions have now materialised, he said. We are faced with the problem of providing for many more students than last year with, in some cases, fewer resources than last year. Many courses, he said, cannot be expanded for a variety of reasons: the shortage of specialised facilities or supplies or, more importantly, the shortage of teaching help. Academic quality would suffer, he suggested, if poorly-prepared faculty were plugged in to teach courses far from their specialties. This is an unacceptable alternative, at present. Faculty and teaching assistant salaries have had to be raised, the Dean said; and on the tight budget of this fiscal year, this has meant cutting back on the number of teaching assistants available, in order that the stipends of those who remain may be raised. A fixed amount of money now has to be spread in larger amounts over fewer assistants. The pressures of the draft are also being felt, the Dean said - teaching assistants are being drafted out of graduate school, and departments are unable to replace them. When you consider that one graduate assistant may handle 3 or 4 discussion sections, this causes last-minute cancellations of sections that had been planned.

The problem is not wholly with graduate assistants: the University has been unable to hire as many new faculty as it had hoped, largely because of a freeze on new positions, a freeze necessitated by budgetary restrictions and cutbacks. Without faculty, of course, courses just cannot be offered. It's a tight year all around; and the recent partial relaxing of the hiring freeze may not have come in time to permit as much hiring as necessary to fill the gaps and vacancies.

In comments amplifying Dean Shapiro's words, Director of Libraries David Clay reports that some student and part-time help has been lost in the library. This loss will be felt in poorer service, slower assistance with special requests, and so forth, said Clay.

Prospects for second semester improvement of present difficulties do not seem materially better: those basic problems of time, space and money are unlikely to have resolved themselves by that time. Some of them may become worse, rather than better. In general, the University has been faced with a very large problem caused by the simultaneity of several smaller components: physical space, scheduling times, resources and supplies, and, most importantly, teaching faculty and graduate assistants.

THIS WAS THE SCENE

REGISTRATION DAY LAST JAN. -- remember the lines then. Because of the thousands of course cancellations this semester, the lines are expected to be even longer as students try to find other courses to replace the ones which were cancelled.

Amherst College Raises' Tuition To Record High

Amherst College has announced that it will raise its fee for room, board and tuition for 1970-71 to $3600. The charge for the coming academic year will be $3460.

The cost of individualized education was the reason given for the tuition hike. Amherst has been known for its independent study projects and tutorial-like classes.

In a letter to parents of Amherst students, President Calvin H. Plimpton explained, "We realize that this decision follows an increment to be introduced this fall and we are extremely reluctant to raise our charges again. It is the Trustees' conviction, however, that students should pay a fair share of the cost of their education. Yet even with this increase, income from students meets only half the cost of operating the college."

Learn to Study ... NOW!

This fall, 1,059,000 students will enroll in college. But the number who successfully finish the year depends on how well they have learned to study, according to William B. Crafts, Dean of Students at Monmouth College, a coeducational liberal arts college in Monmouth, Ill. To be successful on the ladder of learning, says Dean Crafts, learn to study — now!

1000 Courses Available Here More at Other Local Schools

In the University's two colleges and six schools, students have the opportunity to take more than 1000 courses in 52 departments. Undergraduate majors are offered in 76 fields. At the graduate level, master's degrees are now offered in 58 fields and the doctorate in 44 fields.

The College of Arts and Sciences, largest academic unit at UMass, will enroll close to 8000 students, more than the combined enrollments of the three liberal arts colleges in the area - Amherst, Smith and Mount Holyoke. This gives students the opportunity to take a wide variety of courses from outstanding professors in their specialities. In the English department, for instance, they may want to study fiction writing under novelists Richard Kim (The Innocent) or Andres Feiler (The Travelers). They can study under poets Joseph Langland, David Clark or with Robert Tucker, Thomas C. Copeland, world authority on Edmund Burke, or with Walker Gibson, former CBS television lecturer on the writing of prose, or with writer Milton Mayer.

Along with the introduction of new fields of study, has come a strengthening in well-known programs such as the food science and technology program, the first in the nation. The traditionally strong chemistry department has been bolstered in recent years by an internationally acclaimed polymer science program that brings to the Amherst campus scientists from all parts of the world. Recently an interdisciplinary touch was added when a new program in polymer science and engineering was born. Leading scholars have been added recently to provide outstanding programs in physics and astronomy.

Leading programs within the College of Agriculture include plant and soil sciences, wood technology and the rapidly growing field of restaurant and hotel management.

The School of Engineering offers programs from bachelor to Ph. D. level in civil, mechanical and aerospace, electrical, chemical and industrial engineering.

A total revamping of the School of Education curriculum has been completed under the leadership of Dr. Dwight Allen, the School's dynamic dean, who is trying "to institutionalize change." Under its new curriculum the School hopes to develop teachers who are flexible and innovative.

The School of Physical Education offers majors for both men and women as well as a program in recreation leadership.

The School of Business Administration, which offers one of three accredited Ph. D. programs in business administration in New England, is entering new fields under its dean, Dr. Wendell Smith, former president of the American Marketing Institute.

Students who desire a degree in home economics have the opportunity to major in several areas, including dietetics and institutional administration, foods in business, fashion merchandising, child development and secondary education.

Five College

A unique program open to UMass students, and one that puts the University in the forefront nationally in terms of institutional cooperation, is Five College Cooperation. The University and Amherst, Smith and Mount Holyoke Colleges have banded together in a series of joint programs, including the formation of a fifth institution, Hampshire College. Students can take courses on the other campuses through joint departments and student exchange.

Among the cooperative activities are a joint astronomy department, a cooperative Asian-African study program, Latin-American studies, a cooperative history of science program, a joint Ph.D. program, operation of an educational FM radio station located at UMass, and publication of the "Massachusetts Review," quarterly journal of literature, the arts and public affairs. Dr. Louis Martz of Yale University has called the Review "at present the most distinguished literary quarterly in this country."

erans Administration. Dr. Soutter has published more than 60 articles for medical journals in all areas of medicine, with special emphasis on medical education and surgery. Dean Soutter will oversee the groundbreaking and start of construction for the medical school this fall.

Dr. Francis L. Broderick, newest member of the team, began his role as the new Chancellor of UMass-Boston last fall. He formerly served as Dean of Lawrence and Downer Colleges at Lawrence University in Wisconsin, and is a former director for the Peace Corps in Ghana. He is a recognized authority on American social thought and the history of minority and religious leaders.

A 1943 graduate of Princeton University, Dr. Broderick earned his M.A. in history and his PH.D. degree in History of American Civilization at Harvard University. His most recent book, written with August Meier, "Negro Protest Thought in the Twentieth Century," was published as part of the American Heritage Series by Bobbs-Merrill in 1966.

Drive to End Malnutrition Meets "Moderate Success"

The Drive to Alleviate Malnutrition ("D.A.M."), an anti-hunger project conducted throughout the UMass campus and the town of Amherst during April and May, has met with "moderate success," according to representatives of the Martin Luther King Council and Delta Chi fraternity - the two organizatons which initiated the project.

George Child, President of Delta Chi, and Ken Mosakowski, moderator of WMUA's "Focus" program, both active members of the King Council's Board of Directors, first outlined their plans for a potentially nationwide drive to aid the hungry poor in America during WMUA's April 3rd memorial program for the late Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King. Child and Mosakowski attempted to rally the assistance of other Delta Chi chapters across the country but, after receiving more well-wishes than tangible support, they decided to confine their fund-raising activities to the local area. The project, they determined, should be two-fold in purpose: (1) to raise money to assist the hungry poor in the South; and (2) to protest against the blatant inadequacies of existing Government poverty programs.

Assisted by publicity from DAILY COLLEGIAN correspondent Kathy Biggane, WFCR's Tom Paine, and WMUA's Dick Stadlen and Glenn Briere, Child and Mosakowski organized a door-to-door "egg sale" in Amherst. Members of Delta Chi, Lambda Chi Alpha, Gamma Alpha Kappa, Phi Sigma Delta, Sigma Alpha Mu, and Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternities, and Lambda Delta Phi and Kappa Kappa Gamma sororities, joined in the collection, which netted approximately $300. Other funds were raised from viewers at the May 9th living theatre production "The Assassination of God: A Celebration," which was written, produced, and directed by students at the University. Representatives of the Southwest Patriots collected more than $60 for the Drive. Members of the Delta Chi chapter at Gorham State College in Maine also took up a collection.

During the UMass final exam period, Child and Mosakowski organized a fund-raising canvass among the dormitories; with the help of some thirty students in this effort, they managed to raise an additional $300. This brought the total amount collected to $715. Students who participated in the dormitory canvass included Linda Blair, Sue Brown, Rocco Brunnelle, Paul Cain, Henry Dandeneau, Joan Hannigan, Deloise Harris, Linda Harris, John Henderson, Faith Herlihy, Shawme Hutcheson, Randi Robinson, Betsy Ross, Bill Sawyer, Cindy Shamban, Dan Tuden, Annette Twonley, and Buck Vandersteen.

On June 30th Child and Mosakowski met with Senator George McGovern in Washington to report on the results of the D.A.M. project and solicit the Senator's recommendation as to which private anti - poverty organization would be best suitable to receive the money collected. McGovern who as chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs has been conducting extensive hearings on poverty in America, suggested that the money be sent to the Southern Regional Council, an organization head - quartered in Atlanta, Georgia, whose primary goal is "to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South." The coordinators of the Drive followed McGovern's recommendation and shortly received an appreciative reply from Paul Anthony, Director of the Southern Regional Council. A portion of Mr. Anthony's letter warrants special concern: "At this point, including your contribution, we have received slightly more than $5000," he wrote. "While we are grateful for this, it is somewhat disappointing and, needless to say, very frustrating in the sense of determining how best to use these small funds in relation to the tremendous need."

The Drive to Alleviate Malnutrition is continuing into the Fall. Anyone who would like to contribute funds to meet "the tremendous need" of widespread hunger in America may send cash, check, or money order to: "Martin Luther King Council" at 207 Hampshire House, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01002, or to: "Southern Regional Council, Paul Anthony, Director" at 5 Forsyth Street N.W., Atlanta, Georgia 30303. For further information, contact either George Child or Ken Mosakowski at the Martin Luther King Council office; messages may be left with the King Council's office secretary Anna Singletary at 545-0648 or 545-0649.

Med School Gets Final Green Light from Sargent

Gov. Francis W. Sargent decided this summer to "go forward" with construction of the University of Massachusetts state medical school at Worcester, ending five months of doubt on the $124 million project.

The decision by Sargent was based on an evaluation report by a team of out-of-state medical school officials.

In essence, they reported that the commonwealth has gone too far to pull back from the medical school project despite the soaring cost estimates.

Sargent described his decision as the "most difficult" since becoming governor.

At that time, Sargent launched a review of the state medical school because, he said, he was "confronted by a project whose cost had jumped from $75 million to $124 million in the previous two years alone."

For this, Sargent was criticized, and even denounced, for seemingly moving to prevent the 20-year-old idea of a state medical school from becoming a reality.

In his "go" letter to UMass trustees, Sargent deplored the criticism he received for merely asking for a review.

"This commonwealth and the University of Massachusetts we seek to forge were inexcusably ill-served by the rancor and personal invective of officials whose contribution to this project has been more rhetoric than reason," said the governor. He did not identify the "officials."

However, it was understood, the governor's reference was meant for UMass Pres. John W. Lederle and Lamar Soutter, dean of the medical school.

In his six-page letter to Joseph P. Healey, chairman of UMass board of trustees, Sargent quoted the cost estimate reservations of his evaluation team, adopting them as his own matter of concern.

The team reported:

"We recommend the construction of the proposed University of Massachusetts Medical School.

"However, we have grave reservations about the school's estimated cost of $124 million. In particular, we are concerned with the recent escalation of $50 million in this estimate.

"Therefore, we further recommend that the governor and trustees of the university take appropriate steps to make certain that these escalated costs are justified."

In this regard, Sargent urged the university trustees to "once again involve themselves in the financial structure of this project."

Pointedly, Sargent framed these two questions for the trustees to ponder:

"Can the total capital investment yet be cut below the estimated cost of $124 million without endangering the school?

"What lessons can you as trustees and we as responsible public officials learn from this near financial disaster and how can a repetition be prevented?"

Seen as a decisive factor in the evaluation teams' recommendation was that $64 million already had been committed to completion of the state medical school including $35 million in federal funds.

Sargent's decision was hailed by Dr. Soutter as a "great day for Massachusetts - a real step forward."

With this latest in a decade of crises for the state medical school now passed, Dr. Soutter predicted Massachusetts would take its place among the leaders of other state-operated medical teaching facilities.

The project includes a teaching hospital, and science-classroom building.

The review ordered by Sargent had produced four alternatives to the state medical school plan as programmed for the Worcester site.

These were to build the school without the teaching hospital, construct two-year regional medical schools, abandon the state school and provide financial aid to private medical schools, or just abandon the project.

UMass President John W. Lederle said that costs of the University's medical school in Worcester are necessary to building a first class facility, one that will both attract top faculty and turn out first rate doctors. Lederle said that he knew of no way where significant cuts could be achieved in building the basic medical science building and teaching hospital.

"There is nothing fancy or ornamental about the buildings," he said.

He said that the escalation costs are in line with other increases in the cost of living, pointing out that he has learned the real impact of the increased cost of living while looking for a home for his family.

As retiring president, Lederle will have to give up the university presidential home on the campus, one of the fringe benefits he was entitled to as head of UMass.

The Campus Center was "topped off" with the traditional tree this summer. The 11 story addition to the Student Union is scheduled to open in January, providing D. O'Connell and sons can successfully battle the snows of first semester.

UMass Continues to Aide Nations In Agricultural Development

The oldest program of technical assistance on record between an American institution of higher education and a foreign government was started by the University of Massachusetts; today UMass is still making contributions in the field.

The effort began in 1878 in Japan, when UMass President W. S. Clark went there to help establish the Sapporo Agricultural College on Hokkaido. The newest development is an undergraduate program in international agriculture beginning this September.

During his stay, Clark organized the new school, laid out a model farm, built the first American-style barn ever constructed in Japan, established a military unit on campus, the first at any Japanese college, taught two classes daily and was the principal of a preparatory school associated with the college.

Clark also initiated agricultural research, established a meteorological observatory, explored the countryside, collected new plants and introduced his Japanese students to hiking. After Clark left, the UMass-Hokkaido connection continued through faculty exchanges and visits. From 1958 through 1962, for example, 11 UMass faculty members were at Hokkaido while 52 Japanese professors and students came to the U.S. Sapporo College is now the University of Hokkaido.

UMass has in recent years increased its international scope. The Center for International Agricultural Studies of its College of Agriculture has trained some 185 agricultural officials from developing countries on campus and has granted degrees to students from many foreign countries. Since 1963 staff members have been working in the Central African nation of Malawi improving agricultural productivity and education.

This year's innovation is an undergraduate program in international agriculture leading to careers in the application of agricultural technology, administration of agricultural programs or work with international business firms dealing with agricultural supplies and products.

Nine majors are offered: agricultural and food economics, agricultural engineering, entomology, food science and technology, forestry and wildlife management, landscape architecture, plant and soil sciences, plant pathology and veterinary and animal sciences. Supplementing this normal professional curriculum are anthropology, sociology, government and others subjects designed to prepare students to use their training in other countries and cultures, particularly Latin America, Africa and Asia.

The five-year program includes a year of experience abroad, living and working in an agricultural region of Latin America, Africa or Asia under careful supervision. The year abroad includes an orientation program and language training. John H. Foster, director of the Center for International Agricultural Studies, is in charge of the program.

Clay Named to Head University Libraries

David M. Clay, acting director of libraries at UMass since 1966, has been named Director of University Libraries, it was announced by Provost Oswald Tippo.

As director, Clay will oversee the operations of Goodell Library and the nine departmental libraries on the campus. He will coordinate acquisition, staff administration, and the development of services at these libraries.

Clay's appointment comes at a time of rapid expansion of library facilities at Amherst. A new 28-story library is now under construction in the center of campus and is scheduled to open in the summer of 1971. The building will have a capacity of 2.5 million volumes and will be able to accommodate 3,000 students at one time.

Clay was instrumental in planning the new library. He was chairman of the Faculty Senate library committee, and he played a key role in obtaining $2.5 million in federal funds to help finance the building.

"This new facility," Clay explained, "will triple the central library facilities on campus. We hope it will allow us to develop a much larger and more comprehensive system of library services on this campus."

Clay came to UMass as a philosophy instructor in 1961 and was made an assistant professor the following year. He has served as secretary of the Faculty Senate, and was appointed acting director of University libraries in 1966.

He received his B.A. degree from Swarthmore College in 1957 and his M.A. from Princeton University in 1959.

Lederle Backs R.O.T.C. on Campus

John W. Lederle, president of the University of Massachusetts, is one of 15 state college heads to endorse ROTC on university campuses.

Lederle is a member of the executive committee of the National Assn. of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges which termed "most appropriate" the presence of officer-education programs on the campus.

A STATEMENT, adopted unanimously, notes, "Society depends on its institutions of higher education to furnish educated leadership in a wide variety of roles and occupations.

"These include professionally-trained individuals for service in government at all levels, local, state and national."

Speaking for 113 major state and land grant colleges, the committee said that these institutions have "traditionally taken leadership in offering opportunities for both professional and general education.

Dr. Venman Appointed Asst. Dean of Admin.

UMass President John W. Lederle has announced the appointment of Dr. William C. Venman as Assistant Dean of Administration. Venman has been assistant to the provost and director of the Summer Session since coming to UMass in 1962.

Venman explained that his new job entails working on "special projects for the President including the development of a program for continuing education, the athletic council, and representing the President on the Massachusetts Board of Regional Community Colleges, and continuing some of my functions in the Provost's office."

In addition to serving as director of the UMass Summer Session, Venman is the former President of the National Association of Summer Sessions. He serves as the University's Deputy to the Five College program involving Amherst, Smith, Mount Holyoke and Hampshire College and UMass.

He has served on several planning committees for the University's Boston campus, including groups that studied the location of the school, its curriculum, staff, and library facilities.

Before coming to UMass in 1962, Venman was a staff assistant at Grand Valley State College, and previously music director in the Muskegon, Michigan public schools. He has played with several orchestras and concert bands, and is a former member of the Connecticut Symphony, the West shore (Michigan) Symphony, and the Plymouth (Michigan) Symphony.

He served with the Army Special Services and the Adjutant General Corps as a Sergeant, and was a member of the Seventh Army Symphony.

Venman received his B. Mus. Ed. from Oberlin College in 1955. He received his M.A. from Western Michigan University in 1959, and his Ph.D. from the University of Michigan in 1962. He is married, the father of four, and lives in Amherst.

Birth control crusader William R. Baird plans to run against Sen. Edward M. Kennedy for the United States Senate in 1970.

Baird is appealing in Federal courts a three-month jail sentence for violating the state's birth control laws.

Baird said the fatal auto accident on July 18 involving Kennedy and its aftermath "has thrown into severe doubt not only the integrity of the man, but the integrity of American justice.

NOTE: This ... [illegible] ... 1967. Because of the Textbook Publishing Institute's study of the Economic Impact of College Textbook Publishing, Mr. ... [illegible] ... the Textbook Industry.

At its notice, the University Store [illegible] college store, is often the focal point for criticism and, to be sure, criticism is expected. Hopefully, it often stems from nothing more than misunderstanding or realizing exactly what the problem might be. Therefore, to each of you, we would like to present a few of the enclosed thoughts. We are confident that when you have had the opportunity to gain a few insights into our operation to observe the effort that the entire staff of the University Store does extend, and to understand our goals and objectives, you will find little that is seriously a problem.

The largest department we have and from which more than 60% of our sales are derived is the textbook department. Most of the problems we have are centered within this department of the University Store. Textbooks are the expensive tools of the trade — the tools of being a student. National figures suggest that books for required courses cost from 1/4 of one's total educational expenses. When you figure that you receive 80/85% of your education from textbooks, your investment in these books is one of the best offered in your entire educational process!

The pricing of books is determined solely by the publisher and prices are subject to change at their discretion. From the price structure offered by publishers, stores receive 20% discount on which to operate. Average figures across the country indicate that it costs about 23.7% to operate a textbook department. Therefore, it is not hard to understand that any store loses nearly 1% on college textbooks even though they are expensive. AND, WE DISCOUNT ALL TEXTBOOKS NOT PREPRICED BY THE PUBLISHER AND OVER $2.00 AT LEAST 2%!! We are one of the few stores in the Nation that do this and to our knowledge the only one in New England.

An order for textbooks originates about 3-4 months prior to the need. A requisition form from any academic department tells the store the title, author, publisher and the number of students expect[illegible]

[illegible] are several undesirable reasons [illegible] occasionally run out of textbook — don't [illegible] available when classes begin. It is most unusual, because of unexpected enrollment, to have entire [illegible] enrolled as classes start, necessitating an [illegible] fractions, classes projected at 200 could end with a [illegible] enrollment of twice that number without the Store having been forewarned. When this happens we immediately call for the books, but they can never be shipped as fast as the call was made, and — we are out of stock until they arrive.

There are a few orders for books the Store might not receive until after classes begin. This happens either because of late faculty arrival, or decisions not being made. Sometimes books are ordered with the knowledge that they are not scheduled to be published until after classes begin, though the decision is made in the student's overall interest.

STANDING IN LINES

Your first exposure to the University Store could very well be in the form of long lines waiting to enter the store. Realize that we are responsible to serve nearly 20,000 students in a matter of approximately 76 hours at the beginning of each semester.

Lines for textbooks develop in every school in the nation! Some are over a mile long and require a wait of over five hours. We hope that ours will never de[illegible]

MARKING BOOKS

You should know that all pricing on textbooks is done by electronic. This is because publishers do not accord credit on books which have any marks whatsoever on them. We are not even allowed to price books in pencil. Because of this we cannot refund books with markings of any kind and constantly stress, Do not write in a book until you are positive you are going to use it!"

BOOK IDENTIFICATION

The method by which we purchase used books from students controls the pilfering of books on campus to some degree. Should your books be stolen, your first contact should be with our information area.

Frequently, an individual who does pick up another's books will bring them to the store and sell them back to us as used books. If you are able to identify your books, we are able to locate the seller and not only will your books be returned, but the student body will also benefit by having the guilty party handled properly.

An easy suggestion for your book identification would be to choose a number, such as 38, and circle page number 38 in every book you own. Should your books be picked up let us know and we will watch for the title of the book and the particular page number which is circled.

We always know from whom we buy any and all books.

"Let My Temptation Be A Book,
Which I Shall Purchase, Hold And Keep . . . ."

BOOK REFUND POLICY

There are only three (3) conditions that may warrant a refund on textbooks and only one (1) for non-required books. They are as follows:

TEXTBOOKS
1. A defective copy
2. Course drop
3. Faculty decision to cancel title from course

NON-REQUIRED BOOKS
(outlines, novels, etc.)
1. A defective copy

Any books that fall in the above categories will be refunded in full, provided they meet the following requirements:

a. You must have register receipt for proof of ownership.
b. Books must be clean, unmarked and in saleable condition.
c. In cases of a course drop, a drop card or faculty verification thereof must be presented.
d. Refunds will generally be honored within thirty (30) days of purchase; unusual cases will be rejected by the Book Department Manager.
e. The Book Department Manager must be notified by faculty members wishing to drop a book they have ordered for a course before any refund will be honored.
f. A full refund will be given for a defective book at any time.

Books failing to meet the above requirements may be considered for purchase as "used books"; however, the decision is made solely by the store based on need and current demand.

The Book Department Manager

A hint to textbook buying that can save you time and money is to wait until your first class and your faculty member's commitment on exactly what book he/she plans to use.

Please be sure of your textbook purchases!!

CEEBS Tops Special Programs at UMass this Fall

lower in the verbal. All students had excellent recommendations from their guidance counselors.

Special Programs

Last year the University initiated the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students (CCEBS) program, to help disadvantaged black students with college potential overcome financial and academic barriers to attending the University.

The CCEBS program provides financial aid according to each student's need up to the University maximum of $1600 a year. The program also provides intensive tutoring by a group of graduate teaching assistants, faculty and student volunteers. Last year 123 freshmen were admitted under the program, and this year the University expects to add another 185 Black freshmen.

To combat the provincialism that can result from too many students from in-state, the University carries on a number of programs designed to broaden the experience of its students. Education majors and others may spend an exchange year at universities in New Mexico and Florida. The University conducts a year-round program in Atlantic studies at the University of Freiburg in Germany. Summer programs are offered at Oxford University in England, Bologna, Italy and Madrid, Spain. Next summer special programs will be added in Peau, France and Ulster in Northern Ireland.

Under an AID program, UMass is helping to develop an agricultural extension system and a college of agriculture in Malawi, Africa. As part of the project a number of young Malawians attend the University in Amherst and return to their country to work. Under another AID contract, the UMass School of Education has built and helped staff an all-girl high school in Tororo, Uganda, and trains Uganda teachers at Amherst. This fall two girls from Uganda will attend the University.

A new concept in education will be initiated this year at UMass under a Ford Foundation-University of Massachusetts program that will help a group of students to direct their own learning through a series of problem-solving research projects. A Ford Foundation grant of $95,000 administered by the University will support the program. Twenty students from UMass, Federal City College in Washington, D.C., and the University of South Carolina will receive full academic credit for interdisciplinary research projects of their own choosing aimed at the correction of the social, economic, and cultural problems now facing the United States.

Faculty

Approximately two-thirds of the 1153 UMass Amherst faculty members hold doctorates. When President Lederle arrived in 1960 there were 366 faculty members. The average faculty salary at that time was $7,528, compared to the present average of 12,500--an increase of over 60%. This rapid increase in salary level has enabled the University to compete with the best universities in the country in recruitment of faculty.

President Lederle has emphasized the role of good teaching, and each year the University awards two outstanding teacher awards, in recent years the University has strived to provide more effective small group identities, and a maximum of contact between faculty and students by establishing residential colleges. In the Orchard Hill and Southwest Residence areas, faculty live in residence halls, teach small classes and seminars there, and are available to counsel students.

Many on the UMass-Amherst faculty are eminent scholars, scientists or artists. In the sciences, such people as astronomy and optics pioneer John D. Strong, polymer scientist Richard Stein, radio astronomer G. Richard Huguenin and botanist Rudolf M. Schuster are outstanding. Nationally-known in the arts are sculptor Robert Mallary of the art department and cellist Joel Krosnick of the music department.

One of the nation's leading mathematicians, Marshall Harvey Stone, holds the George David Birkhoff Professorship in Mathematics at UMass; one of the country's leading scholars in the social sciences, Hans Speier, has been named Robert M. McIver Professor in the government and sociology departments. A third UMass chair is held by Latin America expert Lewis Hanke. He is Hering Professor of History.

Research

An important role for the faculty member is research.

"It serves to train graduate students who will become tomorrow's professors; it keeps a professor in the forefront in his field and lends a sense of immediacy to his teaching as he includes recent findings in his lectures; and it adds to the nation's knowledge," according to the administration. At UMass, professors are currently carrying out research under more than $7 million in grants from the federal government and other private agencies. According to federal officials, UMass, which has been 101 in the nation in terms of federal funds received in 1963, had moved to 86th in the nation as of 1968, a sign of a vigorous faculty.

Campus

The Amherst campus is 1100 landscaped acres, surrounding more than 110 major buildings. With an annual student growth rate of 1500 students and 100 new faculty, the demand for new academic and supporting facilities is constant. The greatest physical growth has come in the last 10 years, when more than $100 million has been spent in new buildings, improvements, roads and equipment. Of this, the state has spent more than $40 million in new academic buildings. Another $40 million has been spent for residence halls, dining commons and other non-academic buildings, which are financed on a self-liquidating basis at no cost to the taxpayer through the UMass Building Authority.

Visitors to Amherst complain the "the campus is always torn up." And it will be for some time to come, as the University grows to meet enrollment projections of 26,400 students in Amherst by 1975 and 9,900 students in Boston. Because of the growing danger to students as they cross busy campus streets, cars have been barred for the most part from the center of campus. Parking areas have been built on the periphery of the campus and UMass-Amherst in 1969 is essentially a pedestrian campus. The campus, with rare bushes and trees from all parts of the world, with buildings from the past and forward looking designs of the 1960's is a study in the modern shaping of a University.

Service

As the State University, the University of Massachusetts bears the responsibility for a number of services to the community and maintains more than 20 public service units. Among these are the Labor Relations and Research Center, which carries out research on major problems affecting labor in Massachusetts and conducts extension programs in labor education throughout the state. The Center has recently begun a program to help retiring workers deal with health, financial, housing, leisure time and other problems, backed by a $41,256 federal grant.

The Cooperative Extension Service conducts off-campus educational programs in agriculture, home economics and a wide range of related areas, including responsibility for the state's 4-H program. The Bureau of Government Research conducts training institutes for public officials, provides consultative services to cities and towns, and conducts research into areas of government affecting local and state needs. The Massachusetts Experiment Station, in addition to its research on agricultural products, economic research for agriculture, and the work of its Waltham Field Station, is the state's administrator of statutory regulations concerning sale of feeds, fertilizers, seeds and the use of milk testing glassware.

The Water Resources Research Center is conducting inter-disciplinary research into the Bay State's water supply and the problems of pollution. Comtech, the Commonwealth Technical Resource Service, is the University's link with industry. Its aim is to extend modern technology in existing industry and commerce and to generate new ideas that will lead to new technologically-based industries and employment. In another growing service area, more than 20,000 people come to the University each year to attend conferences. The Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center to be completed in January, will help to serve conferees with new restaurants, conference facilities and living accommodations.

Brown Univ. Abolishes Marks In Major Educational Step

PROVIDENCE, R. I. (CPS) - Brown University students will return to their campus this fall to find major changes in the school's educational structure - changes initiated by the students themselves.

Letter grades have been abolished in favor of "satisfactory - no credit" grading. Some courses may still be taken for a letter grade, but a student will never be forced to take a course for a letter grade.

"Modes of thought" courses have been established. These courses allow small groups of freshmen exposure to senior faculty members, and the courses deal with questions and concepts rather than facts. The minimum course load for an undergraduate degree has been lowered to increase the flexibility of the student's semester load.

Self-created majors will be allowed. Students can devise their own majors if they choose not to take all a department's requirements. Independent study courses will be limitless. A student will be able to create the scope and content of his own courses as frequently as he can come up with ideas.

All of these changes and others have come about through student pressure. Student Government leader Ira Magaziner and other students began to study higher education three years ago, relating their study to Brown in particular.

The curriculum planners decided that the university must give the student a role in planning his education, that a student's personal development is as important a part of his education as his intellectual development, and that rules and requirements must inhibit a student's learning and his relationships with instructors and fellow students as little as possible.

SBA Sponsors Seminars

The University of Massachusetts School of Business Administration and the Experiment in International Living of Putney, Vt., are co-sponsoring a management seminar at Como, Italy Sept. 7 through 13.

Former participants in the University's Junior Executive Training Program (JET) and executives who have participated in activities sponsored by the Experiment in International Living have been invited to attend. The JET program is held annually at UMass for young business executives from foreign countries to instruct them in computer-age business techniques.

One of the prime objectives of the in-depth seminar at Como is to instruct business executives in better organizational and management techniques in an effort to overcome the technological gap between Europe and the United States.

Five main topics will be covered: "Planning for Profit," "Current Developments in Business Finance, Money Markets, and Financial Planning and Control," "Organization for Effective Decision Making," "Critical Issues in Marketing," and "Management Control and Evaluation."

Course leaders for the seminar will be Wendell R. Smith, dean of the School of Business Administration, and UMass business faculty members Morton Backer, Bertil Liander, and Walter O'Donnell.

European Tour Planned By UMass Chorale; Fund Drive Organized

The UMass Chorale has announced plans for a European tour at the conclusion of the school year. Having seen tremendous growth in its membership and extended range of reputation within the past few years, the Chorale had been approached as early as last winter by representatives of several tour-planning organizations.

The proposed tour will take the Chorale through many of the larger cities of Europe - London, Paris, Amsterdam, Berlin - where it will be performing at various universities, churches, and secondary schools.

Under the direction of Dr. Richard duBois, Assistant Head of the Music Department, this year's Chorale will be the first University musical organization to represent UMass, and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts outside the United States. As it did when the group traveled to the mid-west two years ago, the Chorale will be bringing the name and reputation of the University wherever it travels.

The cost of the proposed tour is being assumed entirely by the Chorale members themselves, and a committee has been formed to coordinate a drive in bringing to the University community and the state, itself, an appeal for both monetary assistance and moral support in their endeavor. Toward this end, a Patron Drive has been planned for Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of next week, with members of the Chorale going door-to-door in the dormitories.

Requests for donations are also being sent to the fraternities and sororities, and a table will be stationed all of next week in the Student Union for others wishing to contribute.

Governor Francis W. Sargent reviews plans for the Chorale's upcoming tour with executive officers Frances Botelho, Treasurer. Barry W. Wendell, chairman of the fund raising committee, and Paul LaPenas, Manager.

Psych Department Adds Eight New Faculty Members

UMass has announced the appointment of eight new faculty members in its psychology department.

They are Seymour Berger from Indiana University, professor; John Donahue from the University of Kentucky, associate professor; E. E. Krieckhaus from the University of California at Davis, associate professor; and John Emrick from the IBM Thomas J. Watson Research Center, assistant professor.

Also, Howard Gadlin, from the University of Illinois at Chicago Circle, assistant professor; Alexander Pollatsek from the University of Michigan, assistant professor; Arnold Well from the University of Oregon, assistant professor; and Alan Lieberman, director of couseling at Simon's Rock School, lecturer.

At Indiana, Dr. Berger has been assistant chairman and acting chairman of the psychology department. He has also been on faculties at Trinity College and Cornell University. He holds his Ph. D. from the latter institution. A specialist in social learning, Dr. Berger is author or co-author of 14 publications in his field. The National Science Foundation has supported his research on social learning through observation for the past five years and he has received a number of other grants and fellowships.

A University of Kentucky Ph. D. Dr. Donahue has held a number of faculty posts there and has been associate professor of psychology there since 1964. He was a National Institute of Mental Health post-doctoral fellow at the Center for Brain Research at the University of Rochester and is author or co-author of over 30 papers and other publications. He has just begun a four-year study of sequential and contextual factors in stimulus control under a $78,830 U. S. Public Health Services grant.

Dr. Krieckhaus has been at the Davis campus in California since 1965, before that serving on faculties at Yale University and the University of Illinois. A Williams College graduate, he holds a Ph. D. from Illinois. A physiological psychologist, his areas of special interest include the limbic system, learning, fear-motivated behavior and electro-physiology. He is author or co-author of 20 publications in these and other areas.

Dr. Emrick holds A.B., M. A. and Ph. D. degrees from the University of California at Los Angeles and was a faculty member there. Before his Illinois post, Dr. Gadlin was a University of Michigan faculty member and holds his Ph. D. from that institution. Dr. Pollatsek, who received his Ph. D. this year from Michigan, holds four other degrees, a B.S. M.A. and M.S. from Michigan and an M. A. from Harvard University.

Before joining the University of Oregon faculty, Dr. Wells was a teaching and research assistant at the University of Alberta. A graduate of McGill University, he holds a masters degree from Alberta and a Ph. D. from Oregon. Dr. Lieberman has had wide experience as a clinical psychologist at colleges, hospitals and other institutions. He holds M. A. and Ph. D. degrees from the University of Connecticut.

Students Suffering From Federal Defense Loan Cuts

By JOHN STAVROS
Senior Reporter

Thanks to the Federal Government students depending on National Defense Loans, Educational Opportunity Grants and College Work Study Funds may have to seek aid elsewhere this semester. Now, the question is where.

Spending curbs by the Nixon Administration and not cuts in the University budget are the reasons for the financial aid drought.

Since 1965 the Federal Government has been extremely helpful to students seeking some type of financial assistance as it has granted up to $490 million a year in these three areas. This semester the U.S. office of Education reports only 61% of the total request made by the nations colleges and universities.

It is believed that along with the tightening of the budget by the administration, attempts by law and order Congressmen to punish disruptive students have also effected the final allocations.

Higher education officials had requested $814 million and received $503 million.

At the University as in all the institutions of Massachusetts the squeeze will effect many students. Last year the University received about $283,000 for National Defense funding alone. This semester the figure reads $148,000. Cuts in funding on all campuses are running better than 25%-35%.

When asked what the cuts mean for the University Robert J. Morrissey, director of placement and financial aid at UMass stated, "Right now we are able to supply only about one-half of the students needs."

Morrissey estimated that some 1,000 students who could qualify for help from his office would go unaided.

Nationally this years figures do not sufficiently keep pace with the expected enrollments and requests. Last year the figures show loans granted to 442,000 students while this year the figure will be approximately 400,000. Educational Opportunity Grants, awarded only to the poorest of students, showed a slight increase of 280,000, slightly higher than the 271,000 granted last year.

One spokesman for Northeastern University stated that students had to be virtually "poverty stricken" to receive aid.

Normally students in this predicament might go to banks for financial relief, but legislation to raise the ceiling on students loan programs - The emergency Student Loan Act for 1969 - passed the Senate overwhelmingly only to become snarled in the house.

Although the measure is expected to pass quickly when the House reconvenes, the late Senate Minority Leader Everett M. Dirksen warned in August that the Nixon administration would refuse to allocate additional funds no matter what action Congress takes.

In this case the only losers in the financial mess will be the students who require the money to seek higher education. Even if the funds are granted immediately, it is already too late to aid students attempting to pay first semester bills. The impact of the squeeze is just beginning to be felt on campuses across the nation.

Issues Discussed by Subcommittee, Recommendations Made to Trustees

By JOEL FOX
Managing Editor

In a lengthy six hour session, a subcommittee of the UMass Board of Trustees discussed four relevant issues to the Campus: open housing, alcoholic beverages, picketing codes, and Greenough's proposed co-ed dorm.

First on the agenda was a discussion of the dorm visitation proposal. It will be recommended to the entire board that the self-determination proposal of the dorms be approved with the provision that an adequate security program shall be established to prevent people from entering the dorm who are not residents or not guests. The sub-committee hoped that this would prevent some people from coming in for the purpose of stealing. The board also recommends that freshmen under 21 get written permission from their parents.

The sub-committee, in discussing alconoilc beverage policies recommended that the present statute be rescinded (which would allow for a "21 Room" in the Union), and that a new statute be passed that would allow drinking in rooms and lobbies of dorms for all students 21 or over. All policies will be subject to legal review.

In discussing the picketing code, the sub-committee decided to send back the reports of the Faculty and Student Senates so that these two bodies could form a joint commission and come up with a single report to be submitted to the board.

The final issue brought to the sub-committee's attention was Greenough's experimental co-ed dorm. The subcommittee will recommend to the board as a whole that the co-ed dorm can begin second semester, this year, only after written permission of all involved has been received, only after meetings attended by the students, parents, and administration have taken place, and only after voluntary approval of enough Greenough residents has been recieved to make room for the women.

The full board is now scheduled to meet Friday, September 12th to discuss the recommendations.

Dirksen's Death Unlikely To Shift Congress Mood

WASHINGTON - The departure of Everett McKinley Dirksen from the American political stage leaves a major vacancy in the cast of characters, but it will probably not have a material effect on the plot now unfolding in Congress or the Republican party.

This is the assessment of political sources, who say that it had become increasingly clear in recent years that Senator Dirksen, once second only to Lyndon B. Johnson as a power figure in the Senate, had been declining in influence, a victim of changing times and his own shifting political course.

The Senate bloc on which Mr. Dirksen could guarantee delivery for almost any sort of proposition had dwindled to a hard cadre of older conservatives. The younger, more liberal Republican Senators, more numerous than ever this year, had begun openly questioning his leadership.

Senator Dirksen's effectiveness in working for enactment of President Nixon's legislative program had not yet been really tested in the 91st Congress, observers point out, so that the long-range loss to the White House in terms of potential Congressional achievements remains problematical.

Senator Dirksen might not have lent all his impressive efforts to some of the President's proposals, such as the substantial increase in welfare expenditures. But as those in the Senate who have had occasion to know point out, it is hard to conceive of any successor bringing as much experience, cunning and shrewd bargaining skill to the Republican Senate leadership.

Whoever succeeds Senator Dirksen as leader, the Republican delegation is almost certain to move somewhat to the left. This would be true if Senator Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, the moderate who moved up from whip to acting minority leader last week, should be chosen by his colleagues.

President Nixon's legislative lieutenants in the White House are known to feel confident that they could carry on with Senator Scott as party leader, relying on the organization and loyalty of the G.O.P. delegation and the deep divisions evident among the Democratic majority.

Even if the leadership should go to a conservative like Senator Roman L. Hruska of Nebraska, who was defeated by Mr. Scott for the whip's job early this year, the Republican liberals could be expected to move in and play a more influential role in the party, freed of the imposing opposition of Senator Dirksen.

Some Senators thought it possible that the Republicans, in an effort to avoid another liberal-conservative clash in the wage of the Dirksen death, might turn to Senator George D. Aiken of Vermont, the widely respected dean of the delegation and ranking member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Senator Aiken is 77 years old, however, and might not be up to the physical demands of the floor leadership. For that matter, Senator Scott will be 69 years old in November and must conduct a re-election campaign next year in an important swing state.

Whatever the complexion of the new Senate leadership, it seemed likely that the Nixon Administration would not miss the intervention of Senator Dirksen into some sensitive political affairs that had sporadically characterized the President's first eight months in office.

It was Mr. Dirksen, almost single-handed and against influential opinion in the Administration, who blocked the nomination of Dr. John H. Knowles as Assistant Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare and insisted on the replacement of William J. Driver, a career man, as head of the Veterans Administration.

UMass Student, Two Others Injured in Car Accident

Three persons were injured, one a UMass student, seriously, in an auto accident last night on Massachusetts Ave., between Whitmore and Southwest.

The UMass student, Robert A. Coneman of Worcester, was reported to be in serious condition at Cooley Dickenson, suffering from internal injuries.

The other injured persons were taken to the UMass infirmary. No further details were released, pending notification of relatives.

The accident occurred at 8:15 last night when the two cars, one a Volkswagan and one an M.G. collided at an entrance to Massachusetts Ave., half-way between Whitmore and Southwest. University police report that both cars were badly damaged, and traffic at the intersection was snarled for some time after the accident.

UMass Engineer Studies Library Book Problems

A University of Massachusetts industrial engineer, after digging around in library stacks, has come up with one reason why you can't always get the book you want when you want it.

The reason is the 80/20 rule. This means, according to UMass industrial engineering department head Richard W. Trueswell, that as a general rule 80 per cent of the circulation involves only 20 per cent of the books of most libraries. The 80 per cent and 20 per cent figures may vary from library to library, he adds, but generally hold true and mean that most of the people who use a library are after a small percentage of the books.

In fact, Trueswell and others have found that "the average library user, once he has determined that his library has a book, has only a 50-50 chance of obtaining that book on his initial search for that book." The usual reason is that the book is out but it also can be on reserve, in a special collection, lost or stolen, he explained.

The UMass engineer has applied and industrial - type systems approach to library circulation, which has characteristics and problems similar to a typical industrial inventory. The result is a mathematical formula or curve that can be applied to a library's circulation requirements.

Trueswell has based his findings on a research study he made at the Goodell Library of the University of Massachusetts and the Williston Memorial Library of Mount Holyoke College, involving analysis of a total of approximately 15,000 circulation transactions.

"The study was made during one entire academic semester and the last circulation date of every book borrowed was recorded as part of the data-taking procedure," the UMass engineer explained. "In addition to these circulation statistics, random samples were made of the last circulation date of the stack holdings."

Combining these two - recent circulation data and random stack sample information--leads to a curve which indicates to the librarian that percentage of his library's holdings that contribute to a given percentage of the circulation.

"This information can be used as an aid to the librarian for stack thinning, multiple-copy determination, and core collection development," according to the UMass industrial engineer.

The technique is designed for use in computer simulation. In effect, Trueswell explained, a hypothetical library could be set up through a computer program. Borrowing and returning of books, purchases, growth and other factors all can be simulated for any time period desired simply by running the program.

A shuttle bus will provide students with transportation to and from the University bookstore in the physical plant building September 10, 11, 12, 15 and 16.

The bus service will operate as a shuttle run from the physical plant to the Quad, Orchard Hill, Baker, the Central Area and Southwest. The service will operate from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m. each day.

National Leaders Praise Dirksen, Ponder Any Political Reactions

WASHINGTON (AP) - Everett McKinley Dirksen, he of the tangled mane, the rumbling bass voice which could sooth or taunt or plead, is dead at 73, and the Senate is pausing in tribute to the man who for a decade was leader of its Republican minority.

At the peak of his power, during two Democratic administrations, the senator from Illinois fashioned that minority, and his own talent for oratory, drama and political maneuver, into a force which made him one of Washington's most influential figures.

Dirksen, ever the showman, was perhaps the best known of senators.

"He was an old pro," said Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield, announcing the Senate would forego business today to do honor to Dirksen, who died Sunday at Walter Reed Army Hospital, five days after an operation for lung cancer.

Medical announcements had indicated he was progressing toward recovery. But on Sunday, he suffered a cardiac and respiratory arrest. Two hours of efforts at resuscitation proved futile, and Dirksen died at 4:52 p.m., EDT.

President Nixon called Dirksen a giant in the history of Congress, a great American, a warm personal friend. "To politics and government he brought a dedication matched by few and a style and eloquence matched by no political leader in our time," the President said. "He had his greatest moments as the leader of the loyal opposition."

The White House said Nixon expects to attend the funeral. Mansfield said he hopes most of the Senate will, too.

The funeral is to be held at the National Presbyterian Church, and Dirksen's body is to lie in state for one day at the rotunda of the Capitol. He will be buried in his hometown, Pekin, Ill.

Final, detailed arrangements were to be made today.

Members of Congress, officials and leaders of both parties joined in praising Dirksen and in expressing sympathy to his widow, his daughter, Danice, and his son-in-law, Sen. Howard H. Baker, R-Tenn.

Mansfield said as Democratic leader, he had enjoyed a perfect relationship with his Republican counterpart. "His word was good," Mansfield said. "Everything was on the table."

Former President Lyndon B. Johnson - who often found Dirksen a valued ally on the Senate floor - sent a private message of condolence to Mrs. Dirksen.

Dirksen's death left two vital vacancies in the Senate: that of Republican floor leader, and that of Senator from Illinois.

Sen. Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, 68, is likely to succeed to the minority leadership on an interim basis. The decision will be made at a conference of 42 remaining Republican senators.

They will, presumably, be joined by a 43rd Republican when GOP Gov. Richard B. Ogilvie of Illinois appoints a new senator.

Scott, who had been deputy minority leader or whip, was designated acting Republican leader after Dirksen was hospitalized.

Dirksen, who was elected to his fourth Senate term less than a year ago, had suffered repeated illnesses, frequently requiring hospitalization. He blamed recurrent stomach and intestinal disturbances on tension. He also suffered from a bleeding ulcer, a pinched nerve in his back, and emphysema, a lung ailment.

He constantly puffed cigarettes, tried to quit but never succeeded, often borrowed a smoke from a colleague, an aide or a reporter.

It was when Johnson and the late John F. Kennedy were in the White House that Dirksen's power was at its pinnacle. Democratic presidents came to him seeking the votes they needed for key proposals.

Republican Nixon often turned to other Republicans - although Dirksen retained ample political muscle.

Pike Sought New Meaning of Religion in Life

By RONALD THOMSON
Associated Press Writer

JERUSALEM (AP) - Dr. James A. Pike, who lost his battle with the Judean desert which he had hoped would yield a fuller meaning of Christianity for him, ' did not fear death and now he is at peace."

The words came from his 31-year -old third wife Diane after the body of the former Episcopal bishop of California was recovered from a ledge of a deep canyon Sunday. The spot was two miles from where she had left him to go for aid last Monday night.

"There was no more appropriate place for Jim to die, if he had to die," said Mrs. Pike. She told newsmen her 56-year-old husband remarked before they set out on the trip: "If I die here, I will be happy and at peace."

The Pikes came to the Holy Land to do research for a book on the life of Christ.

"And now Jim has died in the place where Jesus found consolation ," she said. "The book must be finished. My brother and I will do it. It will be a memorial to Jim."

Mrs. Pike said she would remain in Israel for a few more days and would make funeral arrangements after she talked with her husband's relatives in the United States.

Search parties of Israeli police, Bedouin trackers and army volunteers spent six days combing the wasteland where the Dean Sea Scrolls were found 20 years ago.

Police In spector Salman Abu Yaman said Pike apparently was trying to climb out of the canyon and fell about 80 feet to the ledge.

An Israeli pathologist said Pike apparently died instantly from the fall and had been dead two to five days.

Pike's footprints led from two pools of fresh water a few hundred yards from the spot where he began his fatal attempt to climb out of the canyon.

Last Saturday, Pike's under - shorts were found not far from where the couple abondoned their car Monday when it became stuck in a dirt track about five miles from the Dean Sea.

Mrs. Pike went on for help after her husband collapsed and found a camp of road workers after walking all night.

Pike, a late comer to the Episcolpal faith, was a controversial figure much of his clerical life. Charges of heresy had been leveled at him by some of his associates.

Born a Roman Catholic, he became an agnostic in 1932 after studying for two years with the Jesuits at the University of Santa Clara, Calf. He went on to earn a law degree at Yale and became an attorney for the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission.

Sometime during these years, he was married for the first time but never spoke of his marriage. Even close friends never learned her name or the dates of the marriage and the annulment.

Pike married the second time in 1942 to Esther Yanovsky by whom he had four children.

After World War II service as a naval intelligence officer, Pike was ordained an Episcopal minister and in 1958 was appointed bishop of California.

He remained a headline figure for the rest of his life. He doubted the virgin birth of Christ, His Resurrection and the concept of the Blessed Trinity. Conservative clerics and laymen attacked him.

Pike resigned as bishop in 1966 and became theologian - in - residence of the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions in Santa Barbara, Calif. That was the year his oldest son, James Jr., 22, shot himself to death in a Manhattan hotel room.

Two years later, Pike touched off another storm when he took the former Diane Kennedy for his third wife in a Methodist ceremony. With her he wrote a book, "The Other Side," in which he said he had communicated through a medium with his dead son.

Earlier this year, he broke completely with the Episcopal Church after it refused to bless the marriage.

Astronomy Head Studies Mysteries

The chairman of the UMass astronomy program is trying to unlock some of the secrets which have hidden the origin of stars and comets from man.

Working under a one-year, $20-000 National Science Foundation grant, Dr. William M. Irvine is studying cosmic dust in reflection nebulae and comets, a topic which Dr. Thomas Arny, his colleague at the University, terms "the key intermediate step between uncondensed gases and fully formed planets and stars."

Dr. Irvine is studying the condensation of inter-stellar gases into "cosmic dust" - a mysterious configuration believed by some to resemble ice crystals. Clouds of this dust blot out stars behind them as they drift through space. These clouds, called reflection nebulae, may occasionally collapse and, over a long period of time, form stars.

A great deal of cosmic dust surrounds our solar system, and portions of it gradually condense forming "proto-comets" at great distances from the sun. However, over billions of years, they are drawn in toward the center of the solar system. As they move near the sun, cosmic dust gradually melts and trails behind the comet, thus creating its tail.

Dr. Irvine is attempting to determine the exact nature of cosmic dust, and in this way, determine if it is indeed the intermediate step in the formation of stars and comets.

This is the third grant Dr. Irvine has received since coming to UMass in 1966. He has received grants from the National Science Foundation, NASA, and Harvard University to study planetary atmospheres, the first two in 1967, the third in 1968.

Dr. Irvine came to the University in 1966 as the chairman of the astronomy program of the newly created physics and astronomy department.

Well, here we are again already into another semester with all the same anxieties, hopes, mix-ups, and the inevitable monsoons. But along with all of these more trivial matters connected with this period we have also entered into a new point in history; one which we are all a definite part of.

Last year might half-hearted be termed a year of action as far as the "New Left" went though some might tend to call it a year of limited action of 'you ain't seen nothing yet.'

We at UMass have had our share of marches, sit-ins, demonstrations, and the like in this last year but to what end? One must not only look at the immediate action but also at the inevitable reaction which follows in its wake.

It would appear on the surface that at this point the left have been the losers. We are coming back to school with a severely cut budget as a reaction to last year's demonstrations. We also come back with more laws with higher penalties just passed by the Senate for any "disorders" which occur on our campus.

So, thus far, it would appear that the left has succeeded in little except in defining and bringing out the issues before the people. The left have been the ones who have stood out and up and told it like it is. They have stood alone for the most part, a small minority, and have screamed to the world the guilt which America must live with as a result of her crimes, the burden of which indeed weighs heavy on the conscience of this Protestant based nation.

The reaction to this "guilt digging" on the part of the guilty is typical and was anticipated. Like a German World War II officer whose crimes have been laid out before him, the establishment in its guilt naturally reacts adversely to having its crimes enunciated. And because of this reaction the left has been at least half successful. It has succeeded in a venture that none other has dared undertake. The establishment has proved its guilt by its reaction to being told directly that it is guilty. So what the establishment is presently fighting is itself; its own guilty conscience. The legislators who cut school budgets are fighting their consciences which bother them as a result of the welfare budgets that they have cut in the past. The Senate which passes laws against the left are feeling the burden too.

So, it would be a mistake to say that the left has failed in its undertakings when it has actually succeeded in accomplishing half of its mission. Having made society aware of its crimes against itself, there now lies the task of making society do something in reparation for its own sake.

Tilt On The Moon

CAPE COD - Weatherwise, this has been a disastrous summer for large parts of the world. Everyone has his own theory as to the cause of it, but no one has been able to scientifically pinpoint what's happened until now.

Prof. Heinrich Applebaum, who is stationed at the Endless Summer Observatory, at Endless Summer, Mass., revealed that he had discovered the reason the weather had gone awry this year was because of the moon landings.

"They should not," said Prof. Applebaum, "have taken the rocks off the moon."

"Why not?" I asked him.

"Because," said the professor, "it's made the moon unbalanced."

"You mean taking a few rocks off the moon could change its balance?"

"Exactly. The moon was in perfect conjunction to the earth. Each rock was placed just so, and even disturbing one could have a magnetic effect, causing just enough tilt to the moon to bring all the bad weather."

"It's hard to believe," I said.

"Don't believe me. Here are my mathematical calculations. Every rock removed from the moon is responsible for one lousy day of weather on earth."

I studied the figure he showed me. "My gosh," I said, "these figures prove you're right."

"Of course, I'm right," said Applebaum, erasing his blackboard. "But what worries me is not only the rocks that the astronauts took off the moon, but the garbage they left up there in its place.

"Look, there's the laser machine, the bottom half of the lunar module, a television camera and heaven knows what else the astronauts threw out of their ship.

"With all this stuff lying in the Sea of Tranquility, the weight of the moon has completely tilted, causing unseasonal tide swells and variable shifts in the magnetic forces that control the solar system. I have named this the Earth-Moon Garbage Effect."

"You're too modest professor," I said. "It should be the Applebaum Earth-Moon Garbage Effect."

"That's up to the Academy of Sciences," the professor said.

"But what can we do to bring the moon back to its original center of gravity?"

"The crew of Apollo 12 have to take the moon rocks back and put them in the exact places Armstrong and Aldrin took them from. They they have to clean up the mess left by Apollo 11 and bring all the garbage back to earth."

"But professor, if the crew of Apollo 12 do all that, they won't have any time for their own experiments."

"Tough," said Applebaum. "Do you want to have scientific moon achievements or a rotten winter?"

Allies For Campus Rebels

Revolt against the traditional approach to societal problems at three separate conventions of scholars last week suggests that campus rebels, now heading back to school, have found some strong allies in important places.

This is a healthier sign than may at first appear, for one of the main complaints of disgruntled students has been that they were shouting into an empty barrel with no one listening to them. Now, if they themselves are listening, they know they at last have been heard not only belatedly and by most college and university administrators but, more significantly, by important groups in the larger society from which an increasing number of students were becoming totally alienated because they regarded it as hopeless.

The resolutions and programs at the American Political Science Association meeting in New York, of the American Psychological Association in Washington and the International Union for Pure and Allied Biophysics in Boston have a bit of the ring of the manifestos with which crusading students bombarded university administrators last Fall. This will frighten some of the students' elders. They will feel it was bad enough that revolutionaries were taking over American campuses, but intolerable that they now are moving into the ivory towers.

The fear is groundless. The way out of the turmoil into which students were plunging the nation's campuses from coast to coast always has been in a coupling of a sympathetic understanding of their legitimate reasons for discontent and a firm determination to help rather than hinder them in removing the causes.

Disagree as many will with their inclusive indictment of our society as hypocritical, unjust, insensitive, inhumane and lacking in candor, it will have to be agreed, nevertheless, that the society is indeed less than perfect and proper correctives lie elsewhere than in seizing campus buildings and fencing deans out of their offices. Some of the students may not think so, and the nihilists will disagree violently, but the way to right the wrongs they have seen in our society is through the political process. And is it precisely toward this end that the scientists and psychologists are now directing themselves.

The biophysicists are concerned with environmental pollution, secrecy in scientific research, governmental and especially military control of the uses to which their findings are put. They want their skills directed toward the solution of social problems. For the first time in their 66 years, the political scientists have been urged by 700 members to reexamine their role in the body politic with a view to "dealing with the same issues that have been raised by the young." And finally, the psychologists are looking into their "failure to recognize the political implications of their work.'

All of this spells vital action at the political level, which is where action belongs. With the help of their properly concerned elders, student activists, working at the congressional district and precinct levels, can accomplish the same miracles in the 1970 and '72 elections that they accomplished in New Hampshire last year after their imaginations had been fired.

With better direction from their own leaders and more help from their elders, they can prove themselves to be exactly what Brandeis University President Morris B. Abram has called them - "a great natural resource and blessing . . . our nation's hope of tomorrow."

Typical Student Drug User Middle-Class Humanities Major

By LINDA CHARLTON
New York Times Service

A profile of the student drug user is beginning to emerge from statistical studies of the campus drug scene, and he appears to be in fact very much as he is seen in fantasy by his elders.

Perhaps the clearest portrait of both the turned-on student and his straight classmate has been taced by a group of social scientists in California. Their conclusions, based on interviews and questionnaires are generally supported, or at least not contradicted, by the findings of other investigators.

The student who has some familiarity with drugs - meaning, principally, the amphetamines ("pep pills"), marijuana and LSD - is likely to be a middle-class or upper-middle-class male majoring in the humanities or the social sciences at a college or university in or near an urban center. He probably disagrees with his parents' politics and is himself a left-wing activist.

DISSATISFIED

He is likely to have moved several times during his childhood and early adolescence. He probably characterizes himself as nonreligious in the traditional sense. Sports are of little importance to him, as are campus clubs and groups.

He is generally dissatisfied - with his courses and teachers and what he sees as the irrelevance of his education, with the institution's administration, with the society he grew up in and the world as it is.

These are some of the student drug user's characteristics found by Dr. Richard H. Blum and his associates, mainly at the Institute for the Study of Human Problems at Stanford University, in their survey of 1,200 students at five Western colleges and universities in the 1966-67 academic year.

Their findings were published earlier this year as the second volume of two, under the title "Students and Drugs". The project was financed in part by the National Institute of Mental Health

DOUBTS OWN FUTURE

The student in what was then the "big minority" - Blum reports that a smaller 1968 follow-up study indicates that the "majority of the students" had some illicit-drug experience - is likely also to be a coffee drinker and to be familiar with both tobacco and alcohol.

He quite probably sees himself as one of the "idealistic innovators, or even revolutionaries," but however much he would like to change the world, he is pessimistic about his future prospects. As for his past, he is likely to "consistently recall the advantages of being sick as a child." Beyond that, Blum notes, the small number of students who retain "a perception of parents as not caring" are heavy drug users.

The student abstainer, according to the Blum study is generally "younger, poorer, more conservative and religious, and more satisfied with present and future prospects" than the user. The study constructs a prototype non-user, called Paul, whom it describes as the "more solid and simple of the two."

He is a comparatively unimaginative but probably "the more independent," because he is "free to fashion standards and styles that fit him best" with the pressures of "rancor or compulsive opposition" to his parents, although limited by a "commitment to family, institutional and cultural values which he cannot and probably would not wish to escape."

He is likely to be a science or technology major and live on the campus; to be very involved with sports and to be moving politically, if at all, from his parents' moderate conservatism towards being a liberal Democrat. He is no activist politically, nor fervently religious. Coffee is not his drink, nor tea, but he is more likely to drink cocoa than his drug using counterpart - and more likely to make use of proprietary "stay-awake" preparations.

GRADES SIMILAR

There is, the Blum study finds, no significant difference in grades received by the two groups of students, although the user is more likely to be considering dropping out of college.

The five colleges from which Blum's sample was taken are a private university, a Catholic university, a state university and college and a junior college. The drug-use rates ranged in the case of marijuana from a low of 10 per cent at the state university, situated in a small city in a rural area, to a high of 33 per cent at the state college, the largest of the five and that with the highest proportion of students majoring in the humanities.

The range for hallucinogen use was from 2 per cent of the students at the state university to 9 per cent at the state college, the study found.

A study of 5,480 students in four San Francisco-area high schools, while it did not involve the same intensive questioning, led the authors to write that they "would emphasize the apparent rapidity of the spread of illicit-exotic drug use, marijuana especially, but now including LSD and the amphetamines. We strongly suspect that the expansion will continue geographically downward by age."

This expansion downward has meant, according to Dr. Donald Louria, the president of the New York State Council on Drug Addiction, that drug use in high schools "is not far behind college use and in certain areas exceeds it."

USE MUSHROOMS

As a result, Louria said, it is far less possible in 1969 than in 1967 to link particular characteristics to drug use, especially in the case of marijuana.

"We're in an era of wide-spread use that is far beyond the confines of any one psychologically constructed group," he said. "It's now so much of a fad, its use so prevalent, that it can be anybody who is using it for a whole variety of reasons."

He said, however, that he felt the Blum study "shows the pattern," even if the pattern is perhaps a bit outmoded. "The only conclusion that you can draw," he said, "is that a certain type of individual in 1967 spearheaded and drug movement, centering around marijuana and LSD."

Louria said also that Blum's findings would still be valuable as guides to suggest, in any group of 10 students, "which five of the 10 would go on to either habitual use or become drug-dependent."

The Blum study notes that its follow-up survey found that in the case of metropolitan campuses, "the label of 'unusual' falls more and more on the non-user." It suggests that the factors uncovered by the study - personality, the parent-child relationship, economic and family background - combine with other factors to contribute to the use of illicit drugs.

The other elements include the atmosphere and location of the college, the pervasiveness of drug use on the campus, the availability of information about drugs through the mass media and "a drug-using society optimistic about effects of drugs and tolerant of insulated adolescent cultism and faddishness."

New Campus Survey Shows "Rebels" In Minority

A survey of American college students has shown that the "turned-on" generation is not as belligerant, anti-establishment and hop-headed as it appears to be.

In fact, the average male college student today is, if anything, more mature than his parents were at his age. He believes in the establishment, and only 9 per cent of his fellow students could be described as "revolutionaries" in the sense that they feel basic American institutions should be scrapped and replaced.

These are some of the major findings in a unique nationwide study made of student attitudes, values and beliefs in all types of colleges and universities, large and small, public, private and religious. The survey was made by Roper Research Associates and commissioned by Standard Oil Company (New Jersey). Although the study focused on male seniors in accredited four-year colleges and universities, it was broadened for comparative purposes to include smaller but similar surveys of college freshmen and alumni of the Class of 1964. In general, the three groups - freshmen, seniors and alumni - showed a marked similarity of views.

The survey, incorporating the results of intensive interviews on 96 campuses across the nation, gives an in-depth profile of today's college student. It is a picture that varies sharply from many widely-held impressions, including perhaps the chief one that campuses are a hotbed of student discontent and rebellion. On the contrary, a decided majority of seniors are optimistic about the future course of American society. Asked to appraise four basic institutions - the U.S. political system, judicial system, business and industry, higher education - large majorities call all four "basically sound."

A majority of students agree that the American system does need improvement, but they place the emphasis on improvement rather than upheaval. Furthermore, most of the undergraduates think individual efforts CAN bring about the needed improvement - and they personally intend to work toward that end in the years after graduation. While the seniors, alumni and freshmen are in essential agreement, the alumni are somewhat more critical, and the freshmen somewhat less critical than the seniors.

Surprisingly, in view of many reports of students' attitudes, seniors are less critical of American business and industry than they are of the political and judicial systems and of higher education. On the other hand, they have greater confidence in educational leaders than those in business and government.

In the opinion of seniors, the nation's four greatest problems are, in order: race relations (first, by a wide margin); crime and lawlessness; poverty and slum conditions; avoiding future wars. Alumni, though, place crime and lawlessness at the top of the problem list, and are almost as much concerned about inflation and the cost of living as they are about race relations.

The seniors were queried about their attitude toward student activity on the campus. Although only 34 per cent have been active in student movements, a clear majority of the seniors think that such activity has on the whole had a salutary effect. At the same time, an even larger number of seniors believe it has "gotten out of hand" in some instances.

Mixed feelings were expressed about the Students for a Democratic Society, the organization that has played a prominent role in the current campus disorders. A majority of freshmen and seniors said they agree with some of the goals of S.D.S. But a majority also disagreed with its methods to attain those goals. Only 4 per cent gave the organization their full approval.

Despite criticism of various aspects of the present system of higher education, the great majority of seniors expressed satisfaction with their college experience. The main points of criticism: the curriculum is too rigid, not related to life; the faculty is not challenging enough, insufficiently interested in students; students should have more voice in college affairs; there is too much emphasis on grading.

Many adjectives - angry, mixed-up, frustrated, lacking in any sense of values - have been applied to the present college generation. On the basis of this survey, such descriptions appear far off the mark. The overwhelming majority of freshmen and seniors are optimistic about their own futures. They know where they're going in terms of a career, and they fully expect to get there. Only 7 per cent of the seniors have not yet decided on a career choice. Top preference is for business followed by education, the professions and government service, in that order.

It is, by and large, a serious and socially-conscious college generation. When asked about the job qualities they valued most highly, freshmen and seniors alike put mentally stimulating work at the top of the list. A chance "to get to the top" - the traditional success syndrome - was far down in career requisites.

Naturally, the possibility if not the probability of military service is much on seniors' minds. Almost a third of the students expect to go into the armed forces right after graduation. The others hope to go to graduate school or start on their chosen careers. Most of the students are taking the prospect of military service in stride, althoug 27 per cent of the seniors say frankly they intend to try and avoid it - 25 per cent by legal means; 2 per cent by ANY means, including going to jail if necessary.

The students were also asked about their experiences and views on such personal subjects as drugs, sex and religion. Here, too, the responses run counter to some popular notions. Less than 25 per cent of the seniors said they had ever tried marijuana; only 3 per cent, LSD. However, almost half thought the sale of marijuana should be legalized, though under controlled conditions as with liquor. A majority of freshmen and nearly half the seniors are either opposed to premarital sexual relations or believe they should be limited to women they expect to marry. As for religion, well over half of the students might be called religious insofar as they expressed a belief in God as either a Supreme Being or a governing force that guides the universe.

The comparative survey of freshmen was designed to see if major changes occur in students' attitudes and beliefs during the course of their four-year college careers. The results suggest they do not. The attitudes, plans and outlook of freshmen are substantially the same as those of seniors. They differ only in degree.

The results of the alumni survey further indicate that no great changes will occur in graduates' attitudes, at least in the first few years after they leave the campus. If today's seniors follow in the path of the 1964 alumni, who were still in college when the present campus unrest had its start, they may become a little more critical generally of the American system. They may become less impressed with the competence of political and educational leaders. But even these changes will be of minor degree.

One Millianth Student In Work Study Program

The one millionth student to be enrolled in the Federally-supported College Work-Study program is Roxanne Lahti, 19, a sophomore student this fall at the University of Minnesota, Duluth campus.

She is one of 375,000 students throughout the country who will earn an estimated $485 each under the program this year to help pay educational expenses. The one million students who have participated in the five-year-old College Work-Study Program have held jobs supported through a Federal investment of approximately $450 million.

Miss Lahti grew up on a farm near Barnum, Minn., where she attended high school. During high school she was business manager of the school paper, played clarinet in the band, was a member of Future Teachers of America, and captain of the varsity cheerleaders. Her summer College Work-Study job was with the Duluth Zoo, where she took care of baby tigers and other young animals, and worked in the Zoo Museum. This employment was arranged by the college, since it is related to her career goal as a veterinarian.

"I have always loved animals," Miss Lahti said, "and I've been milking cows since I was four. I have done all the work of running a farm."

The U.S. Office of Education has invited Miss Lahti to attend a special ceremony commemorating this one millionth milestone in the College Work-Study Program to be held in Washington on September 10 at 11 a.m. in Room 5051, 330 Independence Avenue, S.W. A number of distinguished guests, including Senators Walter F. Mondale and Eugene McCarthy and Congressman John A. Blatnik of Minnesota, also have been invited to attend the ceremony.

"The College Work-Study Program, singly and in combination with other programs of student assistance, is a clear demonstration of a wise use of Federal resources in helping develop our human resources," said Associate Commissioner for Higher Education Preston Valien. "Our young people are enabled to attain their personal career objectives; and our society benefits from the larger contributions they are able to make as highly trained professional people."

The program provides employment, arranged for by the colleges, to help needy students pay their college expenses. The Federal Government pays up to 80 percent of a student's salary through grants made to the institution. The balance is paid by the college or an off-campus employer. Students work an average of 15 hours a week during the school year and 40 hours during summer or other vacation periods.

All of the students need their jobs to meet college expenses. Many of them also have obtained Federal financial aid through National Defense Student Loans, Educational Opportunity Grants, or both.

Most students work on-campus in cafeterias, libraries, laboratories, business offices, maintenance - in any kind of employment that advances the student's and college's pursuits. About one sixth of the students work off-campus for public or private nonprofit organizations, in hospitals, libraries, museums, police departments, or other local units of government.

The College Work-Study Program was originally authorized by the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964. The Higher Education Act of 1965 transferred responsibility for the program from the Office of Economic Opportunity to the U. S. Office of Education.

It rained yesterday and a lot of people got very wet walking to register at Boyden. The skies were grey and it was dark and ugly. It rained yesterday. Forecast for today, partly sunny, high temperatures in the low 70's, with a chance of scattered afternoon showers.

University Artist Specializes On Painting Moonscapes

Before men ever got near the moon, UMass painter Jim Hendricks had gone over it from one side to the other with a paintbrush.

Moonscapes have been Hendrick's specialty ever since he saw a moon probe photo of the giant Crater Copernicus over two years ago and used it as the basis for an abstract painting. Now his moonscapes are nationally-known and have been shown in nine juried exhibitions from one end of the country to the other within the past year.

Hendricks is still working from NASA and other photos but his approach is changing as cameras have gotten closer and closer to the moon surface and more and more detail has been revealed. His early works tended to be silvery abstractions; his current work is inclining more and more toward realism.

"As far as the moon goes realism is much more exciting than anything you could imagine at this point," he commented.

The UMass painter works either with conventional brushes or an airbrush, on canvases as large as ten feet by ten feet. His colors range from gray-blue through gray-brown and gray-green. One of his favorite formats is the multiple sequential image -- a dozen or so images in regular order on the same canvas.

Such a format is used in "Twelve-Stop Lunar Excursion," a compendium of what Hendricks thinks are the 12 most exciting moon features. Craters, rills, plains, peaks and domes are included.

Hendrick's favorite moonscape is still the one he started with -- the 70-mile wide Crater Copernicus. "I still haven't done Copernicus to my satisfaction," he said. "I want to get every little rock in next time."

His moonscapes have been shown in New York City galleries, and at universities and arts festivals throughout the country. Two of his pointings are part of a show now at the Smithsonian Institution National Air and Space Museum; 13 of his paintings are being exhibited at the Container Corporation of America Gallery in Chicago.

Hendricks says of his work: "The moon surface is a whole new world in many ways in its lack of air and lack of life. Working with its shapes and textures opens up a whole new world for a painter.'

It is a world that Hendricks will continue to work in as the first men on the moon explore it in detail. He sees the moon as "an endless source of material for a painter."

Noted Scholar to Take McIver Chair at UMass

Dr. Hans Speier of the Rand Corporation, one of the country's leading scholars i n the social sciences, has been appointed a professor and holder of a specially-created chair at the University of Massachusetts, it has been announced by Provost Oswald Tippo.

Effective Sept. 1, Dr. Speier will hold a chair named for Dr. Robert M. McIver, Columbia University professor emeritus. Dr. Speier's appointment is a joint one in the UMass departments of government and sociology and he will teach graduate and undergraduate students in both departments.

Although he is best known as a student of war and international conflict, distinguished contributions in a number of fields have earned for Dr. Speier a reputation as a modern Renaissance man. He has done landmark work in political sociology and is almost as well-known for his contributions in the sociology of knowledge and the sociology of literature.

In addition to his leading role in social science research, Dr. Speier has a reputation as a person of broad cultural interests. He is known as a scholar able to cross traditional disciplinary boundaries and to stimulate persons in many different fields to work together.

Born in Berlin in 1905, Dr. Speier received his Ph.D. in sociology from the University of Heidelberg in 1928. He came to the U.S. in 1933 and served as professor of sociology on the graduate faculty of the New School for Social Research. He was also visiting professor at the Universities of Illinois and Michigan.

Dr. Speier held a number of key government posts during the World War II years. He was section chief and later acting chief of the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service of the Federal Communications Commission; propaganda policy advisor to the Chief of Overseas Branch, Office of War Information; and associate chief of the Occupied Areas Division of the State Department.

He joined the Rand Corporation in 1948 and headed Rand's Social Science Division from its beginning until the Research Council was formed. He has been a member of the council since 1961 and was its chairman from 1961 to 1962.

He has been a fellow at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences and at the Council on Foreign Relations. He is a Fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and has served as consultant to such organizations as the U.S. Scientific Advisory Board, the U.S. State Department and the Ford Foundation.

University Health Services Ready to Serve UMass Community

While any community of 18,185 people must expect to provide a variety of health services for its citizens, an educational community as large as UMass has a unique challenge in the area of health. With a large number of young adults living away from the normal home environment, the University must provide a wide variety of resources to meet a spectrum of health problems.

The first responsibility of the UMass Health Services is to provide students with high-quality medical care through the outpatient clinic and the infirmary, supported by laboratory, X-ray, physical therapy and other services. That this responsibility is being met is best indicated by the fact that student usage of this facility has risen from an average of two visits per year prior to 1960 to the current rate of six visits per student per year.

Because of the University's rapidly expanding student population, the physical problem of prompt handling of outpatient visits has resulted in long range plans for an addition to the present infirmary. Tentatively scheduled for completion in 1972, the addition is designed to expand the present outpatient clinic and will also contain an emergency dental unit.

Calls for help with emotional problems keep the staff of the Mental Health Service busy throughout the year. A considerable amount of time is devoted to a preventive community mental health program. Concerted efforts are being made to work with the student personnel staff, the heads of residences and the residence counselors to establish a network of helping services designed to enable these staff members to recognize and meet various emotional health needs of the residents with whom they are in daily contact.

In the area of environmental health and safety, the UMass Health Services bears the responsibility for surveillance of fraternities, sororities and food services. It carries on a comprehensive testing program of dairy products, sandwiches and other food available from campus vending machines. As a result, several potential health problems have been resolved before they could materialize.

Requests for students for health education programs continue to increase. The staff voluntarily participates in informal health education activities proposed by different student groups as well as by individual students. Such activities usually materialize as problem-oriented discussion sessions in the residence halls but in addition there have been question and answer columns in the Daily Collegian and spot health announcements over the campus radio station WMUA.

The University has been fortunate in attracting a staff of young, well-trained professionals who exhibit a keen interest in the health and welfare of young adults. That the quality of this staff has been maintained despite rapid expansion in health services is the best indication of the overall high level of the University Health Services.

NASA Aide to Teach In UM Geology Dept.

UMass officials have confirmed the appointment as visiting associate professor of geology, a top ranked NASA official who resigned his national post because of internal difficulties within the space agency.

Dr. Donald U. Wise, formerly chief scientist and deputy director of the Office of Lunar Exploration, National Aeronautics and Space Administration, will teach some introductory classes in geology and advanced classes in structural and lunar geology, University officials said.

Wise was given the responsibility of the moon samples brought back to earth by Astronauts Neil Armstrong, Buzz Aldrin and Michael Collins.

Wise received his bachelor's degree from Franklin and Marshall his master's degree from California Institute of Technology and his doctorate in geology from Princeton.

A native of Reading, Pa., Wise was on a leave of absence from Franklin and Marshall where he was an associate professor of geology.

University officials did not disclose the salary Wise would be paid, but acknowledged that it was $7,000 a year less than his salary with the Apollo program.

Wise, university officials reported, is anxious to return to his teaching career.

However, reports from within NASA in the past few days indicate that a feud over control of future Apollo and other space exploration has been brewing for some time among the scientists and engineers who are responsible for making key decisions.

WMUA Points For Stereo, Wider Campus Appeal

By PATT FRANCIS
Senior Reporter

For the first time in its 21-year history, campus radio station WMUA is broadcasting before the first day of classes. Although they have only a skeleton crew at present, there are plans to broadcast as much as possible, including live from the physical plant textbook sales area.

Dick Stadlen, general manager of the station, revealed plans for the coming year. The most important thing at the moment, according to Stadlen, is plans for the station to increase its broadcasting power to 1000 watts, and to install stereo broadcasting equipment.

This plan is contingent on favorable action by the UMass Board of Trustees. According to Stadlen, the station has not kept pace with the growth of the University.

WMUA is still broadcasting at the same 10-watt power that they have had since the station went to an FM frequency in 1954. Although this allows a broadcasting radius of about 18-20 miles, WMUA's main concern is to obtain a better quality of reception on campus. There is some difficulty in reception in the Southwest area, because the high buildings block the path of the radio waves.

An increase in broadcasting power will make up for the blockage and improve overall campus reception.

The stereo installation would also improve the quality of broadcast reception, by making reception on monoral receivers clearer, and allowing for full stereo reception on appropriately-equipped sets.

Stadlen said that so far, the station has been put off from one committee (of the Trustees) to another. But he has reason to believe that the report will be out in time for the October 30 meeting of the Board of Trustees. If the motion is approved, WMUA will submit an application to the Federal Communications Com - mission on Nov. 1. FCC action usually takes two to four months, but, if the application is approved Stadlen hopes to have the new installation operating by the end of this academic year.

The changeover will be accomplished by remodeling the station's spare studio to accommodate for the stereo equipment, and installing stereo equipment in the present broadcasting studio.

Stadlen stressed the urgency of the situation by saying "If we wait too long, it will be impossible for us to increase our power. The FCC awards power increases on a first-come, first-served basis. If someone near our broadcast frequency applies first, they'll get the increase, and we may never be able to expand." He feels that the station can fulfill the FCC technical requirements for stations at the 1000-watt frequency with little, if any, trouble.

WMUA's basic intent, according to Stadlen, is to serve the needs of the UMass-community, and the college community in general. Consequently, there has been an increase in broadcast of contemporary music, and educational radio that students will enjoy. "Our idea is to educate with music. We are, however, trying to get away from the word "educational" for our talk shows," said Stadlen. One thing that is being tentatively planned for this year is an open forum type show, with guests, or a moderator, where listeners can air their views about events of interest to them.

In addition, WMUA hopes to increase its broadcasting hours to 24-hours-a-day as soon as they have enough people to fill the spots.

The WMUA studios are located in the basement of the engineering building.

The University of Massachusetts Marching Band is again in training to present students with the fine display of showmanship, musicianship and spirit that has become its trademark. Because of the overwhelming response it received, the Band will present for the first home game its feature Simon and Garfunkel show from last year including songs such as "Mrs. Robinson," "Fakin' It," and "Scarborough Fair." The first home game is September 27 against Buffalo. Come and see why we say UMass has the Best Band in the East!

Congressional Grass Views Seen Reflection of Ideology

The Senate is still not a place where you can reasonably expect to hear much talk about the new drug culture or criticism of stiff drug-use penalties. But last week there were two maverick senators who slipped outside the hallowed chamber to make sure direct comments on these subjects.

Sens. George McGovern (D-S.D.) and Harold E. Huges (D-Iowa) both took aim on the present Federal law for the sale or possession of marijuana.

The law provides that first offenders be sentenced to a minimum of five years' imprisonment with a maximum of 20 years. For second offenders, the limits of the penalty are 10 and 40 years.

Some state laws are tougher. Speaking before the United Planning Organization, the District of Columbia's anti-poverty agency, Sen. Hughes cited the case of an 18-year-old first offender in Prince George, Va., who was sent to jail for 20 years on a charge of selling marijuana.

"Does anyone believe there is any sanity or justice to this sadistic level of punishment?" Hughes asked.

He told the D.C. anti-poverty workers: "Our laws governing drug use and distribution are primitive, inconsistent, unenforceable and barbaric."

Significantly, Hughes is chairman of a special Senate subcommittee on alcoholism and narcotics.

Although the former Iowa governor favors "strict and efficient" laws to control drug abuse, sources close to the senator say he does not consider marijuana in a class with most other illegal drugs.

Hughes does not go so far as to advocate legalization of marijuana, but he said last week: "It is my conviction that if we try to turn off the turned-off generation with excessively harsh punishment a-long, we will simply turn them on all the more irreversibuly."

Sen. McGovern told the convention of the American Psychological Assn. he feels drugs "are now as much a part of the youth subculture as alcohol is part of adult society."

He did not specifically say he condoned the use of such drugs. It is perhaps inconceivable that a senator from South Dakota, Iowa or any other state, would, at this point intime.

McGovern did note their wide use at the Woodstock Music Festival in Bethel, N.Y., last month. And while not relating his impressions in any way to that aspect of the gathering, the senator pointed out that Bethel was the third largest city in New York state that week-end, but "there were virtually no crimes of violence."

The South Dakota Democrat also said: "It is hypocrisy to jail youngsters for five years for possession of marijuana while permitting men to make fortunes selling cancer in a cigarette pack."

The Nixon administration, however, takes a different view than those of the two midwestern senators.

In his message to Congress on the subject of drug abuse July 14, the President proposed reforms to strike down the self-incriminating marijuana tax that was attacked earlier this year by the Supreme Court.

The President did not, however, propose to change the Federal marijuana penalties. In fact, he urged Congress to bring the penalties for possession and sale of LSD up to the same severity as marijuana.

Sources close to the Hughes subcommittee said the panel will almost certainly recommend a more lenient scale of punishment for marijuana offenders.

Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.) who is chairman of the full Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, is said to be less convinced than Hughes that marijuana should be considered much apart from other illegal substances.

However, in July Yarborough introduced a comprehensive drug control bill which among other reforms would take marijuana out of the Internal Revenue code, where it presently comes under the stringent penalties. It would classify marijuana instead with other stimulants and degressants governed in the more lenient Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act.

Beyond their significance with regard to the issue of drug abuse in the nation, the comments of McGovern and Hughes have some political implications.

Both men are considered as possibilities for the national Democratic ticket in 1972. If they are only longshot possibilities for the presidential nomination, they are nevertheless plausible possibilities for the vice-presidential choice.

With Sen. Eugene McCarthy, the candidate of the alienated young in 1968, now leaving the Senate, McGovern and Hughes appear interested in the constituency he may be leaving behind.

One of Hughes' aides said this past week: "I think this marijuana problem is really a symbolic issue in terms of trying to get through and reach the young people."

Fitzpatrick Named Assoc. Dean of Students

By MARK SILVERMAN
News Editor

W. Daniel Fitzpatrick has been named associate dean of students at the University of Massachusetts Dean of Students William F. Field has announced.

As associate dean, Fitzpatrick will be responsible for the administration of all residence halls and the supervision of area coordinators, student activities and the Housing Office.

"Mr. Fitzpatrick has had extensive experience in all of these areas," according to Dean Field, "and the integration of residence hall and Housing Office services with student activities promises to be further developed through his leadership."

Field added that Fitzpatrick was suggested by a committee of two students, one faculty member and one administrator. "He was the overwhelming choice of the selection committee which felt that his previous positions in student affairs made him the perfect person for the job," Dean Field said.

For the past two years, Fitzpatrick has served as director of student organizations and activities at the University of Michigan, an office which functions in the place of a dean of students office. In this position, he was responsible for 300 student groups, including student government, fraternities, sororities and special interest groups, as well as for student discipline and personnel records.

From 1966 to 1967 Fitzpatrick was assistant director of student organizations and activities of Michigan. He served as assistant dean of students at Cornell University from 1963 to 1966. The 35 year old Buffalo, N.Y. native received his B.S. degree from Cornell University in 1959 and his M. Ed. from Cornell in 1965.

Student Unrest May Decrease October's Draft Call

By JOHN STAVROS
Issue Editor

Student unrest has again shown its effect on the Pentagon, as reduced draft calls for the fall to ease campus unrest are expected.

Sources in the Defense Department state that reduction of October's draft call from the previously set figure of 29,000, and further reduction of November and December draft calls are being considered.

Officials hope that reductions of this type will quiet student unrest regarding the draft, but also realize these changes do not attempt to remedy the draft inequities charged by many. Officials quickly add that campus unrest is only one of several factors considered when the draft call figures are reviewed.

Earlier the Pentagon had decided on a cut of 100,000 men from the Armed Forces to help achieve congressionally directed reduction in defense spending.

Further manpower cutbacks are expected this month, including about a 50,000 man slash in the Air Force.

Decisions to be made in the next few months may also effect the draft call. Officials report that if more units are brought home from Vietnam the Army may consider a greater reduction than the 34,000 man cut scheduled for the fall.

Officials say that is it becomes possible to reduce the October draft call, it automatically follows that the November and December draft calls will be lower. December is no problem since the Pentagon traditionally takes in men only during the first half of the month and observes the Christmas holiday during the last couple of weeks.

Draft needs are closely tied to volunteer enlistments. Army officers in charge of recruiting say they expect to meet or exceed their enlistment goals for the rest of 1969, which would lower draft requirements.

Draft calls this year have ranged from a high of 33,700 in February to July's 22,300. Requests for August, September and October have been in the 29,000 range.

The "Cage" is getting a new roof. The new material should cut down the leaking and overheating that has plagued the building in the past.

Israelis Hit Commandos With Amphibian Assault

By HAL McCLURE
Associated Press Writer

TEL AVIV AP - An Israeli amphibious force with tanks and air support thrust into Egypt across the Gulf of Suez Tuesday and an army spokesman said 100-150 Egyptians were killed in "one of the most daring raids' since the six-day war of June 1967.

Defense Minister Moshe Dayan hailed the attack as a "heavy and shocking blow" to the Egyptians and warned the Cairo government to expect "even heavier strikes."

Cairo radio claimed the invasion staff, addressing a crowded news was repulsed with the loss to Israel of three planes, two torpedo conference in Tel Aviv, said 110 boats and heavy casualties. Is- to 150 Egyptians died in the raid rael reported one plane lost to that lasted from 2 a.m. until noon, antiaircraft fire and one soldier according to plan. There was no slightly wounded. estimate of Egyptian wounded.

In a nationwide radio and television broadcast, Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir told her people: "The raid was meant to strike at the bases and concentrations of the Egyptian army which have served as a base for commando units laying mines and launching attacks against Israeli positions."

The tank and troop landing the Israelis said, took place near El Hasayer, about 28 miles south of the Port of Suez at the southern end of the canal. At that point the gulf forms a 25-mile-wide barrier between the Egyptian mainland the Israeli-occupied Sinai Desert peninsula.

At the same time, Israeli planes attacked scores of military targets, including a "devastating attack" on a major Soviet-built surface-to-air missile battery at El Hasayer, Israeli officers said.

A senior member of the general

Many Egyptian soldiers fled rather than fight, the general officer said.

He added: "What can the Egyptians do about Israeli tanks appearing on their territory in broad daylight?"

He estimated 2,000 to 3,000 Egyptian troops were in the area when the attack was launched, but he declined to give the size of the Israeli force.

The officer declined also to speculate whether any Soviet advisers were among the Egyptian casualties. Since the war of June 5-10, 1967, the Soviet Union has posted military advisers through the Egyptian chain of command.

He described the raid's objective as "to cause as much damage as possible and to pose problems for Egypt on one of its exposed flanks."

The Israeli troops and armor returned to their base from Tas Za'farana in the boats that brought them to the mainland.

Harvard Suspends Professor For Urging School Takeover

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - Harvard University announced Tuesday night it suspended for one semester and reduced to one year the teaching appointment of Dr. Jack R. Stauder for "grave misconduct" in advocating a student takeover last April of University Hall.

Last April the school called 400 police to evict student anti-ROTC protesters, triggering a tumultous month of smaller demonstrations and a student strike by some sympathizers of the anti-war, anti-draft movement.

The decision means that Stauder, an instructor in social anthropology, loses his three-year appointment and is given instead a job as instructor for one year, at his old salary, on the condition that he not be allowed to teach the first semester.

Stauder also lost a promotion to lecturer and a salary increase which had been recommended.

A joint committee composed of faculty members and administrators unanimously found Stauder guilty of "neglect of duty" in "participating in and encouraging the forcible occupation of University Hall."

That and his "refusal" to explain his actions to the committee were grounds for "immediate termination," the committee report said. Stauder appeared before the committee July 28, read a statement, demanded an open hearing this fall when students return from vacation, then left, the school said.

Harvard said the committee decided not to recommend he be fired outright because recent protests have tended to obscure the duties and responsibilities of some younger faculty members.

Of the nearly 200 persons arrested by police in University Hall, 14 had some connection with the faculty, as teachers or instructors. Thirteen of them were half-time, a designation usually given to graduate students. Strauder was the other.

One graduate student was given another appointment as a teaching fellow. Another said he was leaving. The rest had already left or were making other plans.

Hurricane Gerda Is Flood Threat To Eastern Mass

Hurricane Gerda's wash is still smashing the Northeast coast, as Hurricane warnings are in effect from Portland to Eastport, Maine. Gale warnings are up from Portland to Block Island.

Presently there are 30-40 knot winds with seas three to six feet above normal in the Massachusetts Bay area. The Massachusetts Civil Defense Agency said Tuesday that the possibility of flash flooding in eastern and central Massachusetts is "a matter of serious concern."

Portions of eastern Massachusetts received between 3 and 5 inches of rain since 3 a.m. Monday said C.D. Director Allan Zenowitz. The Worcester area had received 3.9 inches.

Nixon, Advisors Stage Meeting On Viet Strategy

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon will convene his top military and diplomatic advisors at the White House Friday for a new look at what strategy to pursue on Vietnam.

The next U.S. troop withdrawal, possibilities for another peace move in Paris, the impact of Ho Chi Minh's death, and the U.S. split with Saigon on cease-fire observance are among leading items on the Vietnam docket.

Presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler, in announcing the special session Tuesday termed it a general review which will "go into all matters" on Vietnam. He said there would be no immediate announcement afterwards.

The death last week of North Vietnamese President Ho Chi Minh has injected a new element into the strategy picture, though U.S. analysts are not yet sure of what the long range implications may be.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

WASHINGTON (AP) - Congress paid farewell tribute to Everett McKinley Dirksen Tuesday, and President Nixon called him a man of greater influence and impact than most who served in the White House.

"He was an outspoken partisan, he was an individualist of the first rank," the President said.

"Everett Dirksen added a grace and eloquence and courtliness to the work 'politician,' " Nixon said. "That is how he became leader of the minority."

As a senator, the President likened Dirksen to Daniel Webster and John C. Calhoun. As an orator, Nixon said, Dirksen ranked with Winston Churchill and William Jennings Bryan.

"He cultivated an appearance that made him seem old fashioned, but his character was as modern as Saturn V," Nixon said.

At noon Wednesday, Dirksen's body is to be borne from the Capital to the National Presbyterian Church for funeral services.

On Thursday, Dirksen's family will escort his body to funeral services at Pekin, Ill., his birthplace on the plains.

By executive order. Nixon decreed that "as an added mark of respect" all flags on federal property be flown at half staff until the interment at Pekin.

DETROIT (AP) - A Negro was rated among the top four candidates Tuesday as Detroiters chose two nominees for mayor in the city's first test of law and order and racial climate since the bloody riots of 1967.

Despite involvement of 28 candidates for mayor, 113 for city council seats, 22 for city clerk and 20 for city treasurer, the nonpartisan primary campaign appeared to have generated only mild voter interest.

The Negro among those considered leading contenders is Wayne County Auditor Richard Austin, 56. His chief rivals were expected to be Wayne County Sheriff Roman Gribbs, Councilwoman Mary V. Beck and Walter Shamie, a businessman-promoter.

The final winner Nov. 4 will succeed Mayor Jerome P. Cavanagh, who did not seek a third four-year term.

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) - A 31-year-old great grandson of the late Russian novelist Leo Tolstoy has been appointed director of finance for a new Swedish operated ferry service between Portland and Yarmouth, N.S., the company announced Tuesday.

Stig Leuhusen, director of Lion Ferry, said Andrej Tolstoy of Gothenburg, Sweden, will begin his duties in Portland, Nov. 3.

The announcement, made at the firm's headquarters at Halmstad, said Tolstoy will work jointly with Terben K. Andersen of Cape Elizabeth, who has been appointed director of marketing and public relations. The company said the ferry is scheduled to begin daily round trip service next summer.

Tightening of Securities

Many Administrations Take Steps To Accommodate Student Demands

WASHINGTON (AP) - Radicals warming up for a new round of student upheavals can expect to find tougher ground rules on campus this fall.

A nationwide Associated Press survey shows that university and college administrators, once helplessly baffled by violence behind ivy-covered walls, now are determined to deal decisively and firmly with forces seeking to obstruct the normal life of the academic community.

At the same time, the survey discloses that administrators have taken steps to accommodate constructive student demands for more involvement in the day-to-day conduct of college and university affairs.

Other survey findings:

--An increasing number of institutions are moving to offer more opportunities to minority groups and to widen the field of black students.

--Campus security forces have been beefed up at many schools. Administrators say they will rely more on court orders, such as injunctions, to curb radical activists. And many say they won't hesitate to call police onto campus when necessary.

On a majority of the campuses, students this fall will be filling places on faculty and administrative councils previously off limits to them.

No administrator will predict, however, that these and other changes already put into effect are enough to head off disruptions.

What emerges most strongly in the AP survey is the determination of administrators to avoid the image of the university president powerless in his own domain when violence strikes.

The University of Texas has increased its security force "partly because of our growth and partly because we want to be ready for anything," says a university spokesman. The force includes some 50 officers trained in FBI-sponsored schools for peace officers.

Reflecting public impatience with recurring waves of campus turmoil is a series of bills passed in 20 state legislatures in the past four months.

Most of these measurers prohibit blocking buildings, interfering with classes and intimidating members of the university community.

Illustrative of the tougher policies laid down by university administrators is a new set of guidelines from the University of North Carolina. At the outset, it declares:

"Any student or faculty member-including full time or part time instructors-who willfully by use of violence, force, coercion, threat, intimidation or fear obstructs, disrupts or attempts to obstruct or disrupt the normal operations or functions of any of the component institutions of the university, or who incites others to do so shall be subject to suspension, expulsion, discharge or dismissal from the university. . ."

A group which says it intends to speak for the "quiet majority" is the reorganized Association of Student Governments, which has provided services to students on 300 campuses over the past five years.

And the conservative Young Americans for Freedom pledged at a convention last month to "sock it to the Left" in the new academic year.

At the University of North Carolina, students have formed a "Hayakawa Society" - named after San Francisco State President S. I. Hayakawa, famed for his defiance of radical activists - to speak for what it terms "the silent majority."

Taking up the issues which loom again this year as possible targets of student unrest, administrators have sought to meet needs which a half dozen years ago were not recognized as major problems on campus.

Yale, for example, is offering new degree programs in African-American and urban studies. A new Afro-American center has been established.

At the University of Denver, students have gained curricula and have participated in the selection of two vice chancellors.

Ohio State University has added student representatives to committees formerly dominated by staff members, including the Faculty Council and the Council of Academic Affairs. Ohio State also is offering a new major in Afro-American Studies.

At Catholic University in Washington, D.C., male and female students have gained permission to visit each other in dormitories.

Georgetown University, also in the capital, is increasing black representation among its 7,000 students from 2 to 3 per cent. More than half the black freshmen this fall will be on full scholarship.

At San Francisco State, Earl Jones, veteran with President Hayakawa of some of the roughest campus upheavals to date, believes there is a need this fall for something more than administrative and curriculum changes in the nation's universities and colleges.

"I see a terrible need for reconciliation," Jones says.

"People - students, faculty members and administrators - have forgotten that they have a common interest in the survival of the institution. . ."

Harvard Ph. D.-Smithsonian Curator Named Head of Anthropology Dept.

Dr. Richard B. Woodbury, curator of North American Anthropology at the Smithsonian Institution, has been appointed head of a new department of anthropology at U-Mass, it has been announced by Provost Oswald Tippo.

The anthropology department, until this year a program in the department of sociology, has a faculty of 11, 80 undergraduate majors and approximately 30 graduate students. A master's program has been offered since 1965 and a doctoral program since 1968. The department's areas of specialization are the cultural anthropology of Eastern Europe and Southeast Asia and New World archeology.

A Smithsonian staff member since 1963, Dr. Woodbury had served before that on faculties at Harvard University, University of Arizona, University of Kentucky and Columbia University.

At the Smithsonian he was curator of the Division of Archaeology curator of the Division of Cultural Anthropology, acting head and then chairman of the Smithsonian Office of Anthropology and finally curator of North American Anthropology.

A graduate of Harvard, he studies anthropology at Columbia before returning to Harvard to earn M.A. and Ph. D. degrees. During 30 years beginning in 1938 he took part in 12 major archaeological expeditions or research projects in many parts of the world.

Dr. Woodbury was with the 1938-1939 Peabody Museum's Awatovi Expedition in the Hopi area of Arizona, was archaeologist for the United Fruit Company s 1947 - 1950 Zaculeu Project in Guatemala, did a 1953-1956 study of Zuni prehistory at the El Morro National Monument in New Mexico, a study of prehistoric irrigation from 1964-1968 on the Tehuacan Valley of Mexico, and a 1964 field survey of pre-industrial water control systems in Lybia, Egypt, Pakistan and Israel, to list some examples.

Dr. Richard Woodbury

He has served as editor of several archaeological publications, one of which, the Arid Lands Research Newsletter, he founded. He is author or co-author of over 100 publications in his field.

Dr. Woodbury is a fellow of the American Anthropological Association, of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the Archaeological Institute of America. He is a former member of the National Research Council and a former president of the Society for American Archaeology.

Ordinary Headaches at Registration

Registration could have been worse. Registrar Ralph D. Jones told a Collegian reporter that "we thought it would be busier. . .we were prepared for something worse."

Out of 90,000 total course selections only 4,700 selections could not be accommodated, about 5%. Mr. Jones said this was just slightly worse than last January. The major trouble spots with long lines were the English and Psychology departments, as expected.

"I didn't see anybody in at 8:30 and not getting through till 5:00," reported the registrar.

When asked if there were any unsolved problems lurking in student schedules, Mr. Jones said he didn't think there were going to be any out of the ordinary.

UMass Co-Captains
Tom York and Ed Sarno

Coach Fusia Sure of One Thing
'We'll Be Better This Year'

Vic Fusia never had a year like he did last season. The UMass coach had had nothing but success in his long coaching career. He had taken UMass, the doormat of the Yankee Conference, to being the perennial team to beat. The Fusia team has transformed UMass football from small-college status in New England to a place of prominence among the major area powers.

Victories have been many, the stars also. Greg Landry, Milt Morin, John McCormack, Ed Toner, Phil Vandersea and Terry Swanson, all have graduated to professional football after being tutored in the Fusia system.

Therefore the 2-8 year of last season was a difficult experience.

And though he won't say it, Fusia may be looking forward to this season more than any other. Fusia has been a winner and he wants that title back again.

The DAILY COLLEGIAN talked to the UMass coach prior to a recent practice session and got his outlook to the fast approaching season.

Before any questions were even asked, Fusia said, emphatically, "We'll be better than last year. I have to make that clear right now. We won't have a year like we had last year."

And that answered a lot of questions right there.

A common question asked is what are strengths and weaknesses. It's a question Fusia finds hard to answer. "Everyone always is asking that and I really don't know what I can answer. Our greatest strength is a great spirit, that has been shown in practice. It's as fine an attitude as I've seen.

"Another strength is fine leadership from our captains Tom York and Ed Sarno. And thirdly the senior group is being pushed by good competition from the underclass boys. These are our greatest strengths."

Pinpointing weaknesses, Fusia alluded to a trouble spot of last year, the offensive line. "We have to get better performance from our veteran linemen who are capable of improved performances. This is essential to our success."

Fusia however added, "We haven't picked out one position really for more attention. Everything is getting a large amount of attention. We are concerned with all aspects of the team."

The Coach when asked if he had changed his approach to the season, since he was cooing off such a poor one, pointed out, "We can only do what we know best.

We have made some changes in some areas due to our personnel. And we have re-assessed our teaching of the game. But we have to stick with those things which we feel we can do the best."

UMass has been a dominant force in Yankee Conference play for many years, and Fusia is hoping to return to that position. "We want to this year, as our main objective, to get back into the Yankee Conference title fight. We always have the objective, when we start a season, to play a good brand of football. That has to be a main objective of any team.

"And, after last season, we have the third objective of settling a few scores with some people."

Going Big Time??

The Yankee Conference has a rule, the 20 Formula, preventing unlimited scholarships to athletes. It is a rule that was made to bring the schools closer together competitively. And that the rule has accomplished.

But Yankee Conference schools cannot play only other Yankee Conference schools. And this is where the rule has been a disaster. Whereas schools like Maine and Vermont do not take on rigorous outside foes for the most part, UMass is playing the likes of Buffalo, which is a burgeoning eastern power and Boston College which recruits with enthusiastic fervor.

UMass is playing these schools with an albatross around their neck in the person of the Yankee Conference 20 formula. They must play the Boston Colleges, and Buffalos, with far thinner personnel. Besides being an underdog in all such games, these sort of contests physically weaken the team for conference games.

UMass should make a decision sometime. Do they want to continue playing bigger outside schools with a smaller team, or do they want to compete evenly. If the school is to go big time athletically, the Yankee Conference is not a suitable launching pad.

Vic Fusia – Starting 9th

UMass Coaches Offer Wealth of Experience

Success has been synonymous with Vic Fusia's football tenure at the University of Massachusetts. Dedication, efficiency and organization are three of the ingredients that the knowledgeable mentor has parleyed into one of the area's finest overall coaching records. Eight years of molding and building the Redmen into a highly respectable team has resulted in Massachusetts reaching an all-time prestige peak. Fusia's record of 49 wins, 23 losses and 1 tie is the best, percentage wise, of all Massachusetts football coaches. This fall will mark the ninth year for Fusia at the Redmen football helm, and only one other head coach, Harold "Kid" Gore who coached from 1919-1927 has served for as many years in the head coaching capacity.

A native of Pittsburgh, Coach Fusia attended Wilkinsburg, (Pa.) HS and Mt. St. Michael's Academy (Bronx, N.Y.). He graduated from Manhattan College in 1938 with a Bachelor of Science degree and as an undergraduate was an outstanding tailback for the Jaspers. Following graduation Vic taught one year at Bernard School for Boys in New York before entering the Navy. He served two years in the Pacific with the 7th Fleet Force and was discharged in 1946 with the rank of Lieutenant Junior Grade.

Fusia coached at Rankin (Pa.) HS in 1946-47 where he lost only two league games in two years. He then moved to Indiana (Pa.) HS and climaxed three successful seasons with an undefeated team in 1950. In 1951 he began a four year stay at Brown University where he served as backfield coach. In 1955 Vic moved to the University of Pittsburgh to serve as backfield coach and first assistant. During his six years at Pitt, the Panthers were rated one of the top independent college teams in the nation with Fusia being accorded much of the credit for the team's success.

Milt Piepul's second year on the Massachusetts football staff will mark his twenty-sixth year in the college coaching ranks. He spent twenty-two years in the Ivy League as an assistant coach, 11 years under Earl Brown and Tuss McLaughary at Dartmouth and then eleven years at Brown before moving to Holy Cross where he was offensive backfield coach for two seasons.

A native of Springfield, Mass., Piepul entered Notre Dame University in 1937 where he was an outstanding fullback and defensive linebacker. He was captain of the Fighting Irish during his senior year, 1940, and he played for the Detroit Lions in the NFL after his graduation. A fine and thorough teacher of the fundamentals of the game, Piepul has made a real contribution to the Redmen coaching staff.

A native of Winston-Salem, N.C., "Dub" Fesperman attended Gray High School where he lettered in both football and baseball. He graduated in 1956 from Duke University with a Bachelor of Arts Degree in Education and lettered three years with the Blue Devil football squad and four years with the baseball team. He was the All - Atlantic Coach Conference second baseman in 1955.

QUARTERBACK

Following in Greg Landry's footsteps is no easy task but Tim Adams proved in 1968 that he is a capable performer in his own right.

In the face of constant fire, this poised performer did a yoeman job in accounting for over half his team's total offense. This Wellesley native has shown that he has the ability, and in his senior year he could well be one of the top quarterbacks in New England. Barring injury to supporting personnel, don't discount this possibility.

Mike Marchev, knock on wood, will be the backup. Between baseball and football, he has broken a leg as well as both shoulders. When healthy, he is very fast and is a good passer.

Ken Hughes will help also. Few people will forget the job he did against BC last fall coming off the bench in the late stages to whip the Redmen to a quick touchdown.

Also, on the quarterback roster, is junior college transfer Tom Holmes and sophomore Marty Evans.

HALFBACKS

An experienced cast aided by a promising newcomer could restore the UMass ground game to its traditional strength. This was a weak spot last year but this can be attributed to the team's overall drop in performance. The prospects for this fall are bright indeed.

ADAMS SCAVONE MARCHANDO CUMMINGS PARNELL CORSALETTI COONEY McGARRY

Pat Scavone returns as the leading runner. He broke into the lineup for good at wingback last fall with an impressive 156 yard game in the 49-0 win over Vermont.

The most versatile performer is Everett's Gerry Grasso. A good runner and receiver, he poses a definite problem for enemy defenses.

Senior Craig Lovell, a high school teammate of Adams, will work out of the tailback slot. A strong runner, barring injury, he will be a big help.

A promising newcomer is transfer Art Corsaletti. Very quick, with good moves, he was the running star of last spring's intrasquad scrimmage.

Swift sophomore Mike Sawyer should see a lot of action in the running back spot this season.

FULLBACK

Fullback promises to be a strong position with a healthy combination of size, speed, strength and experience.

Co-captian Ed Sarno, 6', 230, from Waltham leads the way. Injuries have plagued him but he is a strong blocker and a key man in Fusia's offense.

Soph Dick Cummings, also 6', 230. is an excellent prospect. A real 'gut' runner with good speed, he hails from Williamstown. Cummings led the frosh in rushing last fall despite running on two injured ankes for most of the year.

Also expected to add to the position are Dick Heavey and Larry Fortuhoff.

OFFENSIVE CENTER

With the graduation of Bob Sheehan and Noel Schlabick, the center spot is up in the air. This year's candidates have football experience but in different roles.

John Dubsinski, 6'2", 190, from Gardner, is a veteran at the position. A hard worker, he manned center during spring practice and in the past has done well on the special units.

Bill Byron, a 6'3, 230 pound junior from Decatur, Ga., will be in the running for the berth. Formerly a linebacker, his size is an asset.

Ron Marino, a 6'2, 225 pound, sophomore, is the third man in the running for the center spot. A Beverly native, Marino was bulwark on last year's undefeated frosh.

OFFENSIVE GUARDS

Outside of senior Bruce Fulton, this position is a relatively unknown quantity with a new face certain to be present.

There is little doubt about Fulton however. This 5'11, 200 pound Canton native has plenty of experience and knows his way among the inner trench of football warfare.

Pierre Marchando, 6'1, 230, from Cambridge, is a potential standout. A fullback in high school, speed and size are his forte and if he can avoid the injury jinx which has blocked him at UMass he could be a big help.

Junior Edward Flaim is another chief competitor at guard. Injured last year, he is likely to see a good deal of action. Soph Richie Etna is also a possibility, as is junior Joe Riccio.

OFFENSIVE TACKLES

DICK DONLIN BOB DONLIN

Brothers Together on Offense Line

Donlin's younger brother Bob could lend a hand as the season progresses. He started on last year's undefeated frosh squad in a line which proved to be very tough for opponents.

OFFENSIVE ENDS

The end position is substantially different than that of a year ago with some relatively new faces which only saw action in the latter part of the season. Gone are Nick Warnock who averaged 16 yards a reception, tight end Alan Becker and split end Don Young.

Nick McGarry shapes up as the possible stand out of this year's crop. A 6'5, 215 pound tight end from Arlington, Va., he averaged nearly 15 yards a catch last year. He combines great size with good maneuverability and good hands. He is a potential game buster.

John Decembrele, who was moved to end from halfback during spring drills, will probably back up McGarry.

Jim Long made a good showing last fall and will probably start at split end. He is quick and has good hands. Long hails from Apollo, Pa.

Newton's Steve Parnell is also likely to see action at split end. An outstanding kickoff and punt return man, his speed makes him a definite asset.

A man to watch for later in the season is soph Walt O'Malley. He has sprinter speed and showed well with the Little Redmen last fall.

This position was hurt severely in recent days with the disclosure that Jim Nangle, a probably starter, will be forced out for his senior year with a head injury. This leaves three prime prospects for the two spots.

If size alone was the main qualification, senior Dick Donlin certainly fills the bill. A 6'6, 270 pound bruiser from New Britain, Conn, his other abilities make him an important man at this position.

Mike Cooney, 6' 225, is a likely starter. Very agile and very quick, he lends needed experience in the line. From Havertown, Pa., he is a senior.

Looking Sadly At The Old And . . .

Last season was the poorest UMass football season in over a decade. After the glorious triumphs of eight successful years in succession, last year was even harder to take for Coach Vic Fusia and his staff. It was, to be sure, a rebuilding year when it started. The coaches knew this was not the juggernaut of past years. But no one expected what did happen.

Last season was a long fall for a football program that had become synonomous with success. But the demise of last season, an unavoidable demise, only makes the rise back to greatness that much more fulfilling. And that is the goal for 1969, a return to greatness.

But, now a look at last year.

It all started on a hot Saturday in Alumni Stadium, against the traditional first game rival, Maine. The Black Bears were coming off a 0-8 season, and they looked it. UMass meanwhile, did not exactly look overpowering. But they had more than enough in this one to win.

Tim Adams starting his first varsity game at quarterback threw for two touchdowns, both to tight end Alan Becker and ran for another. Adams completed 15-32 passes - Becker, Nick McGarry and Jerry Grasso being his main receivers.

But omens for the rest of the season darkened things, as tackle Fred Hupprich broke his collarbone and was lost for the season while linebacker Dennis Gray tore cartiledge in his knee. And as the season wore on, medical reports would have to be listed in the game statistics along with first downs.

BUFFALO 23 - UMASS 0

The Redmen traveled to play in a professional football stadium, War Memorial Stadium (which was a dump) played at night (the lights were bad) and played against a major eastern football school, Buffalo (which was strong, faster and generally better than UMass). All of which convinced the visitors that Buffalo wasn't the best place to play football.

The Bulls trotted out a senior second-string quarterback Dennis Mason, who only completed 17 of 21 passes and two touchdowns, both to halfback Ken Rutowski. The Buffalo defense meanwhile manhandled the UMass offense, for virtually the entire contest.

UMass played a courageous game on defense but were simply overmatched. And, Marty Scheralis, defensive tackle injured his elbow, linebacker Don Dotson, his knee and Bill Byron, another linebacker, his shoulder.

Steve Rogers set a school record by intercepting four passes, and the UMass offense was superb, but Delaware just ran roughshod with a brutal ground attack to win a comeback win in the last period.

The first play set the tone of the game as Hen back Sam Brickley ran the opening kickoff back 90 yards. The home forces, who play in a beautiful stadium in Newark, Delaware, were led by a nifty halfback, Dick Kelley, who rambled for 217 yards on 28 carries in a brilliant performance. It was in fact, possibly the finest individual performance against U-Mass all year. Delaware was also helped by the last second heroics of sophomore quarterback Bob Buckley who passed for one score and scored one himself.

UMass who had leads of 13-0 and 23-14, scored on passes by Adams to Nick McGarry, Nick Warnock, and a run by Tim Driscoll in addition to a Marty Scheralis field goal.

But it all added up to a tough loss for the Redmen, one that could have been the key to the season. And star defensive end Tom York got hurt.

BOSTON U. 21 - UMASS 7

A frustrating home game followed as for the second game in a row, UMass was run over by a potent ground attack. B.U. rushed for 301 yards and scored twice on sustained marches. The lone Redman score came on a Tim Adams to Jerry Grasso pass.

And that's really all that happened. Sounds pretty dull, doesn't it? Well, it sure was.

RHODE ISLAND 14 - UMASS 9

Well it wasn't dull this week. Wet, but not dull. The heavens cried their eyes out as UMass had a 15 game Yankee Conference win streak broken by Rhode Island.

UMass made two rallies against the favored Rams but both just fell short. The Redmen had scored late in the first half on a 41 yard Adams to Warnock bomb, after Rhody had taken a 14-0 lead. The rest of the game featured stirring defensive plays by both sides.

Midway in the last period, the Redmen made their first rally at tieing things when Adams passed to Grasso and McGarry for good gains and Craig Lovell gained big chunks of yardage on the ground. However, with UMass third and goal at the Ram three yard line, Adams was hit hard and the resulting fumble was recovered by Rhody. There were under two minutes left in the game.

However, the inspired UMass defense rose and forced the Rams into a punting situation from the Rhode Island five. Not wanting to risk kicking in the cramped quarters, the Rams took an automatic safety, to get more room to punt.

The strategy almost backfired when Steve Parnell took the kick sprinted 50 yards just getting tripped up 22 yards short of the goal. All went for naught, though as a blown play and three incompletions ended the last gasp UMass attempts.

And, per usual, the injuries kept piling up. Mike Marchev, Grasso, Driscoll, star linebacker Randy Robinson, tackle Bill Sroka, guard Pierre Marchando, and Scheralis all were hurt.

CONNECTICUT 27 - UMASS 20

A big UMass homecoming crowd saw the Redmen lose a Homecoming game for the first time in many years. It took great performances from two all-Yankee Conference stars, Pete Petrillo Husky quarterback and halfback Vin Clements to stop the fired up home team, that as it did a week previously fall short with a last quarter rally.

The early going belonged to the Redmen as after an early UConn score, Adams hit Warnock on a 13 yard scoring strike. After the UMass defense downed Husky punter Jim DeWitt on his own three yard line, Craig Lovell busted over for the score and the Redmen led 14-6.

However Petrillo and his backfield could not be stopped and two scores by the nifty signal-caller, plus a scoring jaunt by Clements put the visitors in an apparently safe 27-14 lead with only four minutes remaining.

However, UMass came roaring back, and after two Adams to Warnock completions, the junior Redman quarterback found Parnell for a score.

The UMass defense halted the Huskies quickly, but despite two Adams completions, UConn held on at the end by batting down three aerials and preserving the win.

UMASS 49 - VERMONT 0

Finally, all those weeks of doubt, despair and injury were rewarded. UMass was bound to explode, and that they did on a cloudy Saturday in Burlington.

The star of this so much enjoyed win was sophomore wingback Pat Scavone. The speedster, rushed for 156 yards and two touchdowns.

Sharing the hero's mantle with Scavone were Adams who passed for two TD's and ran for two more, and Parnell who set up two touchdowns with long punt returns.

Maybe the rejoicing the win caused was too much. After all, it was Vermont who was down to about 35 players and hurting in several spots. But for the Redmen it was a bright Saturday, a reprieve from a long arduous season.

HOLY CROSS 47 - UMASS 20

An aroused Crusader, slumbering all season, exploded on the battered Redmen and piled up a runaway win. They sure did pile it up too. Behind quarterback Phil O'Neil, runners Tom Lamb and Steve Jutras, and end Bob Neary, Holy Cross took an early lead. Behind a mediocre coach suffering through a mediocre season, they piled up the score.

UMass as they did on numerous occasions, fought back from early deficits but never could quite catch up. Steve Parnell returned a kickoff 85 yards for one score, but Holy Cross still led 27-7, as the Crusader defense put a fearsome rush on Tim Adams. The UMass signal caller deserved an award for courageous service as he was dropped for a loss of 108 yards while trying to pass.

However, the gritty Adams got up and engineered early in the last period, that culminated in the quarterback scoring himself on an eight yard run through the Holy Cross right side. He also connected with McGarry for 55 yard touchdown pass later in the period.

But that splendid Holy Cross coach, who has since departed (his name is hard to remember because he really never did much) rolled up the score, going for a two point conversion with a 40-14 lead, and later with a 26 point lead and four minutes left he tried an onside kick.

He had a good time. He probably looks back on the whole thing fondly, from his enemployment perch.

NEW HAMPSHIRE 16 - UMass 0

Yankee Conference dreams went down the drain in a lifeless performance at Alumni stadium. The field goal kicking of Kurt Vollberbst and the running of Mike Shaughnessy were the weapons the Wildcats used to clinch their tie for the Beanpot.

UMass never came close to rallying.

What a lousy game.

BOSTON COLLEGE 21 - UMASS 6

What a great game.

Here was Boston College, big, strong, fast with monsters at every position, ready to lay to final rest the taped up, invalid Redmen.

So the UMass offense just dug in and kept at bay for the large bulk of the game, the third ranked offense in the country.

So the offense, playing against a bigger and stronger defense constantly threatened, before scoring on march engineered by substitute quarterback Ken Hughes.

An old football cliche is that such and such a game built character. But that's what this one did. 14 of the 22 UMass starters return. So a wretched year ended, not on the dismal tone of failure, but the strong feeling of hope for next year.

Nick McGarry Scores Against Delaware

O God!! It's Back

He came in riding the west wind, with a sombrero on his head, singing a Guy Lombardo tune. An unknown Indian, making his living as a wine taster.

But he fell in love with a college lass and vowed to stay in these parts until that great sombrero in the sky calls him.

Throughout his world travels to such exotica as Shutesbury and Lodi, N.J., the old injun picked up a reputation as a soothsayer of sorts (or a sort of a soothsayer). He took foreseeing the future in the area of football. And his name grew. And the legend grew.

An injun named Metawampe. A great American.

He'll be coming your way, O ye slaves to the football cards, to pick the biggies in college football and while he's at it, bestow merriment and mirth by way of his lively verse.

He has achieved a success percentage of the high .700's but is seeking the elusive .800. This year he'll really make it. This will be the year that he shatters his previous records. (Actually, he is going to stink)

Anyway, Metwampe is known to have said "It's all in your mind."

Looking Hopefully At The New

Game 1 - MAINE. Date: September 21, Place: Orono, Maine (Alumni Stadium - capacity 10,000), Coach: Walt Abbott (3rd year - W 3 - L 13), Nickname: Black Bears, Last Year's record: 3-5, Returning Lettermen: 30, Lettermen Lost: 10, Capsule Comment: Could nudge over the .500 mark for first time in three years. Will be stronger in '69 and rate as a darkhorse in the Yankee Conference race.

After two dismal seasons, the Black Bears appear to be ready to resume their former position as perennial Yankee Conference contenders. They key will be a veteran offensive unit, led by the passing combination of quarterback Dave Wing and All-Conference end Gene Benner. The running attack is also potent with speedsters Bob Hamilton and Dan Sullivan returning. Also expected to see action are sophomore backs Bill Swadel and Jim Hayes.

The defensive unit is also experienced with linebackers Mark Richardson, Allen Lee and David Coltin and Jim Fitzgerald all returning. Also back are defensive backs John Collins, Chris Eaton, Tom Jordan and Bill Johnston. However depth will be a problem on defense and the large gaps left by two stars Charlie Hews and all-Conference linebacker Pete Quackenbush may be too big to fill.

Schedule - Sept. 20, Mass; 27, Southern Connecticut; Oct. 4 at Rhode Island; 11, New Hampshire; 18, Connecticut; 25, at Boston University; Nov. 1, Hofstra; 8, at The Citadel; 15, at Vermont.

Game 2 - BUFFALO. Date: September 28, Place: Alumni Stadium, Coach: Bob Deming (1st year), Nickname: Bulls, Last Year's record: 7-3, Returning Lettermen: 29, Lettermen Lost: 14, Capsule Comment: The Bulls have a new coach with a new system, so they may need time to get adjusted. However, an impressive array of talent could improve last season's fine work.

New Coach Bob Deming, since taking over for Doc Urich in February, has revised his offense to a motion I with a split end, to take advantage of a talented array of runners. Among these are halfbacks Pat Patterson and Barney Woodward, both veterans, in addition to highly regarded transfer Scott Herlan. Joe Zelmanski returns at fullback. And if that is not enough quarterback Mick Murtha injured most of last season returns. Murtha holds five school records and is commanding some attention from pre-season All-American forcasters. Trouble spots on an otherwise explosive and experienced offense could be at guard and center where only one man at each are returning.

The veteran defense is led by ends Prentis Henley and Tom Vigneau and All-East linebacker Mike Luzny, who missed last year with an injury. The strong linebacking corps also includes co-captain Scott Clark and Gary Chapp. The secondary is nearly two deep.

Schedule: Sept. 13, at Ball State; 20, Xavier; 27, at Mass; Oct. 4, Kent State; 11, Dayton; 18, at Holy Cross; 25, Virginia Tech; Nov. 1, Temple; 8, at Boston College.

Game 3 - DELAWARE. Date: October 4, Place: Alumni Stadium, Coach: Harold Raymond (4th year - W 15 - L 13) Nickname: Blue Hens, Last Year's Record: 7-3, Returning Lettermen: 34, Lettermen lost: 11, Capsule Comment: Last year in a rebuilding year went to Boardwalk Bowl and captured the Lambert Cup. This year on paper they look even better. A big year in the making for the Hens.

Last season Coach Tubby Raymond took an inexperienced 11 to the Eastern small college title. This year most of the cast is back. The strong point is the offensive backfield. Last year Delaware led the nation's college division schools in rushing offense with an average of 315 yards per game. The main architects of that record are back. Quarterback Tom DiMuzio set a school one season offense record last year, and is a big strong runner in addition to being a fine passer. Halfbacks Dick Kelley, who gained 804 yards last year, and Sam Brickley who averaged almost 7 yards a carry. Also some fine sophomores will be in reserve.

The starting offensive line is strong but lacks depth. Conway Heyman is the stickout, an All Mid-Atlantic selection at guard last year. Also retiring is split end Ron Withelder who caught 34 passes a year ago.

The defense is led by honorable mention All-American linebacker John Favero. Depth could be a problem in the line but not in the secondary where seven lettermen return.

Schedule - Sept. 20, Gettysburg; 27, Villanova; Oct. 4, at Mass; 11, at Hofstra; 18, Westchester; 25, Temple; Nov. 1, Rutgers; 8, Lehigh; 15, at Boston Univ.; 22, at Bucknell.

Game 4 - BOSTON UNIVERSITY. Date: October 4, Place: Boston, Mass. (Nickerson Field - capacity 15,000), Coach: Larry Naviaux (1st year), Nickname: Terriers, Last Year's record: 5-3-1, Returning Lettermen; 21, Lettermen lost: 13, Capsule Comment: A new coach but with the same system that brought Terriers to their surprising season last year. Veterans on offense and healthy quarterbacking should equal or better last year's mark.

Former coach Warren Schmakel moved upstairs to athletic director and turned the reins over to a young assistant Naviaux. The Terriers should move the ball on offense. Leading rusher fullback John Rafalko returns as does versatile halfback Bob Calascibetta who played two games at quarterback last year. The key will be Peter Yetten, a highly regarded passing quarterback who had a shoulder injury last season. Yetten is apparently fully recovered and should give B.U. the passing attack they lacked. Also expected to see action are sophomore backs Glenn Williams and Gary Capehart. The entire line is back.

The defense will lack experience and depth, although ace linebacker Pat Hughes will be a standout. Other stickouts should be cornerbacks Bruce Taylor and Fred Barry, linebackers Fred McNeilly and Tackle Jay Dixon.

Schedule - Sept. 20, at Colgate; 27, Vermont; Oct. 4, at Harvard; 11, Mass.; 18, at Lafayette; 25, Maine; Nov. 1, Conn.; Nov. 8, Rhode Island; 15, Delaware; 22, at Temple.

Game 5 - RHODE ISLAND. Date: October 18, Place: Alumni Stadium, Coach: Jack Zilly (7th year W 21, L 37, T 2), Nickname: Rams, Last Year's record: 3-6, Returning Lettermen: 20, Lettermen Lost: 15, Capsule Comment: Lack of an experienced quarterback and inadequate offensive line, may cancel the strength of a veteran defense. If these holes aren't filled on offense, could be a long year.

The big problem facing the Rams will be to get the offense to jell. The answer to the quarterback problem may be long bomb artist Tom Fay. He will have some help from returning halfbacks Dick Narcessian, Pat Spitaletta and Steve Stramm, plus fullback Tom Wheller. Place kicker Steve Collis is a good one. The line will be built around tackle Larry Williams and guard Jay Monaghan. But the rest of the line is up for grabs.

The defensive outlook is much more rosy. Veterans are at most positions with ace tackles Warren Negri and Greg Bogdanich the standouts. Also expected to stick out are linebackers Bob McAllister and Dave McBrair and backs Paul Carney and Jim Engott.

Schedule - Sept. 20, Temple; 27, at Brown; Oct. 4, Maine; 11, at Vermont; 18 at Mass.; 25, Cortland St.; Nov. 1, New Hampshire; 8, at Boston University; 15, Connecticut.

Game 6 - CONNECTICUT. Date: October 25, Place: Storrs, Conn. (Memorial Stadium, capacity - 15,200), Coach: John Toner (4th year, W 11 - L 16, T 1), Nickname: Huskies, Last Year's Record: 4-6, Returning Lettermen: 15, Lettermen Lost: 16, Capsule Comment: Talented veterans are returning, but will have to rely heavily on sophomores in many spots. Won't be overpowering, but will be in thick of race to retain the Yankee Conference title.

The Huskies will have to fill 11 of 22 positions with sophomores, a tough task. However, one guy should make it all easier. He is tailback Vin Clements, the ECAC sophomore of the year and one of the finest runners in the east. Despite missing three games last year with injuries, Clements smashed three school rushing marks. Rick Robustelli, an excellent passer will probably be the quarterback and he'll have to throw to 6'4 John Crisp, who was out all last year. Another holdover on offense will be John Passarini, and defensive back Mike Zito who will switch sides this year.

Defensively, veterans include end Ralph Tiner, Vic Radzevich, and linebacker Phil Doran. Among the many sophomores, standouts could be backs Mike Grosso and Ray Brickley, linebacker Rickie Savage and end Bernie Lefkowitz.

Schedule - Sept. 20, at Vermont; 27, at Yale; Oct. 4, New Hampshire; 18 at Maine; 25, Mass.; Nov. 1, at Boston University; 8, Rutgers; 15, at Rhode Island; 22, Holy Cross.

Game 7 - VERMONT, Date: November 1. Place: Alumni Stadium, Coach: Bob Clifford, 8th year, W 34, L 23, T 1) Nickname: Catamounts, Last Year's Record: 3-6, Returning Lettermen: 26, Lettermen Lost 12, Capsule Comment: After a long season that saw at one point only 38 men healthy enough to play, Vermont has to have more depth

Probably the finest college football stadium in New England is UMass' Alumni stadium. Built in 1965, it gives an unobstructed view to 21,430 football fans.

Sideline sections, eight, nine, ten, 17, 18, 19 and 20 are all reserved for students, as are ground level sections C, D, G and H. Sideline sections one through six are reserved for the visiting team. All other seats save for a small section reserved for the President and legislators are open for public sale.

Press box facilities at the Stadium are the most modern and well-equipped in the east.

Error In Ticket Books

A printing error appears in the ticket coupon booklet handed out at registration yesterday. The initial coupon lists the Buffalo game as being Sept. 20, when it should read September 27.

Therefore the coupons will be redeemable thru Sept. 24, and not thru Sept. 17 as is listed.

Ticket Manager Wally Novack asks all students to note the change and redeem their coupons accordingly. He also reminds students that seats are redeemed on a first come-first serve basis.

this year. Offense should be more consistent. Toughest schedule in history could hurt chances to improve last year's record.

Though the Catamounts will have more numbers this year, they still will have overall depth problem. The offense will be led by Henry Canning, the overnight sensation of a year ago, who switched from defensive end and gained 463 yards in the last two games. However, Canning may have to go both ways. Supporting Canning's running will be sophomore Bob Rodger, the most highly touted Vermont newcomer in years. Veteran quarterback Fran Peterson returns with his favorite receiver Bob Monahan. The offensive line will be led by 275 pound tackle Bob Lynch.

The defense is for the most part a seasoned group, bolstered by 250 Gerry Elliott at tackle, and veterans John Wojciechowski and Tom McLaughlin. Sophomore Charlie Russo should see action also. Mike Boraski leads a veteran secondary.

Schedule - Sept. 20 Conn.; 27, at Boston University; Oct. 4, Northeastern; 11, Rhode Island; 18, at New Hampshire; 25, at Wilkes; Nov. 1, at Mass.; 8, Lafayette; 15, Maine.

Game 8 - HOLY CROSS, Date: November 8, Place: Alumni Stadium, Coach: Bill Whitton (1st year) Nickname: Crusaders, Last Year's Record: 3-6-1, Returning Lettermen: 25, Lettermen Lost: 16, Capsule Comment: A veteran team brightens new coach's outlook. A rugged schedule, however, will make this big team scramble to reach the .500 mark.

Bill Whitton will inherit for the most part veterans. The offense has holdovers Steve Jutras, last year's leading rusher, quarterback Mark Mowatt, a fine runner and fullback Tom Lamb. However, sophomore Eddie Jenkins, a big swift halfback may be better than the others. Leading the offense will be tackle Bill Moncveicz, one of the best in the east and Gary Brackett. 6'4 Pete Stratton will be at split end.

The defense lacks the depth of their offensive mates, but ends Brian Powers and Bob Piepul and tackles Tom Walmsley and Ed McGilvery will form a big, tough nucleus. Mark Doherty is a fine returning linebacker, while Mike Jordan heads up the secondary.

Schedule - Sept. 27, at Harvard; Oct. 4, at Dartmouth; 11, at Colgate; 18, Buffalo; 25, at Syracuse; Nov. 1, Villanova; 8, Mass.; 15, Rutgers; 22 at Conn.; 29 Boston College.

Game 9 - NEW HAMPSHIRE. Date: November 15, Place: Durham, N.H. (Cowell Stadium, capacity-13,000), Coach: Jim Root (2nd. year, W6 - L2), Nickname: Wildcats, Last Year's Record:6-2, Returning Lettermen: 24, Lettermen Lost: 11, Capsule Comment: Defending co-champs have load of talent and college division coach of the year. But, there are holes in critical spots and matching last year's mark may be a problem. However, have to be rated favorite for the Beanpot.

The biggest task for the Wildcats is to find a quarterback. They have one of the best coaches at doing just that, as Root has coached at various times George Mira, Mickey Beard and Brian Dowling. Right now Bobby Hopkins looks like he has the inside track on the job. He'll have two fine runners in his backfield to help him, in Dave Sullivan and Mike Shaughnessy. Sophomore halfback Greb Scott should crack the starting lineup also. The line is anchored by end Bob Robichaud tackle Peter Toohey and tackle Cliff McDonald.

The defense needs shoring up but Harry Kouloheras leads a fine linebacker corps, while Robert Bernier, Greg Kolinski and Ed Savage is the only experience in the line however.

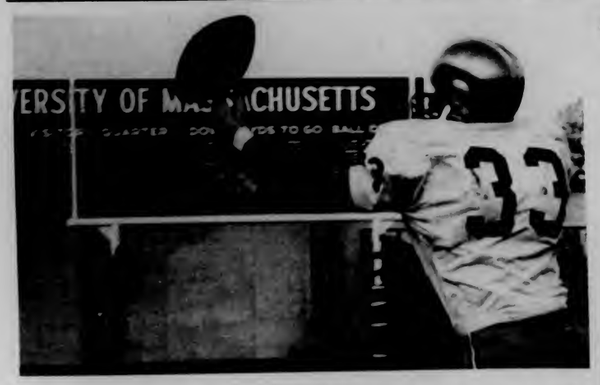
Schedule -- Sept. 27, Dartmouth; Oct. 4, at Conn.; 11, at Maine; 18 Vermont; 25, Northeastern; Nov. 1, at Rhode Island; 8, Springfield; 15, Mass.

Game 10 - BOSTON COLLEGE Date: November 22, Place: Chestnut Hill, (Alumni Stadium, capacity-26,000), Coach: Joe Yukica (2nd year-W6, L3) , Nickname: Eagles, Last Year's record: 6-3, Returning Lettermen: 24, Lettermen Lost: 23, Capsule Comment: Explosive, big and experienced on offense, point to another big year at the Heights. If an inexperienced defense fails, will be one of top teams in the east.

After ranking third in the nation in total offense, the Eagles will have to go some to top last year. But Yukica sees a more consistent attack. It will be led by Frank Harris, possibly the finest passing quarterback at the Heights since Jack Concannon. Frank Willis a big, swift halfback also returns. Willis averaged seven yards a carry. The rest of last season's backfield is back too, they being Jim Catone and Joe McDonald. They however may be pushed by sophomore Bill Thomas. Big receiver Steve Kives is back, while all-American hopeful Bob Bouley anchors the line.

The defense could be a problem with inexperience throughout. Holdovers include Jim McCool, a linebacker, tackle John Fitzgerald and halfback Gary Dancewicz. Yukica may shift '68 quarterback Mike Fallon and sophomore back Ed Rideout to defensive secondary.

Schedule - Sept. 27, Navy; Oct. 4, Tulane; 18, Villanova; 25, at Army; Nov. 1, at Penn. St.; 8, Buffalo; 15, V.M.I.; 22, Mass.



NIFTY HALFBACK - Boston College halfback Fred Willis receives a Frank Harris aerial against Redmen last season. Willis will be someone to cope with for UMass this year.

Fusia Optimistic

Fusia sees the Yankee Conference race to be one big scramble. "You have to make Connecticut and New Hampshire the favorites, off of their title season last year. And you have to give Maine a real shot at the title, because they have virtually their whole squad returning.

The coach expects big years from such players in the conference as the Maine passing combination of quarterback Dave Wing, "one of the few experienced quarterbacks in the conference," and end Gene Benner,"a fast end that can catch the ball". Also Fusia sees a lot of trouble from Connecticut's Vin Clements, of whom, he says "Everyone says he is the best runner in New England, and I can't argue with them."

Yankee Conference rules, of course, limit the numbers of scholarships allowed to be handed out. This ruling was made to prevent a team from dominating the Conference such as the Redmen did for the last five years. However, Fusia thinks it is still possible to dominate things. "It is still possible for a school to dominate things for a long time. We'd like to be the ones to do it too."

So, Vic Fusia, a winner in all his coaching career, begins building another winner. If pride has anything to do with it, things are looking up. The coach didn't enjoy 1968 too much.

A former University of Cincinnati backfield standout during the Sid Gillman era in the early fifties, Jack Delaney begins his ninth year on the Massachusetts coaching staff after a seven-year hitch at his alma mater, where he served for two years as freshman coach and then five seasons as offensive backfield coach.

A native of Columbus, Ohio, Coach Delaney attracted attention while performing on the basketball, football, and baseball teams of Columbus Aquinas High School. After an eighteen-month tour of duty in the Army, he entered Cincinnati and soon was a student on the gridiron and on the baseball diamond. In 1952, his senior year, Delaney averaged almost eight yards per carry while the Bearcats were winning eight games, losing one and tying one. The following spring he captained the baseball squad.

Bob Graham is a native of Lewiston, Pennsylvania and a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania where he played fullback for two years. In 1949 he was recipient of the Edgar Church Cup presented annually to the member of the Penn football team who had contributed most to the squad, and in 1950 he captained the Quakers baseball team. Following graduation he played professional baseball in the Phillies' farm system for one year and during the late fifties had a successful coaching tenure at St. Alban's School in Washington, D.C. In 1958 he joined the University of Pennsylvania staff as freshman football coach and supervisor of freshman athletics. He also served as defensive coach for the Red and Blue.

George Karras is starting his fourth year on the Massachusetts coaching staff this fall. A native of Etna, Pa., George was a guard on the Villanova teams of 1953-54-55. Following graduation he spent the 1956 season as line coach at Pittsburgh's Central Catholic H. S. before entering the Army. While in the service he played and coached the Ft. Hood (Texas) Tankers, 4th Army Champions in 1957. He served as line coach at Norwyn h.s. in Irwyn, Pa. in 1959 and in 1960 he began a three-year tenure at his alma mater under Alex Bell. During these years, he was line coach and helped the Wildcats attain ranking among the top ten defensive teams in the nation while appearing in two post-season bowl games. He served as head line coach at Wichita before coming to Massachusetts for a one-year stay in 1963 as a line coach, and was head coach of the Shockers during the 1965 and 1966 seasons.

One of the Redmen's outstanding defensive performers of recent years and son of football coach Alva Kelley (Hobart College) is beginning his third year of college coaching with his primary responsibility again with the freshman squad. A graduate of Hamilton Central H.S.(N.Y.), Dave Kelley was a physical education major at the University of Massachusetts and in addition to being an All Yankee Conference football selection as a senior, he was one of New England's top 177 lb. wrestlers during his undergraduate career. He has also served as a teacher-coach at Monson (Mass.) High School.

Defense May Have Many Soph Starters

ENDS

The defensive end spot could be one of the strongest spots on the whole team Tom York, co-captain, is a returning all-Conference performer. York is a two-year letterman from Bordentown Prep in New Jersey and combines good speed, strength and agility to make him one of the best at his position in New England.

Two highly-regarded sophomores are in the spot as well. Curt Bristol from Elmora, N.Y. and John Hulecki from Leominster, both started on last year's frosh defensive unit and could see a lot of action this year. Bristol is a strong and agressive performer who had a good spring practice. Hulecki, who can also play offensive end, has great size at 6'4, 215 and the potential to be real good.

A junior, Russ Wood, who started the last third of last season, cannot be overlooked. The Berkely Heights, N.J. native is a quick performer and has experience.

A recent addition to the end group and potentially a sleeper is another Toner brother, Paul Toner.

TACKLES

This position was weakened by the loss of Marty Scheralis for the season. Scheralis' injured shoulder that gave him so much trouble a year ago did respond to surgery.

The loss of Scheralis deprives the position of depth. However, what is left is of high caliber. Andy Guarino, who played both middle guard and tackle returns. Guarino was a standout, combining aggressiveness and versatility to make him one of the most valuable members of the defensive unit. The senior hails from Everett.

Junior Bill Sroka was an iron man last season also when injuries ran through the position, as he played linebacker as well as tackle. Was an instant standout when he cracked the starting lineup. Sroka hails from Auburn, N.Y.

Sophomore could give them a run for a starting berth. The 5'9 220 pound Deflavio was co-captain of the freshman team and off his fine performance in the intrasquad game last spring, has to be given a good shot at cracking the starting lineup.

Mark Toner, a senior, and second half of the defensive brother duo, saw a lot of action last year, and will be a valuable man in the coming season as well.

MIDDLE GUARD

Only one man is listed at the spot right now but he is a good one. John MacLean, a senior, is big, hard-hitting performer that was a steady star all year. He held together the defensive line at a time when injuries threatened to wipe out the whole line. A former fullback, MacLean is an Air Force veteran who comes from Williamstown.

LINEBACKERS

An already thin position was furthered crippled when returning starter Don Dotson broke his arm early in practice and is lost for the season. His loss is a tough one to overcome.

However, some help has come from senior Dennis Gray who has responded to knee treatments and should resume his fine play.

Also returning is tough senior from the Bronx, John Farrelly who worked his way into the starting lineup a year ago and turned out to be one of the most consistent performers on the team.

BLOCK THAT KICK - John Farelly, looming over a Buffalo punter, should be a starting linebacker on the Redman defense this year. Farelly was a standout in the last half of last season.

HE'LL BE MISSED - Linebacker, here blocking an extra point try was a standout returnee, before breaking his arm and being lost for the season. Dotson will be sorely missed.

ago. With another year of experience at the position, Dyer could prove a valuable performer on defense this year.

A rugged tackler, Joe Sabulis, a top prospect from the freshman squad could also earn a starting berth. Two sophomores are in additi n vieing for the berth Dennis Collins and Tony Hayes.

BACKFIELD

Safety is no problem. Steve Rogers, a senior from Springfield, Vt., holds all school interception records, with eight in one season, four in one game and 12 for a career. A two year letterman, Rogers lettered in baseball. Should be one of the best as his spot in New England.

The backs will be for the most part sophomores, all fine athletes but inexperienced. There is one back with some experience, senior Dave Driscoll, who lettered despite a shoulder injury a year ago.

The others are sophs. Dennis Keating, from Arlington, started all frosh games a year ago and is likely to see plenty of action this season. Keating is a rugged tackler.

Bill Bush, son of one UMass' all-time greats, played quarterback with the frosh, but switched to defense in spring drills and seems destined for success at the position.

Movie Review

Film "Easy Rider" is Trite But Frighteningly Possible

By ROBERT HANCOCK
Staff Reporter

"Easy Rider" is a "Restricted" movie. All those under 16 must be accompanied by a parent or guardian. In actuality all parents and guardians ought to bring their kids, so at least somebody in the family will "see" the movie.

"Easy Rider" stars Dennis Hopper and Peter Fonda in an incredibly trite movie. The dialogue has all those traditionally hip, groovy, little remarks as Hopper and Fonda create two basically stereotyped characters Billy and Captain America respectively. Along the way the cinematography has all those clever little gimicks now used by commercial artie film makers.

The plot also has a familiarness about. Billy and Cap have picked up some Heroin in Mexico and smuggle it across the border to an opulent user, played in a cameo appearance, by the enigma of good and rock producers, Phil Spector. The profits, (see Mr. Businessman, even hippies can be capitalists), are to be used to finance a motorcycle trip from California, where they are, to the Mardi Gras in New Orleans.

Along the way Hooper and Fonda are harassed by all the establishment figures, hotel owners, gas attendents, and welcomed by all the marginal people, a white man married to a Mexican with many, many little ones (a no-no) and a hippie commune.

Things begin to get interesting as Cap and Billy are arrested somewhere in the south for parading without a permit, for following a marching band on their cycles. Enter a savior, a local boy turned lawyer and local lush who rescues them from Southern Hippie Justice. He has long harbored a desire to go to New Orleans and visit a whore house recommended by the governor. The group sets out together, tries to stop for lunch, but are verbally harassed, so they leave.

At this point the movie remains far from spectacular, viewer interest is maintained by an occasional witty remark, a massive amount of dope smoking on the screen, the pretty technicolor pictures of America and the excellent score accompaniment. However, one must remember that along with Hopper and Fonda, the master of the perverse and the macabre, Terry Southern was a script writer. So during one night sleeping on the roadside, remember hotel-motel owners aren't allowing our two long haired heroes and their high school letter sweater and football helmet wearing friend to sleep indoors, they are attacked by club wielding toughs. Hopper is mildly smashed, Fonda is moderately squashed, and their Southern friend is dead.

Cap and Billy continue their journey, bravely go to New Orleans, visit the whore house, have a bad trip with two whores, then leave town.

They take off up what looks like highway 53 in Mississippi and we hear Fonda mumble "We blew it." Rambling behind them is a pickup truck with two local mongoloids who decide to fire a shotgun over their heads and scare the hippies. They pull up alongside Hopper and say "Kid, you need a haircut" (I mentioned the dialogue was trite). Hopper returns the compliment with a raised index finger, so the southern gentleman shotguns him, the viewer believes by accident. Cap hears blast, turns around and comes to the rescue. Meanwhile, the men in the pickup decide that they better go back, as Fonda decides to go for help. Wow, isn't America wonderful, the two bad guys will turn back and help Billy and the Hippies and hicks will live happily ever after. Too bad you lose America, instead they blast hell in or out of Captain America too.

It is at this point that Mr. and Mrs. America get up and say what a strange picture. This is the moment for the 15-year old to reveal to them for him it didn't seem so strange. This is the awfulness of "Easy Rider", it isn't fantasy. It is truer to life than one can comfortably deal with. Any long-hair who has been harassed sees the action on the screen as an only too possible occurance.

America was such a good idea, too bad we blew it.

Lest someone get the wrong idea, I liked "Easy Rider" very much. It had an incredibly excellent score. And the stereotyping seemed much less accidental than intentional. The dullness it created in the audiences brain only served to make the ending more effective. So it is highly recommended to everyone except those politics of happiness people who can't afford to have their bubble burst.

Concrete Monuments Reach Toward The Heavens At UMass

Construction cranes are again a prominent part of the skyline of the Amherst campus of UMass this year.

Six buildings are under construction, one has just been completed and another is scheduled to be started during the coming academic year.

Just completed and being used this year is Christian A. Herter Hall, $3.8 million College of Arts and Sciences building designed by Colletti Brothers of Boston. The building has 35 classrooms, 175 offices, two auditoriums and four language laboratories. The seven-story structure houses the Germanic, Romance and Slavic language departments and the history department.

Three major buildings are under construction this year on the Amherst campus. The nine-story Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center will be completed and in use in 1970. The Graduate Research Center, 17-story science complex, is in its early stages and due to be completed in 1971. The 28-story University of Massachusetts Library was begun this past spring and is also scheduled for completion in late 1971.

The Lincoln Center, designed by New York architect Marcel Breuer, is a conference and student activities facility with an attached underground parking garage. The $16 million cost of the center and garage is being financed on a self-amortizing basis through the U-Mass Building Authority at no cost to taxpayers.

The new library will cost an estimated $16 million, over $2.5 million of which will come from federal grants. Its initial million volume capacity can later be doubled. Internationally-known architect Edward Durell Stone has designed the library with study and book stack floors in the tower, with reading rooms, office space and other facilities in underground floors at the base.

The 17-story tower of the Graduate Research Center will be devoted mainly to chemistry laboratories. The base will contain a computer center, a physical sciences library and other facilities. The design is by Campbell, Aldrich and Nulty of Boston. More then $3.5 million of the $18 million cost will come from federal grants.

Three new nine-story residence halls to house 1400 students are being built on a wooded hillside off Eastman Lane. Architect John Warnecke of New York and San Francisco has designed them around the suite concept - the suites being single and double rooms for from five to seven students who will share a common bath and living room. The $10 million project is being built on a self-funding basis at no cost to taxpayers through the UMass Building Authority.

Scheduled to start during the academic year is construction of Maurice Tobin Hall, classroom-laboratory-office building to be located west of Bartlett Hall. The $6.5 million building will house the rapidly-expanding UMass psychology department.

UMass Theatre Recruiting Actors, Tryouts Open to All

Tryouts are being held this week for THE GOOD WOMAN OF SETZUAN, first production of the season by the University of Mass. Theatre.

The play, written by Bertolt Brecht, has been called "a modern parable set in China." It will be directed by Jim Young, Chairman of the Theatre and Oral Interpretation Area of the University.

THE GOOD WOMAN OF SETZUAN is an epic drama with songs, characteristacally Brechtian and one of his best works. It is the story of the prostitute Shen Te, the only kind and generous person the gods can find on earth, who is rewarded with a little shop and a gift of money.

Tryouts are open to everyone, with or without previous theatre experience. All tryouts are being held in Bartlett Hall, Room 125, Wed., Sept. 10 from 7 p.m. on; Thurs., Sept. 11, from 4:30 p.m. on; and Fri., Sept. 12, from 7 p.m. on.

Law School Admission Tests To Be Given on Four Dates

PRINCETON, New Jersey - The Law School Admission Test, required of candidates for admission to most American Law Schools, will be given by the Educational Testing Service at more than 250 centers throughout the nation on November 8, 1969, February 14, 1970, April 11, 1970, and July 25, 1970.

Since many law schools select their freshmen classes in the spring preceding entrance, candidates for admission to next year's classes are advised to take either the November or the February test.

A registration form should be obtained seven weeks in advance of a testing date from Law School Admission Test, Box 944, Educational Testing Service, Princeton, N.J. 08540.

Faculty Recital

The first Music Department Faculty Recital of the season takes place this evening, Wednesday, September 10 in Bowker Auditorium (Stockbridge Hall) at 8:00 p.m.

Tonight's concert will feature members of the faculty in a program of chamber music. The program will include the American premiere of Clement Lewis' "Up Your Alley" written for two pianos and featuring Robert Stern and Charles Fussell.

Dorm Counselors Meet Tonight, Seek More Funds

By ROBERT HANCOCK
Staff Reporter

A general meeting of all UMass counselors has been called by a group calling themselves The Dormitory Counselors Representation Committee, (DCRC). The meeting is to take place tonight, at 7:30 in the Engineering Auditorium.

The counselors will discuss the lack of funds available to pay counselors and the written reply of Dean of Students, William F. Field, to questions previously asked by the DCRC.

This meeting is the culmination of efforts by the Central Area Government (CAG), to clarify the issue of counselor salaries. The CAG had called a meeting of all counselors on Thursday, September 4, in Mills House. Discussion took place on the possibility of organizing counselors to bring the salary issue forward.

This meeting, attended by approximately 60 counselors, did not feel itself sufficiently representative to speak for all the University's counselors. They decided to return to their residence areas and inform fellow counselors of the situation and urged solidarity of action.

However, Friday morning, September 5, four representatives of this meeting, Michael Koch, Ferdi Gunduz, Michael Britton, and Stephen Stoia, went to Dean Field's office to discuss any committments to counselors for the Spring Semester.

This group had a list of five questions which were discussed informally with Field. The fifth of these questions, however, was presented formally. It read "We would like a written statement no later than Monday, Septemb er 8, as to whether positions with compensation will be available to all present dorm counselors for the Spring Semester."

Dean Field issued a written statement at noon Monday and had copies distributed to all counselors. This statement referred to another statement issued on July 21, 1969 to all counselors. The letter said in part: "I had earlier haped that it would be possible to . . .permit some increase in counselor compensation for the next year, (1969-70); it is now clear that the overall funds will be less than for the 1968-69 school year. . .it seems fair to all concerned to complete the appointments for all counselors. . .but to make these appointments for the first semester only. . .compensation will necessarily be at the same rate as for the last school year. This will leave only limited funds available to carry on the counseling program for the second semester next year and will require major planning and readjustments prior to the second semester."

Dean Field went on to say that supplementary budget requests had not returned the necessary funds, and that Student Personnel Services was discussing with the Office of Placement and Financial Aid Services the possibility of using Work Study funds to pay counselors for Spring Semester. After this information is received and an exact dollar deficiency can be made, Dean Field will ask the Provost to reconsider the budget.

The statement ended expressing Dean Field's support of the counseling program and called for a meeting between DCRC and the "residence halls area staff on Wednesday, September 10, to discuss both recommendations and policy decisions relating to the present situation."

The meeting was held in the Student Union at 9:00 p.m. as scheduled. Michael Koch represented DCRC and most of the Student Personnel Services people were in attendance. Those present discussed whether or not the University should have paid counselors in the dorms.

There was general agreement that the University did need a counseling staff, according to Assistant Dean of Students Paul W. Brubacher. However, this group thought it would be a good idea to inform the University population about what counselors do.

The results of this meeting and Dean Field's statement of the 8th will be discussed at the meeting today. The DCRC urges all counselors to attend. Stephen Stoia, 606 Webster Hall; Joan McRae, 420 Field Hall; or Ferdi Gunduz, Hamlin House, can be contacted for more details.

Students Call for One Day Strike To Help Work for End of Viet War

Students at about 100 colleges and universities around the country are planning a one-day halt to all research and classroom work next October to work instead at ending the war in Vietnam.

A call for the anti-war action is now being circulated to campuses by a new group called the Vietnam Moratorium Committee. The protest will take place Oct. 15.

The committee hopes to expand the Oct. 15th moratorium to two days in November, three days in December and so on until the war is brought to an end.

The planned protest would differ from past student anti-war demonstrations in its emphasis on the involvement of more than just the academic community.

The committee hopes to engage community organizations, civil rights groups, politicians and even high school students in the activity.

Participating student and faculty members are urged to branch out from campuses on Oct. 15 to circulate petitions and leaflets at shopping centers, factories and downtown areas.

The new committee is headed by Sam Brown, a staff aide to Sen. Eugene Mccarthy last year; David Mixner, another McCarthy staffer from last year, and David Hawk, a draft resister who organized the 250 student presidents and editors "We Won't Go" letter on the draft this Spring.

The trio is carefully avoiding the word "strike" in describing its plans for the Fall term.

"The industrial analogy really is not appropriate," said Brown. "We don't want to cripple univer-

To Faculty and Administration:

Copies of the DAILY COLLEGIAN are being distributed to most departments and offices this week free of charge. Starting Monday, Sept. 15, only those faculty members, administrators and staff members who have notified the DAILY COLLEGIAN of their intent to subscribe will receive the paper.

To facilitate matters for both the DAILY COLLEGIAN staff and the mail room, we request each department to submit one list to the DAILY COLLEGIAN office with the names of those wishing to subscribe to the paper.

Subscription price for on-campus personnel for the entire year is $5 (well below the $11 for off-campus subscriptions).

We wish to remind members of the faculty, staff and administration that copies of the DAILY COLLEGIAN distributed in the Student Union are for students only. Staff members who take newspapers from the Student Union are depriving students of DAILY COLLEGIANS which they have paid for through the Student Activities Tax.

NES Tutoring Program Seeks Serious Volunteers

The Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council, sponsors one of the largest and most involved campus activities - the Northern Education Service tutoring program. N.E.S. is an organization geared at correcting deficiencies in the education of children from economically deprived areas.

Last semester, approximately 150 students took a weekly bus trip to the tutoring centers located in Springfield. One afternoon or evening a week was spent expanding the horizons of another person while simultaneously broadening their own outlook on life.

All those interested in increasing their own understanding while helping others, should attend the meeting to be held in Mahar Auditorium on September 16th at 7 p.m. The purpose of this first meeting is to further explain the program and to comprise a list of volunteers. A schedule of orientation meetings will also be announced. Past N.E.S. tutors need not attend this meeting if they plan to continue in the program with the same tutee. If veterans are presently without a tutee, attendance is necessary if they want their names put back into the tutor pool.

Veteran N.E.S. tutors are asked to volunteer through the King Council office in 207 Hampshire House (545-0648 or 545-0649).

The bus is tentatively scheduled to start running by the end of September, although some Saturday Cultural Enrichment activities may be planned before this. All students interested in a Saturday activity that involves trips to Springfield, or participation in activities at the University, are asked to volunteer.

This program needs serious people who are willing to become involved on a regular basis. An indifferent tutor has a detrimental effect on all concerned, especially the tutee, who tends to view his tutor as a friend rather than an impersonal faculty member.

Collegian to List Course Opening

It is estimated that 500 students who were pre-registered for courses this semester will never appear in the classes. Since specific numbers and names are not known on course changing day, many courses and sections were listed as closed when actually openings would occur after the first day of classes.

To aid students during the current course-crisis, the DAILY COLLEGIAN requests that faculty members determine if any empty seats exist in their courses or sections, and then notify the Collegian office. The DAILY COLLEGIAN will print the list of course openings throughout the add-drop period.

The Parking Lots Were Clogged

With the lot beside Whitmore filled by commuter cars, more drivers parked their cars in bus stops and no parking zones, clogging traffic flow around the administration building.

With illegally parked cars taking up the space normally reserved for maintainance trucks, tractors and trucks were forced to park in a variety of cluttering places.

"Some Relief in Sight" - Ferriter

Parking lots at UMass have always been crowded, but the tie up yesterday was unbelievable. And when most of the people parked on campus tried to leave late in the day, a mammoth traffic jam resulted.

Parking Director Robert Ferriter explained, that the abnormal tie-up was partly caused by the large number of students who have not as yet received stickers, and who parked in the first lot they saw when they arrived on campus today.

All students will receive their stickers by the middle of next week.

Also, the large number of students who brought their parent's cars to school this week added fuel to the traffic fire.

"There were no spaces planned for these students, and we expect the crowded situation to clear up a bit when they bring the cars home this weekend," Ferriter explained.

Until this situation stabilizes on campus, something which he expects to happen when all students receive their stickers next week, the Parking Director says that students will be allowed to park in Boyden lots, "However," he goes on to say, "this is just an emergency situation, and staff and administration lots will all be closed to students once we get settled."

"There are just not enough spaces to go around in these lots," he concluded.

THE DANGER

The crowded lots and streets pose a real danger to the University community, Ferriter explains.

"Cars illegally parked are blocking fire and emergency exits, and the problem is especially urgent in Southwest."

Beginning Monday, all cars parked in no parking or tow zones will be ticketed.

"Cars," Ferriter says, "are being parked in the entrances to Southwest and are blocking all emergency exits. This will be especially hazardous in the case of a fire."

The same situation, to a slightly lesser degree, exists in the Quad.

Ferriter urges all residents of Southwest to park their cars in F lot and not to leave them in the dorm access roads. A shuttle bus bringing students from F lot to the center of campus will begin running within the month, thus lessening the inconvenience normally associated with F lot stickers.

Ferriter urged al students to comply with the parking regulations, "for everyone s safety. I think that a little inconvenience is better than an unsafe campus," he said.

The situation was the worst in Southwest, where cars parked in the driveways between the towers and low rise dorms. The parking spaces which do exist in these areas are normally reserved for Heads of Residence, and most of these people found their spaces taken by students.

The cars lined access roads to the dorms, and created a condition that would have caused a crisis in case of a fire.

And with all available parking spaces taken by students, maintainance personnel were forced to park in the middle of the roads to get close to dorms, causing further congestion.

Ferriter urged all students with F lot stickers to park their cars in F lot, saying "a little inconvenience is worth a decent amont of safety."

A shuttle bus will begin to run between F lot and the main part of campus within the month to make parking in F lot for both resident and commuting student less of the drudge it has been in the past.

And the Roads Were Unbelievable

Middle East Tension Mounts

TEL AVIV (AP) - On the heels of Moshe Dayan's warning of more strikes against Egypt, Israeli jets hammered Egyptian army vehicles Wednesday in the same area where Israeli armor and troops carried out a bold amphibious raid the day before.

A communique said the planes hit at Ras Abu Dareg and Ras Za'farana, 39 and 55 miles south of Port Suez, which is at the southern end of the canal.

Although the patched-eyed defense minister had predicted "even heavier strikes" than Tuesday's 10-hour raid, the latest air attack was less extensive than the previous day's assault.

Israel said the jets struck in the morning and that all returned safely to base. Further details were not disclosed.

A military communique from Cairo said one Israeli plane was downed by antiaircraft fire over the Gulf of Suez which separates the Egyptian mainland from the Israeli-occupied Sinai Peninsula. It termed the Tuesday raid a "propaganda operation rather than a military one" and likened it to a "cinema scenario."

In both days' attacks, Cairo has made no mention of any Egyptian planes going into action to intercept the Israeli jets.

Israel claimed to have knocked out an important Soviet-built surface to air missile battery in Tuesday's raid as well as other antiaircraft installations. Egypt acknowledged that one antiaircraft position was attacked Wednesday.

Along the Jordan River ceasefire line, Israeli and Jordanian forces battled with mortars and howitzers for 30 minutes Wednesday, three miles north of the Dead Sea, a military spokesman in Amman said. The Jordanians accused the Israelis of starting the fight and reported no Jordanian losses.

Jordanian and Israeli soldiers fought a 25-minute battle across the river Tuesday night six miles north of the Dead Sea, Jordanian military spokesmen said. No Jordanian casualties were reported in that battle either.

In Israeli-occupied Hebron on the west bank, about 40 persons were arrested by Israeli police after an Arab lobbed a hand grenade into the car of the town's military governor, Lt. Col. Ofer Ben-David, informed sources said. The grenade did not go off.

A curfew was clamped on Hebron, scene of several previous grenade attacks.

The Unanswered Questions of Chappaquiddick Remain

Sen. Kennedy talks with Walter Cronkite and Governor Sargent at graduation here last June.

Tourists look at the spot where Kennedy s car went over the Dike Bridge.

This is the corner at which Kennedy said he made a wrong turn. Coming from the right he made a sharp right turn onto the dirt road which leads to the Dike Bridge. The paved road to the ferry makes almost a 90 degree curve to the left.

The unanswered questions of Chappaquiddick remain. The inquest, postponed last week, would have been the first time Sen. Kennedy would have faced public questioning concerning the events leading up to and following the fatal accident at Dike Bridge.

The delay adds fuel to the fires of the fires of the Kennedy opponents and loosens the ground on which the Kennedy supporters and sympathizers stand.

If the Kennedy standard, held by three brothers before Ted is to be carried high, the unanswered questions of Chappaquiddick must be answered.

Television cameras are set on scaffolds built especially for the inquest in front of the Dukes County Court House on the day before the inquest was scheduled to begin.

This man, Edgartown Chief of Police Dominic Arena, will be both a principal witness and head of security if the inquest is held.

Phil Ford and Mimi Hines in their famous soft-shoe dance -- sorry, soft-foot dance -- with the "Good Night" number of David Merrick's musical hit, "I Do! I Do!"

"I Do! I Do!" Comes to UMass

A lyrical piece of propaganda for marriage will be presented at Bowker Auditorium. On Thursday, September 18,1969, the New York musical hit " I Do! I Do!" bearing the credentials of a 19-month run on Broadway, will begin an engagement with Phil Ford and Mimi Hines as its lustrous stars.

The entertaining musical is not merely propaganda for marriage, of course, but it's an assertion that matrimony is a good thing, and that life itself can be o.k. In other words, it's an optimistic musical, and thus a rare contrast to many other current musicals, plays, movies and novels which are touched with cynical pessimism.

Phil Ford and Mimi Hines, long-established popular entertainers on TV and in elegant supper clubs, who were seen recently on Broadway in "Funny Girl," and on tour in "The Roar of the Greasepaint," are aptly co-starred in "I Do! I Do!" The musical traces the events of a happy marriage over fifty years, since they are husband and wife in private life, and have been ever since they were on the same night-club bill as "singles" in Anchorage, Alaska.

Twenty bouncing songs, such as "I Love My Wife," "Where Are the Snows of Yesteryear?" and "Something Has Happened," make up the musical score of "I Do! I Do!", many of them national favorites now through the show's original-cast album and various single discs.

Coed Living at Stanford Favorable, UMass Board to Vote on Coed Dorm

An experiment in co-ed living at a Stanford University fraternity house seems to indicate that sex relations occur less among house members than between males and females living in separate fraternities and dormitories.

According to an article appearing in the current issue of Look magazine, co-ed living at the Stanford Lambda Nu house actually appears to de-emphasize sexual relations. A Look senior editor drew this conclusion after spending a week at Lambda Nu , observing the boys and girls together.

Quoted in the magazine, one Lambda Nu member, a male, says, "You think twice about sleeping with a girl when you know you have to face her the next morning at breakfast--and at lunch--and at dinner--and at breakfast."

At Lambda Nu, men and women have separate rooms and baths. The two sexes share the dining room and living rooms, although house members often study together in their quarters.

One girl quoted in the article considered the problem of disapproval on the home front, stating: "My parents really got uptight about this (co-ed living). I used to have nightgowns, so they gave me lots of flannel pajamas."

The resident "housemother" at Grove House, another co-ed habitat on the Stanford campus, supported the premise of Look editor Betty Rollin. This woman, a married graduate student, commented: "You should see the scenes at the door and in the bushes at some of the one-sex houses. It's disgusting. The lockout hours and all that-- it just gives the kids an overemphasized idea of sex.

"It's not that there's no sex here. That would be awful! It's that now we have well-thought-out sex, and well-thought-out sex is less sex."

A similar co-ed dorm has been proposed for UMass. A Board of Trustees subcommittee reported favorably on a plan to make Greenough house co-ed. The plan was approved by the student Senate last spring, and the Full Board is expected to vote on the matter tomorrow.

Wrong Answers

Once again it would appear that those in Washington and certain college administrators are way off base in their concept of the depth that unrest has in our campuses. For Washington to think that by simply cutting down considerably on draft calls for the rest of the year, they will head off campus riots before they start is just an absurd speculation. Actually the basis for low draft calls is the need for fewer troops in Europe, and one need not be a college student to realize this. Certainly the ending of the war in Vietnam is the most visible goal of campus "rebels", but even if that atrocity were ended, as well as all the injustices that have gone along with it, only one sympton of the far reaching disease that has infected America would be cured.

Similarly those designated to study this disease as it manifests itself on the college campus in the form of campus unrest appears to be very much out of contact with both the disease and the patient it has affected. One reliable source and member of the commission studying campus disorder has stated that most of those on the commission have no idea what is happening on college campuses, and are by their very positions, upholders of the STATUS QUO. This is like asking a team of medical students to do open-heart surgery.

Even those, who by their positions would appear to be in better contact with campuses and with the general ills of our society, have been very slow in recommending the necessary medicines. An excellent example of this is at Harvard where the administration refuses to acknowledge that urban problems are important enough to warrent courses concerning these ills. Must a problem exist for a century or must several cities explode or face financial disaster to make Harvard realize the extent of our urban ills?

The basis of campus unrest is indeed deep as are the ills of our society. Superficial methods to placate unrest will accomplish little. To truly placate the college campuses as well as our society would require the true application of the principles on which our society was founded.

Help!

I'm writing in search of advice more than anything else, and I can t think of a better forum than the 18,000 readers of the COLLEGIAN. 334 human beings (all male) are moving into this dormitory today. At least 34 of them will be sleeping on the floor for a while (mattress shortage, you know). At least 102 of them will have two roommates in what must be admitted to be a "small" room, probably throughout the year. All 334 of them (plus the 7,000 or more other residents of Southwest) will spend the year living in as overcrowded a population area as exists in most parts of the world. Though they are an average of only four years younger than I, they will be hemmed, scolded, and punished by restrictions on their personal, emotional, and intellectual lives that are duplicated only in penal and mental institutions.

My job is to be a "facilitator" (Carl Rogers said that) for these 334 people, and I take my job seriously. That means I want to help them develop the human potential within each of them. I want to aid them in their quest for becoming whole persons - aware of themselves, their feelings, their relationships to other people and the world, their unique talents and disabilities, and most importantly, aware of their inestimable value as unique, alive human beings. I expect no miracles, for 24 years of my own life and three years of teaching have shown me how slow, painful, and self-directed the process of change can be. I don't expect to be able to do much by way of helping other people learn - though I might be able to remove a few obstacles, help create a few situations which foster learning, and if I m really lucky I might help someone learn by risking enough to learn something myself.

But right now I must admit to being little short of terrified. There's so little I can do, right now, about the over-crowding, the penal regulations, the 24-hour-a-day living environment of these 334 men. And everything I know about human ecology, about the psychology of learning, and about my own nature as a person tells me that the odds are already against those 334 people learning much this year, no matter what I do.

So, out of that kind of hopelessness and frustration, I'm writing this letter. I have no desire to gripe about conditions which I don't like. And I m sticking it out as "facilitator" at Cance House. But I sure would like some advice on how to come through on my job given all the intolerable given's. Obviously, I nee d all the help I can get.

peace,
Pete Wagschal

Task Force

I for one have had enough of lines. Paying my registration fee took 20 minutes, and I was fabulously lucky. I watched people line up and be herded through registration and course changing. I witnessed the appalling sight of people standing in a row to sign up for physical education - in the WOPE lobby and right down N. Pleasant St. half-way to the Education Building. Most people stand lined up because they think they have no choice. BULLSHIT. If the people w..iting outside WOPE had been informed that Wednesday there would be late registration at Boyden they probably would have gone home and waited for a better time and better weather.

I want to put a stop to this - students playing sheep and administrators playing sheep dogs. I propose the organization of a task force. Its purpose would be to spot growing line-ups and to mobilize immediately. Wherever waiting is absolutely unavoidable and also where it is done for the sake of automated assembly line education, we would set up guerrilla theater or other forms of diversion. Otherwise the group would operate to inform students of alternatives - other more efficient channels within the system, or to suggest sit-down strikes, chanting, singing, etc. In addition the task force would spend time developing alternatives to the whole university structure, and plan for a total boycott of registration in January.

Naturally, the specific actions for mobilization of the task force should be formulated by those interested in carrying on the suggested activities. If you are interested in participating in such a program, please contact Dale at 545-0648 or 545-0974.

"Minority"

To the editor:

I could not but take exception with the article i n Tuesday's COLLEGIAN, titled "New Campus Survey Shows 'Rebels' IN Minority", which declared, with unwarrented relief, that - "only 9 per cent of . . . students could be described as 'revolutionaries' in the sense that they feel basic American institutions should be scrapped and replaced '. It is hard for me to see how one could say ONLY 9 per cent; 9 per cent of a school of 15,000 students is 1,350; would this be ONLY 1,350 "revolutionaries "?

This article also mentioned, in passing, that the probe was "commissioned" by Standard Oil of New Jersey but neglected, to my profound irritation, to say why Standard Oil desired the information.

Counselors Unite!

To the editor:

The counselors of Orchard Hill are writing to inform the other counselors and students of the University concerning the "Counselor Dilemma." Due to the lack of funds which would ordinarily provide for a counseling staff, the well-being of the dormitory system has been threatened. Counselors have been meeting in order to assess the crisis.

The Orchard Hill representatives call all counselors to attend a general meeting on Thursday, September 11, at 7:30 in Engineering East Auditorium, to decide on an imminent course of action. Fur further information please contact Kathy Fitzgerald, 6-6770 or Bill Ohley 6-7194.

Sincerely,

Thank You Dr. Trowill

In behalf of many students in Motivation, Psychology 231, we would like to express our gratitude to Dr. Trewill. Throughout the semester, he has shown deep concern toward his students, as evidenced in the last session of the course when he conducted a meaningful and timely discussion. Not only has he tried to better his students, but he has also tried to better himself and his presentation of the course material. He has shown us how and made us want to think; this is more than many other professors have accomplished. Again, we thank you Dr. Trewill.

Underground Nuclear Blast Frees Colorado Natural Gas

By GORDON G. GAUSS
Associated Press Writer

GRAND VALLEY, Colo. (AP)- A nuclear device was exploded more than 1-1/2 miles under the western Colorado Rockies Wednesday. It was designed to free vast stores of natural gas from sandstone formations.

It will be six months before scientists know how successful their experiment was, but the Atomic Energy Commission says such underground nuclear explosions could free enormous amounts of natural gas - about 317 trillion cubic fee - now locked in rock formations throughout the West.

Project Rulison, an explosion twice as powerful as the atom bomb dropped on Hiroshima, Japan, during World War II, caused the earth to shudder for more than 50 miles in all directions when it was detonated at 5 p.m. EDT

Fear of leaking radiation, that could be carried by water and through the air into man's body, was a major factor in futile protests against the blast that reached the U. S. Supreme Court. About 60 persons staged a peaceful protest at the site just before the explosion.

Sponsors of the project, the AEC and Austral Oil Co., Houston, Tex., have said they feel the some 60 billion cubic feet of natural gas that could be freed by Project Rulison may be worth $1.2 billion.

When the device, buried 8,442 feet under Battlement Mesa in mesaverde sandstone, was set off, newsmen at an observation point 6-1/2 miles away felt a bouncing jolt, followed by miner aftershocks.

In Grand Valley, the explosion knocked out telephone circuits, tumbled a few chimneys, shook loose some bricks from the front of the post office and shattered some windows.

Thirty-five families living within five miles of ground zero were asked to evacute their homes during the blast. Most did, but a dozen persons refused. Some wanted to tend their livestock; others feared their peaches would be shaken from orchard trees and ruined.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

TOKYO (AP) - Soviet Premier Alexei N. Kosygin ended his visit to Hanoi with a pledge of full support to those fighting "U. S. aggression" in Vietnam, Hanoi's Vietnam News Agency reported Thursday.

The officials news agency, quoting a communique issued at the end of the Soviet delegation's visit to attend Ho Chi Minh s funeral, siad the Moscow leadership affirmed its determination "to reserve for the Vietnamese people all the necessary support and assistance to their struggle against U. S. aggression, for building socialism in the North, liberating the South and advancing toward the peaceful reunification of the fatherland."

DETROIT (AP) - Wayne County Auditor Richard Austin Wednesday opened his general election campaign to become the first Negro mayor of Detroit with a challenge to his white opponent to debate him throughout the city.

Austin, who topped a list of 28 candidates in the city's nonpartisan primary Tuesday, called on Wayne County Sheriff Roman Gribbs to debate with him "on radio, on television, in church basements, in meeting halls, on street corners - as often as possible."

Austin said he was not convinced that primary results indicated he couldn't draw enough white votes to win over Gribbs in the Nov. 4 general election. He said he had not yet fully analyzed the election results, but added that if they reveal a weak showing on his part in white areas "there is a serious problem."

"It would indicate that people are not considering the candidates on the basis of ability," he said.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (AP) - Airport controllers had no radio or radar contact with the single-engine plane that collided with a jetliner near Indianapolis Tuesday, officials said Wednesday.

Eighty-three persons died when the small plane manned by a student pilot collided with the Allegheny Airlines plane 20 miles southeast of Wir Cook Municipal Airport. Both planes crashed to earth, and there were no survivors.

Jack H. Frets of the Indianapolis Air Route Control Center said, "The big plane showed on the screen, but not the small plane. This is not uncommon when a plane does not have a transponder or beacon, a device which reflects the radar beams."

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP) - Noted heart surgeon Denton A. Cooley said Wednesday he has resigned from the Baylor College of Medicine in a disagreement about further research with artificial hearts.

Cooley issued a statement saying his appointment as clinical professor of surgery at Baylor was made contingent on his acceptance of control of his research activities by the Baylor Research Committee.

"Subsequent refusal of the committee to accept my proposal for continuation of research at the Texas Heart Institute in the field of cardiac replacement then followed," the statement said.

Cooley and his team have transplanted 20 hearts. Two patients survive. His position at Baylor was as a teacher. He was not paid.

His action stemmed from a controversy over his historic use of an artificial heart in a human.

Negro Enters Mayoralty Primary

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - A 25-year-old Negro anti-poverty agency worker - Frederick Hurst - filed nomination papers Monday for Mayor of Springfield.

Hurst, a graduate of Howard University, is the second opponent to file to oppose Mayor Frank Freedman in the primary election Oct. 7. Parks Commissioner William Kingston filed earlier.

Hurst said his campaign platform is elimination of ghetto conditions. He also wants rent controls, better management of public housing, elimination of the school busing program and a separate school board for the inner city.

He is the second Negro to file for mayor. The Rev. Charles Cobb unsuccessfully campaigned for the office six years ago.

MOSCOW (AP) - The Kremlin charged Wednesday that Red China is delaying the start of border talks while staging almost daily armed intrusions into Soviet territory.

The Soviet government newspaper Izvestia featured an article based on alleged captured Chinese documents and weapons meant to show that Peking is to blame for repeated border clashes. The article was distributed by the official news agency Tass.

It seemed possible that the Kremlin had hoped Peking would reveal a willingness to hold border talks and curb the numerous incidents straining relations with Moscow. The Soviet goverment proposed June 13 a meeting "within the next two to three months."

Goodel Library, lounges and residence rooms are continually the scenes of involved students preoccupied with studying. At Amherst the University offers approximately 1000 undergraduate courses and 76 major fields leading to a bachelor's degree in 52 academic departments. The Graduate School is similarly fertile in its many course offerings.

EDUC Invites All English Majors To Influence Course of Department

The English Department Undergraduate Council (EDUC), the only student organization directly representing English majors, will hold its second meeting of the year Thursday, September 18, 1969 at 7 p.m. in Bartlett.

All English majors are welcome and may become members by attending three consecutive meetings. Because of the lack of student response to the representative electoral machinery established last year, EDUC has found this odd type of participatory democracy effective.

EDUC is the appropriate vehicle for anyone wishing to help direct the future course of the English Department. It derives its power to influence the English Department and therefore the life of every UMass English major from its position as the voice of the University's 1400 plus English majors and from the votes its members cast on faculty committees.

The English Department has actively sought student participation in both departmental affairs and decision making. The Department has created the opportunity for student power, but in the past students willing to exercise this power and the responsibilities associated with it have been lacking.

Since its establishment in October 1968, EDUC has suffered from student disinterest. Despite this disinterest, last year EDUC began to formulate answers to the major problem facing both it and the English Department: what changes will improve both the English Department and the University? EDUC and its individual members have made recommendations, many of which are in the process of being implemented.

What EDUC will do in the future and how effective it will be as the representative of the English majors depends on the support and participation of the student body.

Mass. Pike Authority Appeals For End of Student Hitchhiking

An appeal to end hitchhiking by college students on the Massachusetts Turnpike has been sent to all college deans in the New England area by Chairman John T. Driscoll of the Massachusetts turnpike Authority.

He expresses great concern not only for the safety of the hitchhikers but for all persons traveling on the Massachusetts Turnpike. He emphasizes that a hitchhiker is a menace not only to himself but also to those in the car that stops to pick him up and let him out.

The following is a copy of the letter that was sent to the dean of every college in the area:

"Once again, as students in great numbers resume their studies at Massachusetts Colleges and Universities, I earnestly solicit your co-operation and assistance in eliminating the dangerous practice of hitching rides on the Massachusetts Turnpike and its Boston Extension.

It is not mere coincidence that the most popular locations for hitchhiking have the greatest accident frequency on the Turnpike and Extension. The ride seeker is a menace not only to his own safety but also to that of the occupants of a car that stops to pick him up.

There has been an increasing trend by hitchhikers to stand in such numbers and at such locations on the ramps and toll plazas that motorists are unable to drive past them.

For the safety and convenience of those who use the toll expressway the "Rules and Regulations for Use of the Massachusetts Turnpike" provide a maximum penalty of $50 for those hitchhiking on the Turnpike; and violators may be arrested without a warrant. The State Police who patrol the Massachusetts Turnpike are duty bound to enforce this regulation.

Your assistance in directing the attention of your students to the prohibition against hitchhiking on the Mass Turnpike

Smith-Amherst Theatre Performs This Weekend

The Smith-Amherst Summer Theater presents the third of a series of Three Great Plays by Irishmen this weekend at the Center for the Performing Arts at Smith College in Northampton.

This week's offering is The Importance of Being Earnest, the classic Oscar Wilde comedy of manners and mistaken identities. The actors, students from Amherst and Smith Colleges, are under the direction of Walter Boughton, who capably handled the cast of the group's production of Pygmalion earlier this summer.

The case is headed by Jon Alper as Earnest and George Bentley, an Amherst resident, as per as Earnest and George Bentley, an Amherst resident, as Algernon. Algernon's aunt, the dreadnaught Lady Bracknell, is played by Mimi Kennedy.

Algernon and Jack pursue Cecily Cardew (Sidney Andreani) and Gwendolyn Fairfax (Meri Golden). Hugh Laurence as Rev. Chasuble and Elaine Bromka as Miss Prism round out the major roles in the play.

Perhaps the most exciting aspect of the Smith-Amherst Summer Theater program is the versatility demanded of the actors, which compounded with the time factor (each play receives about a week of rehearsal) produce the intensive short-term effort which is impossible during the school year because of academic conflicts.

The Importance of Being Earnest opens Friday, September 12 and runs through Sunday, September 14. Curtain time is 8:30. Tickets for the Saturday performances are $2.00 each. Friday and Sunday tickets cost $1.50. The box office is open from 10:00 A.M. until 5:00 P.M.

Sen. Dirksen Praised

35 years in both houses of Congress.

"For his massive mind, his matchless speech, his powers of persuasion and his parliamentary skills we give Thee thanks," prayed the Rev. Edward L.R. Elson Wednesday at the funeral service at the National Presbyterian Church.

"For his elevated patriotism and his manly piety, for his grace and dignity in public service we give thanks to Thee. For his prodigious energy spent in self-sacrificing public service, for his fortitude in suffering and his witness to values which are everlasting we give thanks to Thee."

President Nixon, who delivered the eulogy to Dirksen in the Capitol Rotunda Tuesday, attended the service with his wife and daughters. He also escorted Mamie Eisenhower, widow of President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Vice President Spiro T. Agnew was at the service with Mrs. Agnew. He will represent the President at the graveside. Dirksen's Senate colleagues stood at the top of the steps of the Capitol as the rose-blanketed coffin was carried out after lying in state for 24 hours. They then came to the church in buses.

The Senate will not meet Thursday and many of its members plan to attend the burial. Speaker of the House John W. McCormack, a Democrat, and the entire Illinois delegation to the House will be that body's representative.

The widow, Louella Dirksen, had asked that no photographs be made in the church and her wishes were honored. There was only a brief service in the new church opened for worship for the first time Sunday, the day Dirksen died.

There were wreaths from the President, both houses of Congress and one of marigolds from Dirksen's staff. Dirksen long had sought to make the marigold the national flower.

Some former senators, including Kansas' Frank Carlson and California's Thomas H. Kuchel, attended the services. Most of the Nixon Cabinet was there along with officials from other administrations.

The 30-member Army chorus sang hymns after a military honor guard, representing all services, carried the coffin into the church. The seal of the Senate lay on top of the coffin.

Dr. Elson, who is Senate chaplain as well as pastor of the church, and the Rev. Charles H. Reckard of New Orleans, read from the scriptures. Then Dr. Elson who will conduct the graveside services, read a short prayer, which said in part:

"May the integrity of his manhood, the radiance of his character, the warmth of his personality, his gentle but subtle humor and his sense of the divine in all things human remain as an abiding legacy for all generations.

"May his golden voice now silenced on this side be lifted in everlasting praise with choirs invisible on the other side of the great divide."

Speech Therapy Students Conduct Summer Program

The ability to speak and sing is a physical ability often taken for granted by the average person, but not so by youngsters afflicted with congenital speech disabilities. Ten undergraduate and graduate speech therapy students at UMass spent their summer working with 14 children afflicted with cleft palates.

The children came from a 50-mile radius of Amherst for the Monday, Wednesday and Friday sessions which were part of an intensive program of concentrated speech therapy for cleft palate children at the UMass Communications Disorders Clinic. The program was conducted in cooperation with the Services for Crippled Children of the Massachusetts Dept. of Public Health.

As an experience, the concentrated summer session was a success.

A musical pageant presented by the youngsters for their parents and teachers closed the special cleft palate clinic for children sponsored by the UMass Communication Disorders Clinic. This small carnival allowed the children to vocally perform as other children do and similarly allowed their instructors to witness the fruits of their summer teaching experience.

Students Call

sities or shut them down, but simply to use them as a base for working against the war."

The group is also stressing the inadequacy of a Korea-type settlement in Vietnam with large numbers of American troops committed there indefinitely.

A list of faculty sponsors for the demonstrations is being prepared. Letters have also been sent out by the committee to many national politicians, such as Senators McCarthy, Edward Kennedy, William Fulbright, George McGovern and George Aiken soliciting their support for the plans.

The idea of the campus moratorium came from a Massachusetts group, Mass PAX (Political Action for Peace) this Spring.

Student organizers now stress that plans are still in the early stage and details will be left largely to the decisions of individual campus groups.

Full Text of Moratorium Call

(Here is the text of the Vietnam moratorium call to take place next Oct. 15, at colleges and universities around the country. The statement has already been signed by campus enwspaper editors and class presidents from almost 100 colleges:)

Ending the war in Vietnam is the most important task facing the American nation. Over the last few years, millions of Americans have campaigned, protested and demonstrated against the war. Few now defend the war, yet it continues. Death and destruction are unabated. Bombs and fire continue to devastate South Vietnam. Billions of dollars are spent on war while the urgent domestic problems of this country remain unattended. Moreover, the war has had a corrupting influence on every aspect of American life and much of the national discontent can be traced to its influence.

Discredited policies of the past which have brought about this American tragedy have not yet changed. We follow the same military advice which has created a futile and bloody conflict while we cling to the same policy which has caused the Paris negotiations to falter. The token displacement of 25,000 troops over a three-month period is simply not the substantial change of policy that is so desperately needed.

Thus it is necessary for all those who desire peace to again become active and so bring pressure to bear on the present administration.

We call for a periodic moratorium on "business as usual" in order that students, faculty members and concerned citizens can devote time and energy to the important work of taking the issue of peace in Vietnam to the larger community.

If the war continues this Fall and there is no firm commitment to an American withdrawal or a negotiated settlement on Oct. 15, participating members of the academic community will spend the entire day organizing against the war and working in the community to get others to join us in an enlarged and lengthened moratorium in November. This process will continue until there is an American withdrawal or a negotiated settlement.

We call upon our universities to support the moratorium and we commit ourselves to organize this effort on our campus and in our communities. We ask others to join us.

Stony Brook Adopts Tough Drug Code

STONY BROOK, L.I. - Students at the State University here were notified that they could face suspension or expulsion for the sale or use of narcotics on the campus under tough rules adopted by the university's governing board.

The new student rules that go into effect Nov. 1 specified that "no person shall sell, use or possess illegal drugs on the campus."

The regulations provide that a student arrested for the sale or use of drugs on the campus could be brought for a hearing before the university president, who could suspend him.

After the student's case was decided in court, he could then be subjected to a second hearing before the university president who could impose a maximum penalty of expulsion.

In addition to the regular law enforcement agencies, the university itself could bring drug charges against students who would then be dealt with at hearings before the university president. The students would have a right to be represented by counsel.

The new rules were adopted last week by the Stony Brook Council, a nine - member campus governing board appointed by the Governor, which acts as the board of trustees of the 10,000-acre state university center.

Evans Strager, the vice president of the Student Government said in an interview that the new rules would not act as a deterrent on the use of drugs on the campus.

"They might scare a few people a little initially, but the use of drugs is so widespread that it won't make much difference," he said.

He added that the suspension and expulsion of students under the new rules would add to student unrest.

After a narcotics raid by the Suffolk County police last May, bands of students burned campus security police cars, smashed windows and set fire on the campus. The Student Government led a student strike until the end of the spring term.

Mr. Strager, a 20-year-old senior, said that instead of the new rules the council should have asked the State Legislature to pass a law making marijuana legal until it was determined if the drug was harmful.

A. William Larson, the acting chairman of the council and Dr. John S. Toll, the president of the university, said last week that the new rules were part of a drug control program started last year. The university established a drug information center and appointed Dr. Scott T. Richard, a vice president of Student Affairs, to coordinate the drug program.

Hunsberger Joins Ford Foundation

Dr. I. Moyer Hunsberger of the University of Massachusetts has been named program advisor in education for the Ford Foundation in Pakistan.

The former UMass College of Arts and Sciences dean will supervise all Ford Foundation grants and negotiate for new grants in the field of education at all levels and in all parts of the country. The Ford educational program in Pakistan is an extensive one and has been in operation since 1952, he explained.

Dr. Hunsberger will be on leave from his present post as UMass professor of chemistry for his assignment in Pakistan. He will depart at once and be based in the new Pakistani capitol of Islamabad. His wife and four of his seven children will accompany him, the three older children remaining in this country.

Dr. Hunsberger came to UMass in 1960 to head the chemistry department and a year later was named dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, the University's largest academic unit. He resigned as dean March 1 of this year to return to research and teaching in the chemistry department.

A native of Quakertown, Pa., he holds B.S., M.S., and Ph. D. degrees from Lehigh University. After doing postdoctoral research at the University of Illinois under a fellowship awarded by the Atomic Energy Commission, he taught at Antioch College and Fordham University.

Dr. Hunsberger has done important research in organic chemistry and has published some 30 papers on the structure of aromatic hydrocarbons, chemistry of sydnones and reactions of sulfoxides and N-oxides.

Redmen Run Rigorous Training Camp

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Sports
VOL. XCVIII, ISSUE NO. 4
THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1969

Kicking off the 1969 cross-country season, the UMass harriers held their second annual summer training camp in Vineyard Haven on Martha's Vineyard Island. Team co-captain Leo Duart again played host to twelve members of this year's squad. The twelve runners, put up in a three room cottage, lived off their own money, the cooking of the team's seniors Dave Evans and Bill Donaldson, and a dozen old, cast off mattresses.

However, the Island trip was not for a vacation as it is for thousands during the summer. The team ran double workouts everyday, covering over 120 miles of roads, paths, and beaches in ten days.

Workouts consisted of five miles before breakfast and anything from distance to repeat water sprints through 100 yards of ankle deep water or repeat 80 yard sandhills that went up from the beach at a 60 degree angle for afternoon runs. From the hilly roads and Gay Head Beach Cliffs, the team transported to Amherst and began training on familiar ground in preparation for a 13 meet schedule.

Starting with just two seniors, seven juniors, and nine sophomores and with success counting heavily on the inexperienced group of "super sophs," the squad will run up against its toughest opposition in the first three meets.

Harvard and Providence supply the first opposition in Boston on September 27. Both schools have good teams this year with Harvard probably the best in New England. The Crimson, which were third in the East Coast's IC4A championships last season, are working on 23 straight dual meet victories. On October 4th, UMass travels back to Boston to run against Northeastern, who they narrowly beat by one point last year. The Huskies have four of their top five returning. The first home meet is on October 11 against the defending Conference and New England champions, the University of Connecticut. UConn has four of their top five back along with last year's top frosh in New England, Scott Carter. Again they should prove tough.

After UConn, the Redmen run four meets in less than two weeks. URI is in Amherst on Oct. 14, UMass is at BC on the 18th and at Springfield on Oct. 21. The harriers run against Holy Crossat Worcester on the 25th. The Crusaders just beat out the Redmen for the number two spot in New England last year although UMass walloped HC in a dual meet. The Crusaders own one of the toughest courses in New England on the hills of Worcester.

Following the HC meet is the Yankee Conference meet on Nov. 1 on UMass' five mile course. UConn, UMass, UNH, and Maine look the strongest as the season begins. After taking on Central Connecticut the runners enter the New Englands on Nov. 10 in Boston followed by UNH on the 13th; the 1C4A's on the 17th and the NCAA's on the 24th, both in New York.

Losing the capabilities of the likes of Charlie Lang, Paul Hoss, and Marc Gelinas through graduation the team will have to work hard to equal or surpass last year's team marks of an 8-2 record, 2nd in the conference, and 3rd in the New Englands. Leading the team this season will be the co-captains, juniors Ron Wayne and Leo Duart. Wayne and Duart ran one, two for the Redmen last season and have the needed experience of the pressure on the front runners. Wayne is the defending conference champion and the second place finisher in last year's New Englands. Duart's best race came in the New Englands where he placed seventh. Following this pair is another pair of juniors, Ton Derderian and Larry Paulson who have improved tremendously since their frosh season and who will be counted on heavily.

Next come the sophs who could make the team a success if they can quickly gain the experience of the longer race. Leading this coherent group is last year's top frosh Don Dunsky, followed closely by Bruce Blackburn, Steve Whicher, Al Mangan, and Mike Cowles. This group will battle each other throughout the schedule for top position and will also put pressure on the juniors in front of them. Also running with this group will be junior Dave Eiben who reported this year in his best shape ever and the team's seniors Bill Donaldsen and Dave Evans. Close behind will be juniors Bob Benshimol and Joel Fox and sophs Bob Jayes, Don Brigham, Arnie Morse, and Jeff Scagnelli pushing the group in front.

Coach Ken O'Brien, beginning his second season at the helm of cross-country, feels that this team can achieve as much as the last if the group of ten runners who are battling for the two through seven spots can produce all out efforts every meet.

BREEZING ALONG - More Redmen harriers are pictured during yesterday's practice session. They are (l-r) Mike Cowles, Bruce Blackburn, Steve Whicher and Don Dunsky. UMass' first meet will be with Harvard and Providence on Sept. 27.

IM Program Enrolls Over 30,000 Members

What campus activity encompasses over 30,000 participating members? What campus activity has 66% of the male population as members? Well, the answer to these questions is the Intramural Program, a program that is one of the biggest on campus.

The UMass Intramural department is one of the finest such intramural departments in the East. Created formally in 1946-47, the program originally encompassed four sports. Now, more than 20 years later the program contains 19 activities, ranging from touch football and basketball to paddleball and horseshoes.

The program also has expanded its two year old coeducational section to seven activities.

The intramural program, in addition has taken over the recreational activity program (formerly called the free play). This activity last year had a recorded participation of over 32,000 people.

This season, in addition to expanding the co-ed portion (Braves and Squaws division), the intramural department has added two activities, paddleball, and the Metawampee 500 Bike Race to the already existing 17 activities.

A final new feature is the creation of a separate grad-faculty division, thus forming four separate divisions, independent, fraternity and dormitory being the others.

Heading up this myriad of activities are Intramural Director Ted Schmitt and Assistant Director Peter Graham.

Schmitt, a former assistant football coach at the University for several seasons, is anticipating this season, ever-increasing numbers participating, but he sighed, "The way we have been growing, I don't know if we can take many more. But this is the largest activity on campus and it provides a huge majority of students the opportunity to participate in athletic activities. Our program is the envy of many schools in the East."

Graham, in his second year as intramural assistant director, defined as the basic goals and scope of the program, "A chance for some form of athletic competition for each student, and with our program we have something that should interest most anyone. Also our co-educational program provides recreational needs for men and women together. The objectives of our program is therefore more recreational than competitive."

This year's include touch football, tennis, tug-of-war, cross-country, paddleball, bike race, 10 pin bowling, basketball, handball, squash, volleyball, wrestling, swimming, soccer, badminton, softball and horseshoes.

Those wishing to form intramural teams should obtain through the intramural office, the program booklet which contains all necessary information about creating a unit.

From the meager beginnings of five sports to a program that last year supervised 62,076, the UMass intramural program is now the finest program in New England, providing an excellent chance for UMass students to participate in the sport of their choice.

Trustees Consider Open House, Alchohol, Coed Dorm, Today

By MARK SILVERMAN
News Editor

There is better than a 50-50 chance that the University's Board of Trustees will accept this afternoon the recommendations of its subcommittee of student matters, and pass student programs on open house, alcoholic beverages, and a co-ed Greenough House.

"There is a reasonable chance that the Board will accept the committee's recommendations," Student Affairs Office Administrative intern John Dubois explains, "because the Board seldom goes against the recommendations of its committees."

The subcommittee meeting earlier this week, recommended that the Board approve the Student Senate initiated proposal of dorm autonomy, a plan which would allow each dorm to formulate its own open house hours, apart from any overall hour plan.

The subcommittee also recommended that students under 21 obtain parental permission to participate in open house, and the entire proposal is contingent on the establishment of "adequate security programs."

On the question of alcoholic beverages, the subcommittee recommended that drinking be allowed in dorm rooms and lobbies for all students over 21.

The subcommittee recommended that a co-ed dorm be established in Greenough for the spring semester, providing the following three conditions are met.

First, that written permission be obtained from all students, second, that a meeting be held with all participating students, their parents, and several administrators attending, and third, that enough Greenough residents voluntarily approve of the plan, thus making room for the women.

Counselors open discussion on job status in Eng. Aud.

Counselors Organize Campaign Attempt to Keep Jobs, Pay

By ROBERT HANCOCK
Staff Reporter

Faced with the possibility of losing their jobs, residence hall counselors gathered in the Engineering Auditorium last night to plan action for continuing the present counseling program and receiving proper compensation.

The meeting was closed to the press.

The DCRC did inform the Collegian following the meeting that various staff committees have been formed along with an administrative committee. Members of the administrative committee which has the task of dealing with administration officials are:

Ferdi Gunduz, Peter Wright, Steve Stola, Michael Koch, Neil Dore, John Messnuger, Central Area Co-ordinator, Paul Brubacher, SW Area Co-ordinator, Don Carew, of Head Counselling Service.

The meeting involved about 125 counselors from the Orchard, Central, Northeast and Southwest areas who passed by a majority vote the action advocated during a meeting.

Among the decisions last night was a plan to have freshmen ask their parents to write administrative officials, asking for the continuance of the counselling program with proper compensation. Funds were also collected after the meeting to support the counselors action.

After the meeting the following statement was released:

"We the undersigned counselors and concerned members of the University community believe that there is a great need for the continuation of the present residence counseling system and that these counselors should continue to receive $200 per semester.

"The following are the duties of the residence hall counselors which necessitate maintaining the present counseling system:

1. Helping students deal with the alienation which they face on an impersonalized campus.
2. Maintaining dorm security under the present reduced security conditions.
3. Carrying out administrative responsibilities associated with operational aspects of the residence hall.
4. Helping to maintain University regulations within the residence hall.
5. Maintaining control of the students in emergency situations.
6. Assisting the Head of Residence in his duties.

"We feel that Dean Field acted in bad faith in that he did not consult any counselor or his staff before making the decision to retract counselor compensation for the spring semester. We were all led to believe that our period of employment would be for the entire academic year and many counselors planned their finances accordingly. We see this act as just one instance in which the University administration makes decisions greatly affecting the lives of students without consulting these students."

Tippo Tells Faculty Entire Univ. Will Help To Pick New President

By ALAN SIROTA
Staff Reporter

Provost Oswald Tippo informed the Faculty Senate at it's first meeting of the year Thursday, that assurance has been given by the Board of Trustees that the entire University Community would be involved in the selection of a new president. Final selection will, however, rest with the Board of Trustees.

In his opening remarks Tippo addressed himself to some of the financial issues of the University. Among the points raised were:

...Due to the size of the current budget, there will be less money available for equipment this year than last, including $500,000 less available for library books.

...13.4 million dollars has been appropriated for the Fine Arts Building to be located at the south end of the pond.

...The proposed addition to the infirmary will be smaller than planned because of limited appropriations.

The question was raised whether the University should admit fifteen hundred additional students next fall in view of the amount of financial support the University has received. 3-1/2 million dollars would be needed for the additional students.

The Provost told the Senate that an election committee of seventeen members will soon be appointed by the Governor to set up ground rules for the election of a student to the Board of Trustees. There was comment from the floor about the need for faculty representation, which as Tippo said, also raises the question of non-professional staff representation.

In the only other business conducted by the Senate, Laruen Beth of the Government Department and Randolph Bromery of the Geology Department were elected to the Senate's Rules Committee.

To Faculty and Administration:

Copies of the DAILY COLLEGIAN are being distributed to most departments and offices this week free of charge. Starting Monday, Sept. 15, only those faculty members, administrators and staff members who have notified the DAILY COLLEGIAN of their intent to subscribe will receive the paper.

To facilitate matters for both the DAILY COLLEGIAN staff and the mail room, we request each department to submit one list to the DAILY COLLEGIAN office with the names of those wishing to subscribe to the paper.

Subscription price for on-campus personnel for the entire year is $5 (well below the $11 for off-campus subscriptions).

We wish to remind members of the faculty, staff and administration that copies of the DAILY COLLEGIAN distributed in the Student Union are for students only. Staff members who take newspapers from the Student Union are depriving students of DAILY COLLEGIANS which they have paid for through the Student Activities Tax.

Reds Parley In Peking

MOSCOW (AP) - The Soviet and Chinese premiers held a surprise meeting Thursday in Peking - the first high-level meeing of the two powers in four years.

The official Soviet news agency, Tass, revealed the conference, saying Alexei N. Kosygin and Chou En-Lai had "useful" talks but giving no clue to the substance.

The meeting brought a briefhiatus in the violent denunciations that the two giant neighbors have been trading in disputes over borders and the direction of Communist ideology.

The Soviet leader had been in North Vietnam to attend the funeral of President Ho Chi Minh, and this made his stop in Peking the more intriguing to observers. Chou En-Lai could have met him in Hanoi, but left there in advance of the funeral in what appeared to be a studied effort to avoid a face-to-face meeting with Kosygin.

How the Peking visit was arranged was not explained. Tass said only that the two met by "mutual agreement."

"The two sides openly explained their positions and held a conversation useful for both sides," said the 150-word Tass announcement.

There was no immediate comment from Peking.

The Kosygin stop coincided with the arrival in Peking of a three-member delegation from Communist Romania headed by Premier Ion Gheorghe Maurer, which also attended the Ho funeral in Hanoi.

It is estimated that 500 students who were pre-registered for courses this semester will never appear in the classes. Since specific numbers and names are not known on course changing day, many courses and sections were listed as closed when actually openings would occur after the first day of classes.

To aid students during the current course-crisis, the DAILY COLLEGIAN requests that faculty members determine if any empty seats exist in their courses or sections, and then notify the Collegian office. The DAILY COLLEGIAN will print the list of course openings throughout the add-drop period.

Ground Attacks End Vietnam Truce

SAIGON (AP) - U. S. and enemy ground forces locked horns again Thursday at the end of the Viet Cong's three-day truce, but American planes ceased their aerial bombardment without explanation.

U. S. B52 bombers, which had dumped a million pounds of explosives on enemy positions immediately after the truce ended at 1 a.m. Thursday, flew no raids Thursday night or early Friday.

Asked why, a U.S. Command spokesman said: "We report missions as they are flown. We don't comment beyond that."

Twenty - nine enemy shellings were reported early Friday, following 39 attacks on bases and towns the previous night.

Commenting on the ground war, a U. S. field officer said: "We're back to normal. We're after the enemy again. We're going into areas where we've had reports of movements or bunkers."

During the 72-hour cease-fire proclaimed by the Viet Cong to mourn North Vietnamese President Ho Chi Minh, U. S. ground forces had adopted a defensive stance, firing only when fired upon.

Renewed fighting was reported northwest of Saigon and in the An Hoa area 24 miles south of Da Nang, where U. S. Marines killed 20 enemy soldiers in four separate battles at a cost of one Marine killed and 17 wounded.

U. S. 25th Infantry Division soldiers and South Vietnamese paratroopers killed another 49 enemy soldiers in a five-hour battle 53 miles northwest of Saigon on the slopes of Black Virgin Mountain.

U. S. losses were two killed and seven wounded, with government casualties described as light with no fatalities.

In another battle 35 miles northwest of Saigon, an OH6 light observation helicopter was shot down by enemy fire during heavy fighting involving U. S. 1st Infantry Division troops. It raised to 3,002 the number of choppers lost in the war.

Students Asked to Teach Children

The Educational Studies Program is looking for students who would like to teach high school students on a part time basis (Sat. morn.) in almost any subject matter. The courses can range from mathematics to comparative religions.

This program has been operating at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology for eleven years and has been very successful with over sixty student faculty and an enrollment of over eleven-hundred H.S. students. This program was originally designed with the intent of providing undergraduate students an opportunity to experience teaching and to enable those interested in educational reform to experiment in curriculum and teaching innovations. This program was student run at M.I.T. and will continue to be so here at UMass. For more information contact: Phil Appel, 212 Moore, Tel. 546-5327.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

MIDDLE EAST (AP) - Israeli and Egyptian jets tangled over the Suez Canal Thursday in the fiercest aerial battles since the six-day war of June 1967.

This battle followed on the heels of an Israeli amphibious assault earlier this week.

MOSCOW (AP) - Soviet and Chinese premiers held a surprise meeting Thursday in Peking - the first high-level meeting of the two powers in four years.

The talks have caused a temporary halt to the invective the two giant powers had been hurling at each other in recent weeks.

SAIGON (AP) - The 72-hour Viet Cong called cease fire to mourn the death of Ho Chi Minh ended Thursday. U. S. spokesmen said they had no word of renewed enemy attacks.

GRAND VALLEY, Colo. (AP) - Project Rulisen, an underground nuclear explosion to jar loose rockbound natural gas, was detonated in Western Colorado Wednesday afternoon.

The blast, 40 kilotons in strength, was an experiment aimed at freeing natural gases held tightly by deep sandstone formations. It was touched off at 5 p.m. EDT

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Richard H. Goodwin, a close associate of the Kennedy family, said Thursday he believes the presidency in 1972 is out for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy because of his Chappaquiddick Island tragedy.

However, the '76 election is another story. "1976 is a long way off but I think he can come back."

WASHINGTON (AP) - Jet planes and helicopters have been ordered not to fly over the Capitol for fear vibrations might cause its deteriorating west wall to collapse.

Flowers Honor Ho At Liberty Bell

PHILADELPHIA - Demonstrators placed flowers and a bowl of rice beneath the Liberty Bell yesterday to honor Ho Chi Minh, late president of North Vietnam.

Police held back a crowd of men and women who shook fists and shouted obscenities at 10 members and sympathizers of Resist, an antiwar organization.

Ho died Sept. 3, 24 years and a day since he proclaimed independence for Vietnam by citing the words of the American Declaration of Independence, "All men are created equal."

Senate Committee Applications Available

The Student Senate consists of ten standing committees made up of both senators and non-senators. It must be emphasized that non-Senate members have full voting power on committees and since much of the work is done there, this power is considerable.

Applications are in the Student Senate Office on the top floor of the Student Union. The President of the Senate makes all appointments to the nine standing committees. He does so with the advice of the Vice-President and the respective chairmen. He also appoints members to the joint student-faculty and student-administration committees. THE ACTUAL PROCEDURE OF APPLYING MERELY REQUIRES YOU TO GO TO THE SENATE OFFICE, GET AN APPLICATION, FILL IT OUT AND RETURN IT TO THE SENATE OFFICE.

The overriding thought, however, is, and must remain, that this government is yours. You must make it respond to you and if it does not then you must change it. One way to do this is to join the Senate's Committees.

Student Power's success, just as its failure, is our responsibility.

Public Relations

The PUBLIC RELATIONS COMMITTEE has as its goals:

1. The education of the student population concerning its rights, privileges, and responsibilities in the University community.
2. Informing the Senate of student views on the Senate and campus issues.
3. Promoting communication between the Senate, Administration, Faculty, Students, and the Commonwealth.
4. Publicizing elections and other Student Government opportunities to students.
5. Informing the Students concerning the actions taken by the Senate, administration, etc., all that can effect life at the University or the Students' future.
6. Using publicity to help students redress inequities and air their complaints.
7. Make sure organizations receiving Senate funds publicize the service they offer.

The goals are attained through the use of printed material, polls, coffee hours, WMUA, and the COLLEGIAN, suggestion boxes and special projects.

Student Matters

The committee originates and recommends to the Senate and the administration all legislation concerning security procedures, curfews, the Student Code of Conduct, residence hall life, the judicial system, and other related issues.

The committee has general supervision of the campus judicial structure, conducts the selections for the judiciary, and scrutinizes judicial procedure; it also formulates the residence staff evaluation and selection process.

During the year, the committee holds a Judicial Conference and conducts gripe sessions in the residence halls. The committee works closely with the administrators, in particular, the Dean of Students and the Area Coordinators. Last year, the committee dealt, for example, with a new open house policy and picketing code.

Services

The committee deals with the various aspects of student life pertaining to student aids, health conditions, commercial operations, and all the other matters concerning student services.

Committee members investigate complaints and suggestions by students in order to improve food services, living conditions, bus service, parking policy, and many other aspects of campus life.

Academic Affairs

The Academic Affairs Committee is charged with the review and evaluation of all matters relating to academic policy and practice which are brought before the Senate. For each such matter, regardless of its origin outside the Committee or Senate, a study is made of the present practices, of the changes proposed, and of the effect upon the over-all educational experience which the proposal would have. The Committee's findings and recommendations are communicated to the Senate, which may then act upon the item.

Further, the Committee is free to, and does regularly, develop proposals and recommendations of its own, referring these to the Senate for action. In addition to the small items of day-to-day university life, the Committee keeps a continuing eye on the undergraduate curriculum, developing and suggesting such changes as seem necessary to develop a more perfect and satisfying academic program for all students. During 1968-69 the Committee undertook a complete reappraisal of the curriculum of the College of Arts and Sciences formulated a new program as seemed appropriate to the liberal arts unit of a large university in the later 20th century.

With the significance and importance of the area under its concern, the Committee is a most important one to the life of every undergraduate. The Chairman is an EX OFFICIO (but non-voting) member of the Faculty Senate's Academic Matters Committee. As with other committees, its success depends upon cooperation between the two senates and the University administration. At present there is no fixed breakdown into sub-committees, such matters being adjusted to fit the particular matter under consideration.

Finance

This Committee investigates and reports to the Senate the advisability of granting appropriations or loans that are not regular budgets to organizations or causes in the interests of the students. Aid for such projects can be in the form of grants, loans, advice, or other legislation. The committee's conclusions are presented to the Senate floor for approval or carried by committee members, as in cases where non-financial aid is recommended. The committee also explores all suggested changes in Senate financial policy.

SGA

S.G.A. is responsible for the conduct of all Student Government Association elections and referenda. Although such duties are necessary and commendable, they generally require a minimal amount of time on the part of committee members, especially after the completion of the annual Senate elections in September or October.

The more demanding responsibility of the committee is to consider all questions relating to the philosophy and structure of student government. All amendments to the S.G.A. Constitution and the Student Senate By-Laws must be referred to this committee before enactment. The new S.G.A. Constitution developed by this committee will be open for a referenda this fall.

Activities

The Activities Committee of the Student Senate is one of the most active and vital of the Senate's nine standing committees. Charged with the task of reviewing each and every constitution on campus, the committee is responsible for ensuring that all Recognized Student Organizations maintain a democratically-elected student leadership and operate in accordance with R.S.O. regulations. In conjunction with this, responsibility, the committee undertakes a yearly re-evaluation of campus-wide organizational policies and makes recommendations to the Senate concerning needed changes.

Ways and Means

Ways and Means, unlike most Senate Committees is not a fundamentally legislative body. It serves as a check on the Financial Policies of organizations receiving Senate Funds or Financial assistance. The committee has access to all Financial records of organizations that receive Senate funds.

Specifically the committee:

a. Investigates compliance with Senate Financial policy.

b. Assures compliance with the organizations internal budgetary categorizations and Senate approved "binding" clauses.

c. Evaluates the efficiency of organizations based on their formal financial statements and RSO records.

d. Recommends future action by the Senate or General Senate Financial policy.

e. Acts as liason between the Senate and aides organizations, informing them of policy changes.

Budgets

The Budgets Committee is the chief financial committee of the Student Senate in that it is responsible for the investigation and review of all budgets considered by the Senate. The budget for fiscal year 1969-70 represents over $4,000,000.00.

In the course of investigation of budgets, the committee is looked to to formulate a working policy for the Senate's appropriations. If an organization's budget is not considered deserving of Student Activities Tax money, the budget is recommended unfavorably to the Senate. Since the money to fund these organizations comes from a tax paid by all undergraduate students, the considerations of the committee must in the last analysis, judge on the worth of an organization to the campus at large. Often these judgements are on issues which are not obvious or innately clear and concise. The nature of this work compiled with the enormity of the work load, makes Budgets a committee where important work takes place every year.

FROM OUR SIDE

A Matter of Give and Take

It's been a rocky beginning.

The first week of the semester has certainly been problem filled. Between the 2000 students living in triples and the 4,000 students losing desired courses, the endless lines in the bookstore and the aggrevation of the parking lots, the week has certainly been a test of endurance.

The latest information from the Provost's office indicates that 4272 students lost courses. The Administration's reason for the unprecedented scheduling difficulty is the inability of academic departments to add sections where they are needed. The underlying reason for this inability is the budget cuts imposed by Gov. Sargent and the legislature. However, Beacon Hill cannot be held responsible for all of our problems.

In recent years the average number of credit hours taught by faculty members has declined. In years past professors taught at least nine credit hours, and most usually twelve credit hours. The trend now is for professors to teach as few credit hours as possible, usually between six and nine, and spend the extra time doing research. The University has invested considerable money bringing to campus certain "name" scholars who devote the majority of their on campus time doing research and only a relatively few hours a week teaching undergraduates.

We urge Provost Tippo and Dean Shapiro to review the teaching load of every faculty member and where possible ask the faculty member to teach an additional section. This action is essential not only for the 4000 students who have lost courses, but also for the thousands of others who are enrolled in overcrowded courses. The students have made their sacrifice in the wake of current University fiscal problems. It's time for the faculty to make some sacrifices too.

A Game With Players

Players:
Three or more male upperclassmen, one female upperclassman, one female frosh.
Objective:
Fro Frosh girl: To leave room with virginity, sobriety and status intact.
For other players: To make the Frosh girl as uncomfortable as possible without having her leave the room.
Rules:
1. Female upperclassman leads Frosh coed into room with the male players after curfew. Upperclass female then pairs off with one of the men, and they are not heard from again.
2. Men's moves:
a. Nudge up against the Frosh, wipe dirt from her shoulders.
b. Invent a touch game (e.g. "buffling" - burying face into stomach) and demonstrate.
c. Demonstrate and teach various yoga positions including double inverted lotus (which is illegal in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts), head stand, and breathing techniques.
d. Inform the room that a certain record is great and must be played with the lights out (records should include the Mothers of Invention, the Fugs and the Banana Splits).
e. Start a wrestling match or fight with another male and tumble down on to the Frosh.
f. Break the "vin rose" and pass it around complaining that the carbonation has gone out of it.
g. Tell the story about a friend's pregnancy and subsequent elopement.
h. Debate the relative merits of "Screw" and "Playboy".
3. Freshman girl's moves:
a. Go to the bathroom.
b. Complain that it is an hour after curfew.
c. Counter the "vin rose" move by complaining that it smells rancid.
d. Sit in chair in an air-raid drill position - knees up, hands on knees, head bowed.
e. Counter all risque jokes by saying, "That is not funny. It is gross, and I do not like grossities.
f. Ask naive questions but never to the same person twice in a row; play the men off against each other.
g. Cry.
h. Be active, and above all, STAY ON YOUR FEET.
Conclusions:
The game can be ended in many ways:
1. Frosh leaves.
2. Frosh strips.
3. Frosh gets drunk and/or stoned.
4. Upperclassmen get drunk and/or stoned.
5. Upperclassmen learn that the frosh knows much more than they thought she knew.
6. The frosh actually enjoys what is happening (note, this is the most common ending).

The Autumn White House

WASHINGTON - President Richard Nixon has just moved the White House from San Clemente, Calif., to Washington, D.C. The President indicated he might spent part of the winter in Washington, and he has asked his chief advisors and Cabinet officers if they would move there temporarily so he could confer with them.

When asked why the President had chosen D.C. for his fall headquarters, an Administration spokesman said:

"The President has always had a warm spot in his heart for Washington, and with communications the way they are these days it's just as easy for him to handle the nation's business from Washington as it is from San Clemente, Calif. Besides, if anything important happens, the President can always fly back to San Clemente."

While Administration officials, for security reasons, refuse to discuss where the President will live, it is rumored that he has taken a house located at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave., overlooking the Washington Monument on one side and Lafayette Park on the other. Neighbors in the area report that they have seen Secret Service men looking over the grounds and checking the neighborhood.

When a reporter asked the Nixon spokesman if the President would live in this particular house, the spokesman replied: "We are looking at several houses in Washington and I believe it would be premature to say which one the President will live in."

The choice of Washington as the President's autumn White House came as a surprise to many residents of this sleepy town on the Potomac. The Chamber of Commerce naturally was delighted.

The man at the chamber office told me, "The fact that the President has selected Washington to live in this fall is a feather in our cap. It's going to bring in tourists and newspapermen, and we might even get to see some dignitaries from abroad. I guess you could say the President has put Washington on the map."

The manager of the town's largest department store said, "I don't know what effect the President's move here will have on business, but we do need a shot in the arm."

At the same time the chief of police said, "It could cause traffic problems, and I'm not sure I have enough men to handle it. But any time the President of the United States selects this place to live, even if it's for a short time, I think we should consider it an honor."

A neighbor of 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. didn't seem too pleased about the President moving there. "We're quiet folks around here and we don't like to be bothered by a lot of commotion. Of course, the President has a right to live anywhere he wants, but I'm checking the zoning regulations just to make sure no one's violating any of the rules."

Another neighbor said, "It won't make no difference to me. Everyone's all excited about the President coming here, but I'm not going to change my way of life just because he wants to live in Washington for a while."

On the whole the reaction to the President moving to Washington has been good.

One high school student said, "I guess this will stop people from calling us a tank town."

One effect the news of the President's move has had is that hotel keepers and restaurant owners have already raised their prices. While there has been some bitterness about this, one hotel owner said, "Heck, with the President in town we're going to have to put on more help. The people coming here to visit him are going to demand more service. We're not gouging anyone."

The real problem the people of Washington face is that they don't know how long the President is going to stay.

One merchant said, "We'll probably spend a lot of money fixing up the town and then Mr. Nixon will decide to move on to some place else. I know the President doesn't like to stay in one spot too long, and I think it's a mistake - just because he says he wants to live in Washington today - to assume that he still wants to make his headquarters here tomorrow."

Respect, The Presidency, And Dick

Living with Richard Nixon is a little like living with a dog who hasn't been housetrained. He annoys one's guests, he looks foolish trying to fetch a stick, and he often messes up the inside of the house in an undignified manner. As a watchdog, well, you have little confidence in him. Nevertheless, you find it hard to take such a mutt seriously.

Unfortunately, problems arise when this amusing pet is the President of the United States. It's no problem to send Snoopy to the moon, but Pluto Pup at the Paris Peace Talks is something else again. The business of being executive of the most lethal country in the world is deadly serious. Such a job, with its pressures and responsibilities, requires someone who understands the modern world, and is personally secure enough with himself that he can concern himself with the world's rather than his own problems.

These are my two most serious doubts about our 37th President. These shortcomings make it impossible for him to function in the office in 1969.

The world of today is poorly understood by the Nixon generation. It is indeed an unfortunate combination to be born in 1914 and unversed in the natural, applied, and social sciences. The slow-paced times when governing was best the function of lawyers has passed. A man of Nixon's orientation is incapable of comprehending a technology sufficiently advanced to go to the moon and eliminate the value of human labor. His welfare proposals demonstrate his lack of comprehension of the question of labor. Perhaps he should read Marcuse. It's probably too late for either.

John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson came from essentially the same time period. Since a President is actually foreman to the Federal Bureaucracy, he can make up for his own limitations by choosing advisors wisely. This Kennedy did. As for King Lyndon, his failure stemmed largely from his inability to attract men such as Robert MacNamara, men who come not from the field of politics but from other fields which bear more directly on the twentieth century than do the smoke filled rooms of Miami. Nixon has Henry Kissinger, and we now have safeguard. Otherwise he has surrounded himself with the Dents and Thurmonds, going so far as to block John Knowles' and Franklin Taylor's appointments to scientifically oriented posts for political reasons.

Another aspect of his contemporary ignorance is his dealing with the blacks. (Yes, there are still blacks.) After buying senator Thomas Brooke (R-Mass.), he has ignored him. At a time when the young blacks and the white radical sympathizers pose a real threat to the Nixon way of life, he, Strom, and Mitch are busy pretending Brown vs. Board of Education concerned teaching evolution or praying in the Leyden schools. The staying influence of Doctor King is gone forever. A generation has grown up since 1954. After four hundred years of making the mountain grow cotton and steel, one must understand if today's blacks won't accept being tossed fishes and loaves. Dick has to come to gripe with this. Perhaps he can. Perhaps Strom will declare amnesty on all political debts. Perhaps.

My other fear is that the man calling the shots in his head. No American can have missed his neurotic obsession with convincing himself that he is indeed king.

To Armstrong, Aldrin, and Collins: "This is the greatest thing that's ever happened, and it's not just because I'm the President of the United States." He devoted what there was of his life to getting there, now he's there. When he finds personal security then maybe he will be able to function. In his job, the a priori qualification is self assurance, something which he lacks noticeably. And he is not President for the sake of being President; he is there to serve the country. Can he?

Hubert and George have fallen along the wayside. Sir Eugene has given up on the unreachable star. Spiro may not make it back from Mars for quite a while, and Romney is only 13th in line to the throne. That leaves Nixon. The country, certainly, will still be here in 1972. I suppose there's really nothing to hassle. Still it's been almost two thousand years, and one tires of waiting for someone to respect.

See you in Marrakesh if you make it.

Vietnam Moratorium OK'd by Holyoke College Faculty

HOLYOKE - The Holyoke Community College faculty, at its first meeting of the new term Wednesday, by a 66-34 vote favored participation in an Oct. 15 "national moratorium for colleges to consolidate public sentiment to be expressed in favor of withdrawing troops from Vietnam immediately."

FIRST IN AREA

The HCC faculty thus became the first Western Massachusetts college faculty and one of more than 300 across the country expected to support the Vietnam Peace Action Committee proposal.

Dr. Miriam Sajkovic, chairman of the history department at HCC and chairman of the newly formed faculty committee favoring participation, and Dr. John W. Arnold, chairman of the humanities division at the college and introducer of the resolution, said faculties at Smith College and the University of Massachusetts are expected to give support in the near future.

Dr. Sajkovic said the Vietnam peace action committee was organized by many former McCarthy-for-president personnel.

Would Encourage "Squares"

Dr. Arnold stressed that the aim of the movement is to encourage "squares", more conservative elements in the community that share their feelings about the war but do not express them, to take part.

Local activities being planned for Oct. 15 include distribution of leaflets throughout the city and sending letters to Rep. Silvio O. Conte, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, Gov. Francis Sargent, and Mayor William S. Taupier requesting a resolution for the immediate troop withdrawal from Vietnam and support of the Oct. 15 action.

Other plans include a peaceful vigil, asking that persons refrain from "business as usual," and circulating a petition urging President Nixon to withdraw all troops.

WILL GET CHOICES

Dr. Arnold said faculty members will give their students three choices by secret ballot. They may either suspend classes and participate, suspend classes and make up time by mutual appointment with the instructor, or hold classes as usual.

Participation would be purely voluntary and there would be no disruption at the college and no picket lines, Dr. Arnold said.

He said the reaction of the HCC administration was one of restraint until the Regional Board of Community Colleges in Boston is contacted. Dr. Arnold said individual letters requesting board approval of the participation would be in the mail today.

Dr. Sajkovic said the HCC student Senate at a special meeting during the summer had voted to support the movement. She said student representatives would probably be invited to faculty committee meetings next week to discuss coordination of efforts.

Dr. Arnold said he recently met with Mayor William S. Taupier and Police Chief Thomas O'Connor to discuss plans in this city. Neither Taupier nor O'Connor were available for comment Wednesday.

A leaflet from the Vietnam Peace Action Committee reads "Ending the war in Vietnam is the most important task facing the American nation. Over the last few years millions of Americans have campaigned, protested and demonstrated against the war. Few now defend the war, yet it continues. Death and destruction are unabated. Bombs and fire continue to devestate South Vietnam.

"Billions of dollars are spent on war while the urgent domestic problems of this country remain unattended. Moreover, the war has had a corrupting influence on every aspect of American life and much of the national discontent can be traced to its influence.

"If no action is forthcoming from President Nixon following the activities on Oct. 15, the national Vietnam Peace Action Organization will plan an enlarged and lengthened moratorium in November."

Gov. Urges Bankers Aid Student Loans

By BOB HANCOCK
Staff Reporter

Wednesday afternoon in a prepared statement, Governor Francis W. Sargent urged Massachusetts bankers to adopt measures and to act quickly to meet the student loan shortage.

"I strongly urge that the banking community make available as many loans as possible during these closing days before college openings as an investment in the future of our state," Sargent said.

The lack of federal funds for student loans, which have not kept pace with growing enrollments, and increasing prime interest rates, and up to 8-1/2%, have contributed to the financial squeeze on students.

Presently, the federal government will only guarantee a student loan up to 7%, 1-1/2% below present loan rates.

President Nixon has promised to raise the government backed rate to 10%. However bank officials are reluctant to act until this happens. Thus the pinch continues on students.

Some bankers see the problem continuing in the future, even if federal rates are raised. Paul G. Black, a senior vice president of Shawmut National Bank, said in a recent interview there is a "pyramiding effect" with student loans which tie up an excessive amount of a bank's resources for too long with a low return.

Shawmut has been a heavy backer of the student loan program, but, Black said, "the unequal participation" by other types of lending institutions - savings banks, cooperative banks, and credit unions.

"For the federal government to lay the major burden of this program on the backs of commercial banks alone isn't fair. The number of students asking for loans is increasing tremendously, and this burden simply cannot be carried by commercial banks alone," he said.

Convocation Next Week

A colorful academic procession of robed faculty and administration will begin the annual University Opening Convocation, Wednesday, Sept. 17, at 10:10 a.m. The program will be held in the Student Union Ballroom instead of the traditional site outside of Goodell Library because of construction.

Students, faculty, administration and friends of the University are invited. UMass President John W. Lederle will deliver the last of his annual opening talks to the academic community. This year marks the end of a decade of leadership to UMass by Dr. Lederle, who will return to teaching next year.

President Lederle will speak on "The Humane University" and the annual Distinguished Teacher Awards will be presented. The recipients are selected by an all-University faculty committee and are honored for "manifest excellence in the art of teaching and outstanding devotion to the cause of education". Included is a $1000 stipend.

Classes scheduled to begin at 10:10 on Convocation day will be cancelled so that students and faculty may attend.

NOBEL PRIZE WINNERS RAP WAR RESEARCH

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Associated Press

NEW YORK - Dr. George Wald of Harvard University who won the Nobel Prize for research on vision, said yesterday he refused a government laboratory's request that he help develop a chemical warfare agent that would temporarily blind persons.

A spokesman for the laboratory denied Wald's allegation.

At the same meeting, Dr. Albert Szent-Gyorgyi, also a Nobel laureate, attacked the government for cutting back cancer research funds.

Wals and Szent-Gyorgyi spoke to the 158th national meeting of the American Chemical Society.

Wald, who is known for his support of young people who oppose the Vietnam War, said the production of weapons has had a deleterious effect throughout society.

Wald received the Nobel Prize in 1967 for work on the chemistry and physicology of vision.

"That work I got the Nobel Prize for, I'm proud of it and I'd like to think that it's innocent," he said.

But a year ago, he said, he was asked to help develop the chemical blinding agent.

The request, he said, came from a director of medical research at the Edgewood Arsenal, an army installation at Edgewood, Md., where chemical and biological warfare research and development is performed.

Dr. Wald said he told the caller he would be happy to work on something to save vision, but not on anything harmful. The Army caller, he said, asked: "Wouldn't you rather blind them than kill them?"

Wald said he answered: "What do you think you do with a foe you've blinded."

At Edgewood Arsenal Oliver Cejka, chief of the information office, said he had talked to Col. Joseph R. Blair, director of medical research at the arsenal.

"He indicated," Cejka said, "that to his knowledge no one from Edgewood had ever contacted Dr. George Wald with that request in the six years that Col. Blair has been here."

The meeting, also heard another Nobel laureate declare that the government had cut funds for his cancer research.

Dr. Albert Szent-Gyorgyi said the government had withdrawn support for research on his new theory of cancer because "killing has preference over healing."

The National Institutes of Health he said, last September cut off a $120,000 grant supporting his cancer research because of over-all governmental budget cuts.

"Unfortunately, at present," he said, "killing has preference over healing."

Wald came to national attention last Spring when he addressed Massachusetts Institute of Technology students and faculty holding a one-day "research stoppage" to protest military work on campuses.

Yesterday, addressing some 2000 chemists, including many from defense industries, he attacked chemical weaponry.

Napalm, he said, is an appropriate focus for young people's anger: "It is the most brutal and destructive weapon that has ever been created. Of all the means by which men can die, I think you'd put burning to death at the bottom of the list. It is used against civilians, innocent people, women, children, the helpless. The only reason I think people can use it is that they aren't in position to watch its consequences."

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon announced Thursday on the eve of a major Vietnam policy review that he will fly to New York next week to address the United Nations General Assembly.

The Performing Arts

By: STEPHEN WALT
Fine Arts Editor

Certainly there is positive value attached to living in a University community. Much of this comes from the varied possibilities for broadening one's experience and background. The University Fine Arts Program offers such an opportunity for self-expansion.

This semester's program offers an impressive sampling from the various fine arts. For example: in the field of classical music, Mischa Dichter and Carlos Montoya; in dance, Alwin Nicholais; in theater, The National Shakespeare Co. (and the University Theater) - this list being only a representative sampling. (Could I be implying that one could bring a date to "Macbeth" - or worse, go alone?)

A glance at the figures for last year's concert attendance reveals that I may be backed up by only a sparse group of elitist who have expanded into the arts (surrounded by the philistine hordes). This is probably not the case at all; its more likely that most students have simply not been concerned with a like expansion. Certainly the same cannot be said for the field of athletic events or popular music concerts. (I attend both - that is not necessarily a put-down).

Having been on last year's Fine Arts Council, which passed the new ticket policy charging undergraduates for Fine Arts events, I feel compelled to attempt qualifying the situation. Justification for free admission of undergraduates seems to be that this procedure is traditional. (So is paying counselors.) If the old policy were in effect, this year's program could not have been brought to campus without a substantial increase in the Fine Arts Tax. This would have cost everybody; allowing a few to enjoy programs at other's expense.

The Fine Arts Program being offered this year has more than increased quantity to offer as improvement over past similar programs. Popular music, dance, and theater programs have been added to the standard Celebrity Series. The showing of some events more than once is also am improvement. This allows for a much larger audience, one which can come more at its own convenience.

Therefore, I endorse the new ticket policy, the Fine Arts Program, and an involvement in this program.

Dance Ensemble to Perform at Smith

The Afro-American Dance Ensemble, a company of dancers and musicians from Philadelphia, will be presented September 24 and 25 at the Center for the Performing Arts, Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts. The event will be presented by The Dance Concert Series in association with Smith College.

Tickets for the performance may be obtained at the box office between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. at the Center for the Performing Arts, Northampton, telephone 584-2700, Extension 640. Ticket sales commence September 10 and mail orders are accepted.

The company is under the direction of Arthur Hall, who is their chief choreographer. Concerned with Black culture, he states: "One of the best ways to educate oneself on the ways of others is through the study of a people's culture. The music, art, dance and literature of a people are keys to the soul of a people. A better understanding is gained of the people, and without understanding all is lost."

The Afro-American Dance Ensemble has this past season performed at the Philadelphia Music Festival, The Department of State, Washington, D.C., Yale University, Swarthmore College and most recently at a return engagement to Jacob's Pillow, the internationally known dance festival.

Subscriptions also are available for the complete Dance Concert Series. Kennedy Points Toward 1976

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - A close associate of the Kennedy family said Thursday he believes the presidency in 1972 is out for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy because of his Chappaquiddick Island tragedy - but the 1976 election is a different story.

"He's taken himself out of the 1972 race," said Richard H. Goodwin, adding: "1976 is a long way off but I think he can come back. Who knows what's going to happen?"

Redman Soccer Seeks Rebound with Mix of Old and New

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1969

12 Lettermen Back, Sophs Show Promise

UMass head soccer coach Peter Broaca begins his first full season as Redman mentor with the task of improving a 4-6-1 record, while playing one of the more challenging soccer schedules in New England.

Broaca was appointed head coach to take over the vacancy left by the retirement of Larry Briggs, the Dean of New England soccer coaches, who had served as the only soccer coach in UMass history for 36 years. Broaca took over for Briggs early last season when Briggs was forced out due to illness.

A native of Hyannis and a graduate of B.U., Broaca has been on the university coaching staff for three years. He has served as freshman basketball coach and has compiled a record of 34 wins and 14 losses and has also served as assistant soccer coach.

The new Redman coach will have five starters and 12 lettermen back from last year's squad that finished fourth in the Yankee Conference. Leading the returnees is last season's leading scorer, Duane Brown. A junior, Brown scored 10 of the Redmen's 20 goal last season, including a school record of five in one game.

Also big returning stars are co-captains Rick Matuszczak and Dick Meyer, both second team All-Yankee Conference selections.

Other lettermen returning include Ed Schmitter, an iron man at times last season, fullback John Mercury, forward Larry Defelice, back-up goalie of a year ago, and looming as a starter this year. Tom Malone, halfbacks, Paul Bregoli, Dave Dec and Dave Piccus and fullbacks Ralph Etna and Mike Korpita.

Some of these returnees, however, may have to give way to a fine crop of sophomores. Tops among this group are forward and high scorer Lindo Alves, halfback Augie Calheno, fullback Gary Hart fullback Paul Stack, halfback Joe Ciernawoski and forward John Russo.

Broaca, with a lot of strength in the halfback line, is contemplating using several of these players in other positions. Whatever happens, the coach believes he will have more depth than he had last year, when injuries decimated the squad severely.

Among the foes this year, in addition to those in the Yankee Conference, will be the number one and two teams in New England, Springfield and Trinity.

DYNAMIC DUO - UMass soccer co-captains Rick Matuszczak (right) and Dick Meyer, both second team conference picks seek to improve fortunes of Redmen. Opening game will be September 27 at Maine.

UMass Athletics. Wide Array of Activities

The athletic program at UMass offers each student an opportunity to show his stuff. During the fall, while the varsity football team pursues intercollegiate fame, student teams vie for the campus championship in intramural touch football.

This is but one example of the dual role sports play at the University of Massachusetts. The athletic program at UMass, according to President John W. Lederle, "is an integral part of the University's extracurricular program designed to help students grow in the indispensable personal qualities of spirit and character."

In addition to a broad spectrum of intercollegiate sports, the athletic department, under the direction of Warren P. McGuirk, Dean of the School of Physical Education and Director of Athletics, boasts an extensive intramural athletic program.

Fourteen intercollegiate sports compose, in Dean McGuirk's words "the most comprehensive athletic program of any of the New England Land Grant Universities." UMass has been the perennial Yankee Conference champion. Teams are fielded in such diverse sports as skiing, golf, hockey, gymnastics and lacrosse in addition to the old standbys, football, basketball and baseball.

Varsity teams compete in the Yankee Conference, the NCAA, and the Eastern College Athletic Conference.

Facilities include football's Alumni Stadium, the Curry Hicks Cage and a new varsity baseball diamond. Indoor sports are accommodated in Boyden Gymnasium which contains complete facilities for swimming, gymnastics, bowling and wrestling. There are also tennis courts and soccer and lacrosse fields.

The average student does more than just watch the varsity. The athletic department's intramural office administers a large intramural sports program aimed at the student who does not want to participate in intercollegiate athletics.

"Intramurals provide the opportunity to engage in recreation and competitive activity," says Ted Schmitt, program director. "They aid the student in carrying out his prime purpose in attending the University; that of achieving a well-rounded education."

The program is an increasingly popular part of campus life. Approximately 500 intramural teams play more than 2,000 contests each year. Two out of three male students play some intramural sport. Graduate students and faculty members, who are not included in these figures, also field teams.

Sixteen sports are offered ranging in varity from horseshoes to tug-o-war, and including football, softball and basketball.

Competition is keen, and spirited rivalries have grown between residence halls and fraternities. Teams are assigned to either residence hall, fraternity or independent leagues. Playoffs are held in all sports, including all-star games in football, basketball, bowling and softball. Trophies are awarded each spring to the leaders of the three leagues.

The intramural program is keeping pace with the expanding University.

Error Appears In Ticket Books

A printing error appears in the ticket coupon booklet handed out at registration Monday. The initial coupon lists the Buffalo game as being Sept. 20, when it should read September 27.

Therefore the coupons will be redeemable thru Sept. 24, and not thru Sept. 17 as is listed.

Ticket Manager Wally Novack asks all students to note the change and redeem their coupons accordingly. He also reminds students that seats are redeemed on a first come-first serve basis.

NHL Expands

NEW YORK (AP) - Vancouver, Baltimore and Buffalo are believed to have the inside track for the two new franchises which will expand the National Hockey League from 12 to 14 teams for the 1970-71 season.

In addition in a major realignment of the divisions, the Chicago Black Hawks will compete in a division including Los Angeles, Minnesota, St. Louis, Oakland, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia.

Mets Win Again, 4-0

NEW YORK (AP) - The first-place New York Mets increased their National League East Division lead Thursday, beating the Montreal Expos 4-0 behind Gary Gentry's six hitter.

The victory was the seventh straight for the Mets and stretched their bulge to 1-1/2 games over the Chicago Cubs who were scheduled to play a night game at Philadelphia.

Gentry, who evened his record at 11 - 11, kept the Expo hits well scattered and never was in serious trouble. Hot-hitting Ken Boswell again led New York's offense. Boswell, who had five hits in Wednesday's doubleheader sweep that put the Mets in first place for the first time ever, drilled two more Thursday.

Boswell singled in the third when the Mets scored their first run and doubled another run home in the fifth. Tommie Agee also had two hits for the Mets and Cleon Jones scored twice before being removed from the game with a slight injury in the seventh inning.

Agee singled leading off the third and marked time while Wayne Garrett popped up. Then Agee stole second and was awarded third when Gary Sutherland interfered with him. Minutes later, Agee scored on a passed ball by catcher John Bateman.

INTERESTED IN CREW? - There will be an important organizational meeting of the crew club for all interested new members tonight at 7 p.m. in Boyden 249. Freshmen and upperclassmen are invited. Slides will be shown.

VOL. XCVIII, ISSUE 6 UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1969

THIS WAS THE SCENE last August when approximately 50 UMass students picketed downtown business establishments protesting high rents and poor living conditions. This weekend their cause received a big boost when Atty. Gen. Robert Quinn ruled that local communities have the right to establish rent control boards.

Atty General Rules Local Towns Can Establish Rent Control

A major step towards eventual rent control in the town of Amherst was taken this weekend when Atty. General Robert H. Quinn ruled that local communities have the authority to establish rent control regulations.

Quinn's statement came as he approved a limited rent control law recently passed by the Brookline Town Meeting.

In recent months exhorbitant rent increases, particularly in the Amherst, Brookline, and Cambridge areas have brought protests and have particularly hurt the elderly, students and other s who live on fixed incomes.

Quinn said: "The recently adopted home-rule amendment to the Massachusetts Constitution allows any city or town to do. . .what the Legislature may propoerly enact for the whole commonwealth."

"Rent control has been upheld in our courts in the Russell case of 1954 upon declaration of public necessity and emergency. . .This by-law, in my opinion, contains the elements of the old rent-control statute, and the Legislature has currently not acted in this field for the commonwealth."

The question of rent control has been unclear for some time. Boston's legal department, for example, has said specific authorization by the Legislature was needed before the city could establish rent controls.

The Legislature did enact this year a bill authorizing Boston to establish rent controls.

The Brookline by-law, however, is not rent control in the full sense. It simply increases the power of the Rent Grievance Board, which can now seek court action or fines to prevent rent increases which it deems unfair.

True rent control regulation would provide for a board with powers to pass on increases and establish standards for them.

A by-law connot be effective without approval of the attorney general. Quinn said: "Certainly no one can deny that very grave housing emergencies exist in many of our municipalities, particularly for persons of low to modest income."

He made it clear that if local towns and cities establish rent control regulation it must also protect the rights of landlords.

He said his office could take action to halt rent controls that set ceilings too low..

Last Aug. 12, a group of 50 UMass students presented Amherst Town Manager Allen L. Torrey a list of eight demands, one of which demanded the "immediate formation of a rent control board made up of tenants to eliminate the corruption of a seller's market."

Three days later, Torrey answered the demands and said, "At this time the Town of Amherst does not possess authority to create a rent control board." He explained that the town could take no action on rent control until the matter was clarified on Beacon Hill.

Now that the matter has been clarified by the Attorney General, Torrey said the question of rent control is now up to the people of Amherst.

In a Daily Collegian interview Sunday the town manager said a new by-law would be needed before rent control existed. He said a group should begin the necessary preparations now for presenting the proposed by-law to next town meeting.

He refused to say whether he would support a rent control by-law.

"Quinn's ruling is important," he said, "it greatly strengthens the home rule amendment. Rent control is now up to the voters of Amherst."

Meanwhile, eleven Cambridge rent control protestors arrested during a sit-in demonstration Thursday were released on $200 bail Friday and ordered to report for a hearing Sept. 23 in Cambridge District Court.

The defendants, who had refused to leave the third-floor Election Commission offices in the Municipal Building, were among more than 50 members of the Peace and Freedom Party actively pressing for a rent control referendum on the November ballot.

Many were canvassing the city streets near Harvard and Central Squares, handing out leaflets that urged residents to attend meetings and organize support for the measure. Thirty others who picketed the Municipal Building during the sit-in were arrested on various charges, and their cases were continued to next Friday.

Boston SDS Member to Speak At UMass Chapter Meeting

The UMass S.D.S. chapter will hold its first meeting of the semester tonight in the Student Union Council Chambers at 8:00 p.m.

Featured at the organizational meeting will be Bob Wofang, an S.D.S. member from Boston who will speak on the National S.D.S. call for action in Chicago on October 4.

This proposed action would coincide with the opening of the trial of Bobby Seale, David Dellinger, Tom Hayden and four others for alleged conspiracy to riot during the Democratic National Convention last year.

Trustees Postpone Action On Student Proposals

By JOHN STAVROS
Friday Issue Editor

In a regular monthly meeting of the UMass Trustees last Friday, a wide range of proposals was covered while considerations in the area of student activities were postponed.

Proposals allowing a co-ed Greenough House, legalization of drinking in dorms and on campus for students 21 and older, and new open house policies will all be presented at a special meeting of the Trustees to be held within the next ten days.

Rescheduling was necessitated when the Trustee's committee handling student activities requested an extension in order to properly present the items. Pat Beharry, spokeswoman for the U-Mass Student Senate commented, "The Trustees have demonstrated cooperation with the arrangement of this special session so that proper consideration be afforded the items. We are happy with the progress."

The Trustees also considered the revised picketing code which had been submitted to them late in the Spring. The old code states picketing would not be allowed in buildings for both faculty and students, and the revised request would allow the Student Senate to formulate a code separate from that arranged by the faculty. The trustees sent the proposals back to the Faculty Senate for further study.

The procedure for selection of a president to fill the position vacated by President Lederle in June of '70 was then considered. The Board of Trustees "Committee to Advise on Selection of a President" chaired by General John J. Maginnis of Worcester reported a procedure had been selected. In order that all academic groups be represented in the selection it was proposed eight committees be formed at the three UMass sites to submit names of candidates to the Trustees.

The groups would be apportioned in the following manner. The Alumni Associations of Boston and Amherst would each create a group, faculty and administration would combine within each of the three schools while each of the three student bodies (Amherst Grad., Undergrad, and Boston), would form committees.

The committee at the University Amherst will consist of 8 faculty members, the Provost, one Dean and one Department Head, while UMass Boston will have 5 faculty, the Chancellor and one Department head, and the Worcester Medical school would be represented by three faculty, the dean of the school, and one department head.

It was stated that no criteria for selection would be presented because all members of the University community are presumed to know what the qualifications of a president should be. It was also believed that all the qualifications needed to make a good president could not realistically be listed.

A large portion of the meeting was spent with the presentation of plans for the UMass Boston, Columbia Point campus. The developers of the site reported to the Trustees in a slide talk that the basic layout for the new campus had been completed.

With the entire enrollment commuting to the school, plans were formulated making the school structurally a University College system with separate parking facilities on the three seasides of the campus for each college community and fine arts oriented buildings would then be located nearest the Expressway. Sciences will be located in the center of the campus. The proposal was passed by the Trustees and the next step in the plans will be taken.

Nixon Could Halt Draft To Stem War Moritorium

By MARK SILVERMAN
News Editor

President Nixon may announce a temporary halt to the draft and another troop withdrawal from Vietnam to head off the scheduled War Moritorium on October 15, and to quiet rising domestic criticism of the War.

In a New York Times News Service story yesterday, a war critic who allegedly has access to top level administration communications said that the President plans to temporarily halt the draft for an unspecified time this fall, while permanent changes to the Selective Service System are sought.

The report also says that the President will shortly announce the withdrawal of 35,000 men from the War zone. And while the White House offered no comment on the reported change in Draft policy, the alleged troop withdrawal is seen as a distinct possibility.

A key aspect to the impending draft changes includes a policy that no draftee would be sent to Vietnam against his will.

If the President were to suspend the draft this fall while sounding out Congress on methods of permanent reform, he would merely have to tell Selective Service Director Lewis B. Hershey not to draft anybody.

Presumably, 18 year-olds would still have to register, and local boards would still call people to take physicals. The only difference would be that, during the temporary suspension, nobody would actually be inducted into the military.

Maroon Keys to Crown Queen

The largest class in the history of UMass will have its first opportunity to function as one with the election of Miss Freshman. The annual competition to crown a freshman queen, sponsored by the Maroon Keys, begins with the selection of nominees from each women's dorm.

Representing her dorm, the nominee will appear before a selection board comprised of sophomore Maroon Keys and Scrolls. On September 19, five finalists will be named. From September 23 - 25, the entire Class of 1973 will be able to vote for one of the finalists they think should be named Queen.

The Queen will be crowned at the annual Sophomore - Freshman Picnic following the first home football game against Buffalo on September 27.

Amherst Manager Says:

Students Keep Close Watch on Govt.

The college student today appears to have a far greater interest in social and economic factors affecting his college and country than did his predecessors a generation ago, according to Amherst Town Manager Allen Torrey.

IN RECENT PUBLICATION

Writing in a recent publication, Torrey says that while student concern is worldwide in scope, it is likely to be focused on the campus and city where the students education is taking place.

"Consequently, the policies and action of local government comes under close scrutiny by student militants. Minority problems and police actions are of particular concerns, of student unrest," Torrey said in the July issue of Management Information Service, published by the International City Management Association.

The report also dealt with economic, financial, cultural and sociological impact of college's and universities on the city and towns in which they are located.

OFTEN SPILL OVER

"We are witnessing student demonstrations, strikes, riots, and other civil disturbances that often spill over from the campus to the city streets," said Torrey.

The town manager said that local police and campus security forces in small cities are often inadequately trained, staffed and equipped to cope with such problems.

"Fire as well as police departments are very often involved, since rioting almost invariably leads to fires and numerous false alarms. Often fire departments demand police protection when covering areas of civil disturbances. The extent to which local police are involved in campus problems varies from city to city. Outside assistance from sheriffs' departments and state police is helpful in severe situations," he said.

CAN'T SWEEP UNDER RUG

Torrey said city government "cannot sweep under the rug" the possibilities of student disturbances.

"It should take appropriate steps to insure the safety of all its citizens and properties by carefully training and properly equipping its public safety forces. It should maintain close and open channels of communication with the college administration, with college security forces, and with student leaders, if possible," he said.

Continuing, Torrey said city officials should try to provide "sensitivity training" for police and fire forces," to be sure the causes of student militantness are understood, this often heading off potential conflicts between students and safety personnel."

CARE IN RECRUITMENT

"Care should be taken in the recruitment of police personnel to eliminate candidates exhibiting tendencies toward prejudice toward students, in the same manner as is being applied toward racial prejudice in the examining process. City administrators in cities having large student bodies must expect an increasingly active student participation in community life and adjust their own thinking as well as their training and recruitment policies to this end," he said.

Torrey is town manager of Amherst, which is headquarters for the University of Massachusetts, Amherst College and Hampshire College.

Conte Considers Resolution To Repeal Tonkin Gulf Vote; Says U.S. Must Leave Viet

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP) - Rep. Sylvio O. Conte, R-Mass., said Sunday night he was considering filing a resolution to repeal the Bay of Tonkin resolution by which Congress gave the President war-making powers in Vietnam.

"I am seriously considering with some other men in the House to file a resolution asking the Congress to say that we will repeal the Bay of Tonkin resolution in 12 months and let the Congress act on a new resolution," Conte said on radio station WBEC's "Bay State Review" program.

"I think the Congress and the public are fed up with this, and the quicker we get out of Vietnam the better off we are going to be," he added.

The congressman said we are "losing boys every day, we have no business in Vietnam, it's a land war that you couldn't win if you stayed there for 20 years." He said the war is costing $25 to 30 billion a year which could be better spent on domestic programs.

Chancellor Broderick of UMass Boston reported to the Trustees that in order to face the problem of rapid construction, requests had been submitted to the legislature to bypass certain procedures eliminating red tape. Broderick stated the proposals had been turned down by the legislature along with a request for money to study how students would be transported from the existing MBTA station to the campus. It was noted that 40% of the students would be commuting by car while the other 60% will have to use the MBTA facilities.

Broderick stated the University in Boston was having staffing problems in providing proper student faculty ratio and it would worsen with the expected increase of 500 students over the present 3500. Briderick stated: "We need $1 million more to staff the school properly for next year, and more help to handle the plans for $15 million of construction. At the present moment we have exactly 2 people and a secretary, hardly enough for $15 million of construction."

The last report to the Trustees was made by Dr. W. Saunders for Dean Souter of the Medical school. Mr. Saunders reported that the school had already received 200 in state applications to its first class enrolling next fall.

Revolution No Longer Political

Campus Rebels Fire at Society's Cultural Armor

WASHINGTON - Back-to-school sales next semester may feature bulletproof vests, gas masks and bazookas. They would, at any rate, if retailers pay attention to congressional witnesses and dire prophecies from politicians.

Gov. Ronald Reagan visited Asia, where he predicted zestier altercations on campus next year. The man who gassed Berkeley by helicopter may have had a stake in fulfilling such a prophecy.

If the system cannot respond, if the powerful cannot respond, Palmer says, "then we will do it our way ourselves," adding that "this is not a threat; it is a warning."

In Washington, Prof. Ernesto E. Blanco, late of Tufts and M.I.T., told the Senate Internal Security subcommittee that "we are living in the preliminaries, the clearcut preliminaries, of a revolutionary period."

When asked what the political translation of student energy might be, Palmer smiled hesitantly and said, "Well, we have tax-exempt status and we're not supposed to get into partisan politics."

Of his fellow faculty members - to whom he attributes blame for undergraduate unrest - Blanco said "their way of thinking was heavily influenced by Marxist principles and ideas."

There you have it - the National Student Assn., with 460 chapters and hundreds of thousands of eager radicals talking like an oil lobby or the Ford Foundation.

Both Blanco's statements are right. This is indeed a revolutionary time and old Karl Marx has certainly had a hand in it. Marx must share honors, however, with Henry Ford, Sigmund Freud, Bob Dylan and W.C. Fields.

Students no longer seem a real threat so institutionalized have be come their tastes. The adult world smiled beninly when leaders of the future tore down goalposts or ravaged for co-ed underwear. But when energy acquired a political purpose, adult jitters produced "the generation gap", the greatest cliche-hangover since "manifest destiny."

College students have revolutionized life in America without firing a shot, as it were. Their revolution is no longer political and they seem willing to accept that, or at least as willing as Gene McCarthy is.

The revolution is cultural, having elevated itself as above the petty maneuverings of politics. Thenew president of the National Student Assn. is Charles Palmer, 22, former student body president at Berkeley and one of the progenitors of last Spring's "People's Park" movement, which incurred Reagan's helicoptered wrath.

The campus rebels may have already made their political point and are busily probing chinks in society's cultural armor. The "People's Park" movement was simply a dress rehearsal for the Woodstock art and music festival. Woodstock was to 1969 what the McCarthy campaign was to 1968 - a romantic splurge of earnest spontaneity, demonstrating unity, strength and beauty.

How can adults cope with such a massive rejection of their goals and values? Canvass their neighborhoods for Richard Nixon? Ship 300,000 Rotarians to upstate New York?

They might better relax and enjoy the new age, stop rattling rhetorical sabres, pledge to expunge "generation gap" from their vocabulary, and leave the kids alone.

The Pentagon normally instructs the draft machinery two months in advance of its quotas. However, no quota has yet been set for November.

Under the Selective Service Law, the President can change the prime age groups by Executive order, but cannot initiate a lottery system without legislative approval.

Many "experts on the draft" feel that Nixon will not begin to draft 18-year-olds first without a lottery, because of his feeling that, without the lottery, drafting 19 year-olds first would be unfair to persons born at the end of the month or the end of the year.

Meanwhile, the Pentagon supposedly feels that any all-volunteer army even temporarily, is "a ridiculous idea."

But other sources indicate that an all-volunteer army is an important goal of the Nixon administration. The Times's source claims that the President now wishes to calm domestic opposition to the war by halting, temporarily, the draft, while continuing the present military level of action in Vietnam. This, supposedly, would still be possible with an additional 35,000 man reduction in troop strength.

The President met with his advisors in Washington Friday, but no announcements on what was decided upon are expected to be made until the middle of the week.

But the confused aftermath of the cease-fire, the top level meeting Friday, and the President's scheduled address to the United Nations next Thursday all have raised speculation on the administration's future war policy.

How to Reform University Government?

American Academy of Arts and Sciences Forms New Assembly to Tackle Problem

The American Academy of Arts and Sciences is the latest academic organization to tackle the question of how university government should be reformed.

Responding to growing student and faculty dissatisfaction with the current system of governing universities, the academy is establishing an Assembly on University Goals and Governance. The academy is made up of some 2000 leading scientists, scholars, teachers, professionals and artists who are elected to membership.

In announcing the formation of the new assembly, Prof. Talbott Parsons of Harvard, president of the academy, referred to the resources needed to meet the demand for reform.

"The Academy is one of a rather small number of organizations which is in an especially favorable position to help to mobilize those resources and to facilitate both communication and creative relationships and combinations among those who command them," he said.

"Its own center of gravity is in the academic world and it counts among its members a distinguished sample of the personnel of that world."

The new assembly, according to the academy announcement, will seek to involve "the young as well as the experienced, the dissident as well as the satisfied, legislators and other citizen representatives as well as professors, academic administrators and students from many kinds of campuses."

Martin Meyerson, president of the State University of New York at Buffalo, will be the chairman of the assembly. Prof. Stephen R. Graubard of Brown University editor of the Academy's journal, Daedalus, will be the director of studies, and law Prof. Robert M. O'Neil of the University of California-Berkeley will serve as counsel. All three will be on partial leave from their universities during the coming year.

The assembly will commission a series of special research projects and studies including one on the rapidly growing body of law that affects the government of colleges and universities.

"Almost every college and university is in the midst of rethinking its mission and the kinds of participation appropriate to its future governance," Meyerson said.

"These efforts will become sound rather than fitful responses to the waves of current complaints only as they are shaped and evaluated by intense scrutiny. Of most importance for the assembly is the prospect of developing fresh suggestions for college and university governance through the combined thinking of working groups of students, faculty, administrators and citizens."

Student Loan Interest Increase Under Double Attack in Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) - Fees of high interest rates and of student dissenters may make it hard for Congress to keep administration leaders' pledge to bankers to raise the interest on government-guaranteed student loans.

Banks across the nation are reported to be pouring out loan funds to students on the promise of an increased return, but the bill that would give it to them is under a double attack.

One group objects to giving the banks an interest rate increase above the 7 per cent how fixed for the student loans. The bill would permit an adjustable rate up to 10 per cent.

The other group wants to add a provision that would withdraw federal financial support from any student involved in a serious campus uprising, but it faces a procedural roadblock.

In an effort to keep the bill out of the student unrest controversy its manager, Rep. Carl D. Perkins D-Ky., chose to bring it up Monday under rules prohibiting any amendments. The price of such a procedure is a requirement for a two-thirds majority for passage.

Supporters of the anti-riot amendment hope to team up with the high-interest opponents and prevent a two-thirds majority. They feel Perkins would then be forced to bring the bill up under normal procedures, permitting amendments.

When it became apparent Congress couldn't pass the bill before most colleges opened and students needed loans to attend, President Nixon and Secretary of Welfare Robert H. Finch pleaded with bankers to go ahead and make the loans on the assurance that the bill would be passed as soon as Congress returned from its August vacation.

William M. Simmons Jr., chief of the insured loan branch in the U. S. Office of Education, reports that the banks have responded "magnificently."

Even if the bill passes the House the banks won't be sure of their higher return at once. The Senate, in passing it earlier, added amendments that would increase the authorizations for other student aid programs and prohibit a bank from making loans conditional upon the applicant or his family having an account at the bank. The House and Senate versions will have to be reconciled and the results submitted again to a vote in each body.

If the anti-riot forces succeed in getting their amendment approved by the House, the effort to achieve a compromise with the Senate would be considerably more difficult. In the view of Perkins and other supporters of the loan program, this might doom it entirely.

Indianapolis Airplane Crash Caused By Radar Deficiencies

BOSTON (AP) - The president of the National Association of Government Employees said Sunday night the air crash in Indianapolis Ind., that claimed 83 lives, including three New Englanders and a former Manchester, N.H., resident, could have been prevented.

Kenneth Lons said there was "adequate warning of the problem six weeks ago at the airport in Indianapolis. Nothing was done about it. The administrator, when we explained to him the radar situation there, pointed out to us that once again he was going to make a proposal to Congress.

"We asked him to have the President present a special message to Congress for immediate money to correct the radar deficiencies throughout the country. And also to hire immediately or to train immediately at least 5,000 additional air traffic controllers."

Gromyko Heads Soviets At UN General Assembly

Gromyko is coming to head the Soviet delegation to the 126-nation assembly's three-month, 24th session, opening tomorrow.

He is expected to hear President Nixon's speech to the assembly Thursday morning, when the general policy debate begins. He will probably meet the President that day.

Gromyko will speak in the general debate Friday morning. His speech will be watched for clues to the meaning of Soviet Premier Alexei N. Kosygin's meeting in Peking Thursday with Premier Chou En-lai, which came amid a propaganda war and after border clashes between their countries.

U. S. officials are looking to private talks to show whether Gromyko has a Soviet reply to the latest U. S. proposals for an Arab-Israeli settlement, presented to him in Moscow July 14 by Joseph J. Sisco, assistant secretary of State for the Near East and South Asia.

They also want to know whether he has a favorable response to President Nixon's July bid for an early start on the long delayed strategic arms limitation talks, concerning U. S. and Soviet missiles and antimissiles.

President Lyndon B. Johnson is said to have been about to announce a trip to Moscow to start those talks when the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia in August 1968 queered the arrangements. Nixon is understood to have proposed that they begin July 31, 1969 or thereafter somewhere in Europe.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers, expected from Washington Wednesday or Thursday, is likely to see Gromyko when the President does. But their first definitely scheduled meeting is a working dinner Saturday night with U. N. Secretary-General U Thant.

Thant has invited Gromyko, Rogers, French Foreign Minister Maurice Schumann and British Foreign Secretary Michael Stewart to the dinner in his office suite. He told newsmen Friday he hoped the four powers would "redouble their efforts", suspended since July 1, to settle the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

Rogers will have Gromyko to dinner in New York Sept. 22, to discuss the Middle East, Vietnam, European security and arms limitation. Gromyko will have Rogers to dinner Sept. 26.

But the bilateral Middle East talks may be resumed even earlier on their usual level, between Sisco and Anatoly Dobrynin, Soviet ambassador to Washington.

Dobrynin will be on Gromyko's plane, returning to his post from a long home leave, and he may meet Sisco this week.

Lederle to Give Address At UMass Convocation

A colorful academic procession of robed faculty and administration will begin the annual University of Massachusetts Opening Convocation, Wednesday, Sept. 17, at 10:10 a.m. The program will be held in the Student Union Ballroom instead of the traditional site outside of Goodell Library.

UMass President John W. Lederle will deliver the last of his annual opening talks to the academic community. This year marks the end of a decade of leadership to the growing state university by Dr. Lederle.

Rev. Arnold Kenseth, lecturer in English, will deliver the invocation, and greetings to the student body will be given by UMass Student Senate President Bruce Balboni. Provost Oswald Tippo will preside.

President Lederle will speak on "The Humane University" and the annual Distinguished Teacher Awards will be presented. The recipients are selected by an all-University faculty committee and are honored for "manifest excellence in the art of teaching and outstanding devotion to the cause of education."

Mace Bearer William H. Rose will lead the processional. Traditionally, this honor is given to the teacher who has held the Distinguished Teacher Award for the longest time. Dr. Ross, professor of physics, won the award in 1962.

Classes scheduled to begin at 10:10 on Convocation day will be cancelled.

History Department Committee Seeks Representatives from Junior Class

The Student - Faculty Liaison Committee of the History Department seeks at least two representatives from the Junior class. The Committee has two functions: to make the student aware of the problems of running a department and to have professors hear students' views on problems outside of the classroom. The student members of the S-FLC serve as a receptive line of communication between history majors and professors by being available for "consultation".

Any Junior History major who is interested in serving on this committee should submit their names by Friday, September 19, 1969 to either : Marcia Synnott, Chairman S-FLC Herter 712 or Gerald Stadnicki, Room 208, JFK Tower.

Open Meeting Called On Housing Complaints

All those people now living in unpleasant conditions will have an opportunity to confront those responsible for the overcrowded housing. The Student Senate Services Committee will have an open "gripe meeting" tomorrow at 7:00 p.m. in Thompson 104.

Committee Chairman, Mark Brenner has announced that Margaret Ford, head of the Housing Office, and someone from the Student Personnel Services Office will attend. Dean William F. Field has been invited but it is not known, at this time, whether he will be able to attend or not.

Chairman Brenner expects the questions, why the triples on campus exist, how long they will continue to exist, and what is being done to rectify the situation, will be answered.

Brenner says he will offer a bill before the Senate meeting Wednesday night to censure those responsible for the critical housing situation on campus. He also urges all those with housing gripes to attend and confront those who have created the situation that many people are suffering from on campus.

Any student who did not receive his 1969 Index at registration can pick up the yearbook at the Index office, Student Union, any time from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Students should bring with them the blue card which they received at registration.

FROM OUR SIDE

New Education

Ed. note: The following is the first article in a column that John Gerard will be writing on a weekly basis for the Collegian. John is a graduate student in the English Department. We will be featuring our new columnists this week on the editorial page.)

"There are three particular problems which force us to conclude that the schools must consciously remake themselves into training centers for subversion." From this statement Neil Postman and Charles Weingartner begin a comprehensive, well - written, brilliantly argued analysis of the now need for education. TEACHING AS A SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITY is a book which must head the list of anyone hoping to remain aware of the reasons for and the goals of the new aim of confrontation on campus, aims which are suddenly shifting from attacking the administration to creating an effective learning environment in the classroom.

The first problem the authors cite is the "communications revolution," or media change. "What you have," they stress, "is a totally new environment requiring a whole new repertoire of survival strategies." Since the amount of information in a message decreases as the number of messages increases (Norbert Weiner), and since "the mass media are entirely one-way communication," we are experiencing "what Edgar Friedenberg calls 'creeping Eichmanism,' a sort of spiritless, mechanical, abstract functioning which does not allow much room for individual thought and action." The issue becomes "whether or not our beautiful libertarian, pluralist, and populist experiment is viable in modern conditions."

The second problem forcing the necessary changes in education which the authors propose is the " Change Revolution. " Change isn't new, they assure us, but the rate of change is. " Change changed." Thirdly, we come to the "burgeoning beaurocracy." Quoting John Gardner: "The body of custom, convention, and reputable standards exercises such an oppressive effect on creative minds that new developments in a field often originate outside the area of respectable practice." Schools must be subversive, Postman and Weingartner proclaim, to "serve as a kind of antibeaurocracy beaurocracy providing the young with a 'What is it good for?' perspective on its own society."

The authors make the almost absurd suggestion that teaching and learning can be separated and that only the former is occurring in the classroom. They insightfully point out that the only things one learns is what one does. What does one DO in the classroom? they ask. One learns to be submissive, to accept what the teacher feeds him, and to ignore the ideas of one's classmates (Ever see a student take notes while another STUDENT was talking?).

The student only learns what he receives in response to a question he asks, these experienced English teachers assert. Then they examine what kinds of questions students are now taught to ask in the classroom: "Does spelling count?" "How long must it be?" "When is it due?" The authors turn the present classroom situation around to follow what they call the inquiry method of education. They have students asking the questions and the teacher answering them, or at least reflecting them back to the students.

Rather than follow a curriculum which they insist is founded on the false principle that the mind works in logical, sequential steps, they throw out all attempts at guessing where a student's inquiry will take him. This is why real teaching is truly subversive. (No wonder they did in Socrates. Those Athenians knew what it meant to teach without a curriculum.) Instead they present a sample of questions they have found people frequently ask when given the chance. The list starts out "What do you worry about most? What are the causes of your worries? Can any of your worries be eliminated? How?" The questions then touch on areas of human relations, communication, good and evil, life strategies, and eventually end up with "What's worth knowing? How do you decide? What are some ways to go about getting to know what's worth knowing?"

All these questions lead to other questions. They will have different answers for different people, and for the same people at different stages of their life. Perhaps most important, THEY CONCERN THEMSELVES, NOT WITH PRODUCT, BUT WITH PROCESS. That's what education is, claim the authors: process.

As usual, students are beginning to find these things out before the teachers. Unfortunately, however, teachers have a vested interest in their power in the classroom. Where administrators could always find something to do no matter how much social freedom students acquired (as in the case of the Dean of Woman's and Dean of Men's positions here at the University), teachers feel a definite threat as students begin demanding more effective, i.e. more student oriented, inquiry. Already the first week of this crisis year at UMass has seen students, teachers, and administrators rise to the Woodstockian conditions in Woodstockian manner. In terms of the classroom this has meant that at least two Speech 101 instructors opened the semester by involving their students in a "facilitator." Word is even out that Mr. Schumer included his first name when introducing himself to his Adolescent Psych class, something he didn't do as recently as this past summer when he taught Ed. Psych. More significantly, of course, is his allowing the students to engage in almost any kind of inquiry they like to earn a third of their grade.

It's a beginning. The struggle for a better classroom probably will be bitter. It probably will show how fragile the recent alliance between students and faculty against college administrations has been. It probably will follow the goals Postman and Weingartner illuminate in their fine book.

On Acid

To Whom It May Concern:

So you're gonn'a drop acid? Far out, man, so cool, but like its like Russian roulet. Maybe your mind can take it, maybe not. And if its maybe not, like you're in for trouble.

Some people can take fifty trips (ignoring side trips) and function. Visit paradise. Love is so real you can feel it; like its in the air. So beautiful! But maybe you will lose your mind. I've seen it - a friend of mine is in Boston State for the rest of his life. You are talking to him and all of a sudden he's unconscious, like he is asleep. It happens at any time. That's why he can't take care of himself. They have locked the doors on my friend. You are in and that's it. Imagine his torture - his suffering knowing that he has to spend the rest of his life in the nut house!

He isn't mental. He just took acid. And he took it just five times. Another friend of mine is on the outside and alright, but he has lost part of his memory. He's like a senile old man. His mind wanders; he doesn't remember a thing we did together. He hardly knows me. He's in the army now and will probably stay there because he can get by there - in the world though - he can't compete. A twenty year old senile college student. Oh, yes, very, very cool.

Or take me for instance. I'm here functioning and I will get by. I'm only tripping all of the time - about 1/8 to 1/2 a tab of average acid. All the time I go up and down - you know that I can't stop my mind. Its been seven months now and I would give you anything everything for peace of mind. Nobody understand acid. I'll get by tripping for the rest of my life. Get up in the morning - open my eyes - here we go again the mirror is moving in and out and up and down. Every day is the same. So you're gonna drop acid?

Trust and Honesty

My usual enthusiasm for the first day of classes was somehow dampened when I discovered, at the end of it, that my car windshield had been smashed. This occurred to my blue VW in the parking lot behind Arnold House, sometime between 7:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. on Wednesday; it appears to be the result of a stray baseball. I trust that those responsible will contact me shortly.

Trust Fund Similar to Social Security Possible Aid in Budgeting Education

by Hubert H. Humphrey

Another school year has begun, and it's another year of crisis in education. School enrollment is at an all-time high, school taxes are at an all-time high, Congress still has not passed the 1969-70 aid to education bill, teachers are demanding more money, and school administrators face a rising tide of violence and drug use.

We're fighting a losing battle in the effort to give every American child a good education. In doing so, we're wasting our most valuable resource - our young people.

Here are some of the areas in which I think we must act if we are to meet the educational challenges of the 1970s.

First, Congress must restore the cuts made by President Nixon in the 1969-70 education budget.

The Nixon education budget is $3.2 billion. This is a half billion dollars under the 1968-69 appropriation, and almost a full billion dollars under what was spent in 1967-68. Especially hard hit are funds for student loans, guidance and counseling, school libraries and programs to help disadvantaged children.

The House of Representatives has added one billion dollars to the Nixon starvation diet for education. The Senate has yet to act. But already President Nixon has criticized the House for its concern for education. President Nixon, who during the campaign pledged his administration "to be second to none in its concern for education," now is telling Congress to cut education spending far below the levels of previous years. (The Senate is scheduled to begin debate on the measure on Monday).

I have recommended that the Federal government invest a minimum of $10 billion a year in our education system. We can do this if we are willing to put our young people near the top of the list of national priorities, and it would be one of the best investments we could make in our nation's future.

The fact that Congress still has not taken final action on the 1969-70 aid to education bill points up another problem. Too much of what we do is too little, too late. Local school officials must start the school year not knowing how much money they will have to spend. Local programs have to be started or cut off at the last minute. This is a wasteful and inefficient way to do business.

To give our educational programs the needed continuity, I have suggested the creation of an educational trust fund, similar to our highway and Social Security trust funds. The money could come from the development of oil deposits on federally owned land.

Such a trust fund would allow educators to plan programs one or two years in advance, the way private enterprise does it. Local districts could operate much more sensibly and efficiently.

Another area where action must be taken is research. Consider the fact that education is a $50 billion a year business. Yet we spend under $100 million for research and demonstration projects in education. Industry knows that a lack of research and development leads to obsolescence and decay, and no $50 billion a year private enterprise would think of trying to stay competitive by investing such a small amount in research.

The President's Committee on Mental Retardation has been doing research into the problems of learning, and it has concluded that our educational system, with its 22,000 local school districts, is the last of the "cottage industries" in America. The committee says the scale of educational research has been far below the level needed, and any exchange of research findings at any level has been accidental.

The President's committee recommends the creation of a foundation for learning. The foundation would be chartered by Congress with its membership appointed by the President, with members representing government schools, foundations, and private enterprise.

With funding from both public and private sources, the foundation could develop a national research effort to pull together and revitalize the fragmented and inadequate research programs now under way.

Educators all over the nation tell me that we need more pioneering and innovative programs, and more teaching materials. They say they will continue to fall behind unless they are given more research findings on what works, and more money with which to implement the programs and techniques that do work.

These same school officials are also deeply concerned about another problem - the increasing use of drugs by both high school and junior high school students.

We can't expect our teachers to be doctors and policemen, too. They can't handle the problem alone.

Every school needs not only counselors but also doctors and nurses who can meet the drug problem head-on with professional knowledge. Students will listen to the facts about drugs if the information is provided clearly and objectively, but not enough schools have programs to do this.

Every mayor and school superintendent should call a community conference on the problem of drugs in the schools, and then fashion from this conference a program to provide the facts about drugs and a hard-hitting effort to control drug use.

Local medical societies should make sure that every school has the kind of professional help it needs to handle the drug problem. This professional help should be volunteered until a long-range program of drug control can be created and budgeted.

It's a critical problem. Drugs are murder on the installment plan.

Course on Earth Offered In Educational Ecology

Consider our house, this earth. Not simply Cance House, or our parent's house, or Greenough, or the woods, or New York City, or the Connecticut River: rather consider all of them, the rooms in our Earth Household. Consider how they affect each other and how they affect us, how they affect our living, our growing, our learning, our education. How are we affected by being cramped three-into-a-room, by living in a spanking new dorm as opposed to a more obviously inhabited older one, by living in a geodisic dome, by camping for a weekend in the mountains, by swimming in a polluted river, a freshwater pond, by the city sounds around us, by the country sounds, in short, how does the entirety of our environment affect our very lives? And how do we affect our environment? (Every time we flush a UMass toilet we contribute to the pollution of the Connecticut River.)

Education 390/705 section 10 will have its first meeting tomorrow, the 16th in the 12th floor seminar room of Kennedy Tower at 9:30 a.m., where we shall consider our Earth Household, how we might re-experience it, and what we might do with it. UMass Appoints Vice Chancellor Of Finances for Columbia Point

Dr. William R. Hamilton, Jr., financial advisor to former Boston Mayor John F. Collins, has been named vice chancellor for financial affairs at the University of Massachusetts at Boston, Chancellor Francis L. Broderick has announced.

As vice chancellor, Dr. Hamilton will assume major responsibilities for the development of the school's permanent campus at Columbia Point, which is expected to open in 1972, with a first stage capacity of 5000 students.

A recognized authority in the application of modern management techniques of public agency affairs, Dr. Hamilton has served as deputy commissioner of administration in the Boston Department of Health and Hospitals since 1967. In this position, he supervised all financial, personnel and management activities for three hospitals and thirty-one clinics with a total budget of $37 million and 4000 employees.

Dr. Hamilton came to Boston in 1964 as financial advisor to then Mayor John F. Collins, and for three years reviewed financial policy for most major city departments, coordinated all data-processing developments in the city government, served as liaison with federal agencies and as chief liaison officer between the mayor's office and the Boston Re-development Authority.

The author of several articles on financial management and national resources policy, Dr. Hamilton has held teaching positions at the University of Maryland, Wayne State University, and the University of Rhode Island.

A resident of Framingham, he received his B.A. degree from the University of Oklahoma in 1954, and his M.A. and Ph. D. degrees from Maryland University.

Commuters Meet To Organize Area Government

The Independant Commuter Coalition (ICC) will hold its first meeting of the year to discuss the organization of a commuter "area government" Thursday night at 7:00 p.m. in S.B.A. 120.

Created by Student Senate executive order last year, ICC is invisioned as a governmental organization with many of the same functions of campus area governments. The main purpose of the first meeting will be to discuss the needs of commuter students and to judge the level of commuter interest in ICC.

Working committees will be set up as soon as possible, and a Senate budget of close to $4000 has been appropriated for ICC as soon as a working government has been established.

Dean of Men William Rifnars will also attend the meeting.

"Up Your Alley" Highlights Faculty Music Recital

By J. W. WADE
Music Critic

The University of Massachusetts Faculty Recital Series offered its first concert of the season Wednesday night at Bowker Auditorium. Included in the program was a blockbuster of a work entitled "Up Your Alley." It was written just this year by the English composer Clement Lewis and was given its American premier Wednesday night by pianists Charles Fussell, Robert Stern, and other assorted "cast members."

The remainder of the program consisted of works by Bach, Schubert, Peter Lewis, and Erik Satie, yet the real success of the evening was "Up Your Alley".

I'm sure the work held different impressions for all concerned. Basically, it brilliantly achieved a satire on sexual morals, concert formalities, and music in general. It accomplished this through varied methods, and a few outstanding and poignantly humorous episodes were classic. The music divided itself between pre-recorded tapes and piano. There were tapes of rock, Tiny Tim, and even a jumbled definition of sexual intercourse ("In a word, the peg fits into the hole.").

Fussell and Stern were totally convincing in their combination music-acting roles and broke up the audience more than once. For instance, they battled to see who would turn the pages of their music, and fought each other to hit the most notes. Finally, Fussell left the stage to join the audience.

It was an absorbingly original and relevant work and I commend the UMass Music Faculty for presenting "Up Your Alley".

LIBERAL ARTS MAJORS:

POT can open a whole new world of opportunity...

Each year, NSA offers challenging career opportunities to Liberal Arts majors through participation in the Professional Qualification Test. This year, NSA has scheduled the PQT for Saturday, October 18, 1969. Completion of this Test by the Liberal Arts major is a prerequisite to consideration for NSA employment.

The Career Scene at NSA: The National Security Agency is the U.S. Government agency responsible for developing invulnerable communications systems to transmit and receive vital information. As an NSA professional, you will be trained to work on programs of national importance in such areas as:

- Cryptography—developing & logical proving of new cryptologic concepts
- Research—the gathering, analysis, and reporting of substantive data
- Language—used as a basic tool of research into a number of analytical fields
- Programming—includes data systems program writing, and development of mechanical and administrative procedures
- Documentation—technical writing in its broadest sense, including research, writing, editing, illustrating, layout and reproduction

Your specific academic major is of secondary importance. Of far greater importance are your ingenuity, intellectual curiosity and perseverance—plus a desire to apply them in assignments where "imagination is the essential qualification."

SALARIES start at $7,639.00 and are supplemented by the benefits of career federal employment.

ADVANCEMENT AND CAREER DEVELOPMENT—NSA promotes from within, and awards salary increases as you assume greater responsibility. NSA also is anxious to stimulate your professional and intellectual growth in many ways, including intensive formal as well as on-the-job training. Advanced study at any of seven area universities can be partially or wholly reimbursed through NSA Fellowships and other assistance programs.

The deadline for POT applications is October 8 (for the October 18 test). Pick up a POT Bulletin at your Placement Office. It contains full details and the necessary test registration form. Elbrick's Kidnapping May Spur Acts Against Other American Embassies

WASHINGTON (AP) - State Department officials fear the kidnaping of the U.S. ambassador to Brazil may spur terrorist acts against other American envoys abroad. But no fail-safe security is in sight.

One problem is that while Americans themselves can provide physical safeguards within a U.S. embassy, it is up to the host government to supply protection outside the embassies.

Beyond this, it is rated virtually impossible to insure absolute safety against a determined attacker even with a large protective force. For instance, President John F. Kennedy was assassinated despite his U.S. Secret Service guard.

And many of the ablest U.S. diplomats say they cannot properly perform their duties in representing the United States in foreign lands if they are hemmed about by security restrictions.

Among those who contend that an envoy surrounded by armed guards cannot do his job effectively is C. Burke Elbrick, U.S. ambassador to Brazil.

Elbrick was kidnapped in Rio de Janeiro on Sept. 4 and freed after the Brazilian government yielded to demands for the release of 15 political prisoners - a success for the kidnapers not likely to be lost on potential abductors elsewhere.

Elbrick is due in Washington for consultations this week. Mainly because of the embarrassment to the Brazilian regime over his kidnapping, it is an open question whether Elbrick will return to serve out his full term in Rio.

Department record s show that over the past four or five years, there have been more than 40 attacks on U.S. diplomats abroad. Officials fear that the Brazilian kidnappers' coup may tempt terrorists in other capitals.

One of the attacks was the 1968 killing of the U.S. Ambassador to Guatemala, John Gordon Mein. Also in the same year, a U.S. Army captain was machine-gunned to death in Sao Paulo, Brazil.

After a 1966 survey of violence in Latin America, the Stete Department sent a secret document to embassies giving guidelines for security precautions. U.S. ambassadors also get a personal briefing on security from a high-ranking State Department security officer before departing for their posts.

The guidelines reportedly set forth a variety of measures ranging from residence protection to avoiding regular trips along the same route each day.

Convenience Foods Seminars Slated

A seven-session seminar for food service people on "Convenience Foods In Food Service Operations" will be presented by the University of Massachusetts department of hotel and restaurant administration at Waltham starting Monday, Sept. 22.

The two-hour Monday evening sessions will be held in the auditorium of the University's Waltham Field Station, 240 Beaver St., Waltham, from 7 to 9 p.m., on Sept. 22 and 29; Oct. 6, 13, 20 and 27; and Nov. 3. It is an offering of the Cooperative Extension Program of the UMass College of Agriculture's department of hotel and restaurant administration.

The seminar will discuss subjects relating to the use of convenience foods, especially prepared entrees, in food service operations. The sessions are designed to sort fact from fiction regarding convenience foods and their place in different types of food service establishments.

Information and instruction will concern the various foods available in convenience form, packages, stages of preparation, purchasing and storage, preparation practices required, and adaptation of equipment, kitchen layout, and personnel performance. Economic factors involved will also be considered.

The lectures and other class presentations will describe and explain developments and relate accepted principles of food service management to the new situations and problems resulting from food changes. People from the industry will describe their convenience food experiences.

The seminar is designed for people in all types of food service operations and is open to all interested. There is a registration fee of $20 and advance registration is necessary.

Applications and additional information are available from the Department of Hotel and Restaurant Administration, Attention: Charles E. Eshbach, 213 Chenoweth Laboratory, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Hampshire College to Open in Fall Using Many Innovative Approaches

For a year Pres. Franklin Patterson of Hampshire College has been the envy of all other college presidents in the country. He's had a board of trustees and a few deans - but no students, no faculty and no buildings except for a bar or two.

Now all that is changing.

Some 17 members of the first class to enter Hampshire have come for an on-the-spot visit. Pres. Patterson produced some faculty members, quite a few administrators and a bus tour of the buildings.

This first "confrontation" was peaceful but both sides have decided ideas about the future.

Mary Tragle of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., summed up her feelings about the school she will enter a year from now. "It's exciting because it's new. The students HAVE to shape the school. As it stands now, college seems to be a continuation of high school. Here the whole student body will be completely interested in the school.

For his part Pres. Patterson promised hard work ahead despite the school's innovative approaches (no required courses, no fixed number of credits to accumulate, not even a standard time in which to complete the work). "Don't come to Hampshire," he told the students, "thinking that this is a place without structure or a commitment to rationality. Life at Hampshire will be as vigorous as that of its sister colleges."

"On the other hand we believe that every student's emotional development must also be considered as a part of the liberal education. Our goal is to create a blend of intellectual and emotional growth all through the academic program," he said.

"It will be hard to pull off but that is what Hampshire has set out to do."

The buildings in which this new approach to liberal education will be worked out are growing. There is the library, skeletal bones sticking up from the earth; the lecture hall, still open with a workman stripped to the waist pounding steel on its cement steps and the dorms, with floors and ceilings.

After a bumpy bus ride over a dirt road, Howard Paul, construction supervisor for the college, led the group through the dormitory. Every other sentence was a warning to watch out for pipes or boards or things falling.

Paul pointed to some of the many holes in the floor. "We use very little concrete because we have so many conduits in the floor. We don't know what will be available in the next few years. We hope we have enough conduits."

There will be 250 students in the first class which enters September 1970. The 17 who came for the first group tour of campus, this first confrontation with faculty and administration, feel special. They are through high school. They will spend the year traveling and working. They will be babysitters, computer programmers, artists, bank employees. Some will continue as students in another school.

But next year their school may be charting the way for a new approach to liberal arts education.

Broadway Comedy Comes To Bowker Auditorium

Broadway comes to the University of Massachusetts Thursday, Sept. 18, 1969, when the hilarious cast of the musical hit "I do! I do!" arrives for an evening of delightful comedy.

Phil Ford and Mimi Hines star in the play which focuses on the events of a 50-year long marriage. The musical is not merely propaganda for matrimony, but a positive assertion that marriage is a good thing. It is in surprising contrast to most of today's films and plays, as it is filled with optimism right from the top.

Twenty lively tunes, such as "I Love My Wife," "Where Are the Snows of Yesteryear?" and "Something Has Happened," make up the musical score of Jones and Schmidt's success "I Do! I Do!", sponsored by the Student Union Program Council.

Directed by Lucia Victor of "Carnival" and "Oliver" fame, the play will be presented in Bowker Auditorium at 8:30, Sept. 18. Tickets will be available Sept. 15 for students only at the Student Union ticket office. They will be sold to the general public after that date.

Defense Shines in Last Scrimmage Before Maine Game

Entire Squad Looks Good

Daily Collegian
Sports
VOL. XCVIII, ISSUE 6
MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1969

UMass held its last full scrimmage session Saturday in preparation for its opener this weekend at Maine, and right now the Redmen defense seems to be a little bit ahead of their offensive mates.

The UMass squad, on the whole, looked good throughout the scrimmage. The defense dominated play and this might be a good sign, since good defensive units have long been the trademarks of champion Redmen teams.

Noteworthy performances for the game were registered by Russ Wood and Curt Bristol on defense and by Mike Marchev, Angelo DiNardo, Dick Cummings and Mike Sawyer on offense.

Wood's performance is very much welcome, for the junior defensive end will be counted upon to add experience to the Redmen front four. Sophomore Bristol also in the running for a defensive end spot, seems to be getting stronger as the season approaches.

Marchev, the junior who backs up Tim Adams at quarterback, adds obvious depth to that position. Sawyer's performance doesn't come unexpectedly; UMass grid fans will be seeing quite a lot of this soph running back before the season ends.

Sophomore fullback Cummings, with such recent fine performances, helps make this position one of the strongest on the team.

DiNardo is another sophomore who is making life hard on Redmen starters with his consistent hustle and good work.

The injury bug, a UMass nemesis all of last year, attended the contest infecting the likes of Nick McGarry, John Farrelly and Mike Cooney. The extent of these injuries is not available at the present time.

CURT BRISTOL

MIKE MARCHEV

Impressive in scrimmage.

Head coach Vic Fusia, after reviewing his notes on this scrimmage and all the training that has preceded it, will have to make the all important decisions as to who will start and who won;t.

The season opener looms just five days in the future. The opponent is Maine and they are traditionally tough for the Redmen, although the last two games between these rivals have resulted in lopsided UMass wins. This season's Black Bears are reported to be the darkhorse contenders of the Yankee Conference. They should provide a good test for the hopefully revived Redmen.

X-Country Race to be Held Every Sunday This Fall

A two and half mile "All Comers" cross country meet will be held on campus starting at the women's phys-ed field every Sunday until the snow flies. The race is open to anyone, students, faculty, members of athletic teams, girls and joggers.

The format will be informal, thus offering competition to those who want it and company for those who want to run a specific course weekly to measure improvement. Members of the varsity cross country team will officiate.

These weekly meets were initiated by a few members of the cross country team because they have noticed a great number of people running who are not members of any track teams. Any afternoon or early morning will find students, of both sexes, and faculty running and jogging around the athletic fields to the west of campus. The varsity cross country runners thought that some of these recreational runners would like to get together.

The first meet will be this Sunday at 5:30 starting in the middle of the women's phys-ed field below the tennis courts. This meet is not part of the intro-mural program so team scores will not be kept. Time, however, will be recorded so that weekly comparisons can be made.

Rifle Team Prepares for New Season

The UMass Varsity Rifle Team has already started practicing for what is hoped will be a record season. Last year the riflemen were 9-0 on dual meets, they won their league and finished 4th in the New England finals.

All of last year's team has returned for the 69-70 season, including captain John Lacouture and lettermen Dudley Darling, DAVID Sears, Bern Armata and Doug Hjorth.

Last year Lacouture won the biggest collegiate individual meet in New England with a school record of 277 for the three positions. He defeated nearly 100 of the best marksmen in the Northeast when he was first in the N.R.A. sectional at M.I.T.

The first match this year for the rifle team is against Brown at U. Mass. on October 11th, but the Redmen, who are unbeaten at home in over two years, face their biggest test probably of the whole season on November 8th when they host the New England champions, the U.S. Coast Guard Academy.

The two teams have never met before in a dual meet, but Coast Guard team has always bettered the Redmen in tournament competitions. This year the strong UMass team is certain that they have the potential to reverse this trend.

The rifle team has more depth than ever before, but there is still a chance for new members to break into the squad. Any students who are experienced riflemen and are interested in trying out for the team should come to the rifle range (ROTC basement) on Tuesday or Thursday evenings, between 6 and 9 p.m., or contact coach Mike Goodge.

Jets Top Bills In Namath-Simpson Affair

BUFFALO, N.Y. AP - Joe Namath, stund by two interceptions, directed a 58-yard drive capped by Matt Snell's 11-yard run that snapped a 19-19 tie and lifted the Super Bowl champion New York Jets to a 33-19 victory Sunday over the stubborn Buffalo Bills and O.J. Simpson.

The American Football League opener, which drew a record crowd of 45,758 for the heralded Namath-Simpson match-up, saw the Jets take a commanding 19-3 lead before the Bills almost pulled off a stunning upset.

Simpson, who scored his first touchdown as a pro, was limited to 35 yards in 10 carries but was able to show his breakaway ability on two passes on which he gained 64 yards and on three kick-off returns in which he raced for 68 yards.

Namath, obviously hurt when he was tackled by defensive tackle Bob Tatarek in the second quarter, completed only seven of 19 passes for 157 yards while having three passes intercepted.

GET IN THE PICTURE - Attention all old and prospective members of the women's gymnastics team, the first team meeting will be held on Monday, Sept. 15 in the Boyden Auxiliary gymnasium. Old team members will meet at 4:30 and new team members at 5:30. Due to losses through graduation and other causes, many positions are open on the team. Last season the women's team was second in the East and fourth in the country.

Bengal's Buncom Dies of Heart Attack

CINCINNATI AP - Frank Buncom, 29 year old linebacker for the Cincinnati Bengals of the American Football League, died early Sunday in his hotel room, apparently of a heart attack. Doctors said a blood clot on the left lung caused severe shock to his body resulting in heart failure.

Bucom, an eight-year veteran of pro football, and an all-league in 1967, was acquired last year from the San Diego Chargers in the expansion draft when the Bengals entered the league.

He lived in San Diego, was married and the father of one.

Buncom's death came on the day the Bengals opened their 1969 AFL regular season against the Miami Dolphins.

Buncom was a graduate of the University of Southern California and was the sixth round draft choice of the Chargers in 1961. He played in the East-West and College All-Star football games after his graduation.

It was reported that Buncom had not practiced with the Bengals during the week.

Ernie Rice, Buncom's roommate, said he was awakened about 7 a.m. EDT by Buncom's heavy breathing.

Rice called the Bengals trainer and the Cincinnati life squad but the player was dead before either could arrive.

Pats Bow to Denver, 35-7 In AFL Season Opener

DENVER, Colo. AP - Quarterback Steve Tensi, enjoying one of his best days as a professional, passed for three touchdowns and led the Denver Broncos to a 35-7 victory over the Boston Patriots Sunday in their American Football League season opener.

Tensi directed Denver to a 28-0 halftime cushion, passing for two touchdowns and setting up two others. Meanwhile the Denver secondary, with rookies Grady Cavness and Bill Thompson playing cornerbacks refused to allow Boston any significant scoring threat from the air.

Boston quarterback Mike Taliaferro was intercepted three times, with two of the steals setting up Denver scores.

In the first quarter Tensi fired a 43-yard pass to split end Al Denson to set up the first touchdown. Denson fell backward to the one yard line and on the next play fullback Tom Smiley dove over for the score. Less than three minutes later the Broncos scored after a successful inside kick when Tensi spotted Smiley open near the corner of the end zone and passed 17 yards for the touchdown.

With 90 seconds gone in the second quarter, the Broncos scored again as halfback Floyd Little ran wide into the end zone from three yards out.

The score was set up as Thompson intercepted a Taliaferro pass and returned it 35 yards.

Late in the second half Tensi directed the club 69 yards in nine plays, throwing a nine-yard scoring pass to Denson, standing alone in the end zone.

Rookie Carl Garrett of New Mexico Highlands scored the only Boston touchdown as he knifed in from three yards out late in the fourth period.

Led by defensive end Rich Jackson, an inspired Denver defense held the Patriots without a score until late in the fourth period.

Taliaferro was dumped five times behind the line of scrimmage and the Boston running game, led by Jim Nance, was largely ineffective.

In the first half, Taliaferro consistantly overthrew receivers as the Denver secondary, one of the worst in the AFL last season, performed well.

All the damage was done in the first half as Tensi completed 8 of 12 passes for 178 yards and two touchdowns. His main receiver was Denson, a six year professional who grabbed four passes for 65 yards and one touchdown.

The final Denver touchdown coming in the third period, was set up as Jackson batted a Taliaferro pass into the air at the Patriot 3 and linebacker John Huard wrestled it to the ground. Two plays later Tensi floated a pass to Denson again all alone in the end zone.

It was the largest victory margin for the Broncos since 1962, when they defeated San Diego 40-7.

40,500 TROOP WITHDRAWAL UPCOMING

By DOUGLAS B. CORNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon has ordered a second pullout of U.S. troops from Vietnam, and the total of men involved will be announced by the White House this morning.

Signs on both sides of the Pacific point to 40,500 men between now and Nov. 30.

And there are indications that 150,000 to 200,000 troops will be recalled by the end of 1970.

40,500 was the figure mentioned Monday in Saigon by Vietnamese Vice President Nguyen Cao Ky. They went unchallenged by presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler later in the day when he announced the presidential decision to be detailed Tuesday.

Saigon already had been informed of the Nixon decision. The U.S. commander in Vietnam, Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, flew back across the Pacific following a top-drawer conference of military, diplomatic and intelligence experts at the White House Friday. He immediately advised President Nguyen Van Thieu of Vietnam of the presidential decision.

Ziegler said Nixon actually had made up his mind late last week, prior to the Friday session.

Exact figures were held up until today while the allies who also have forces in Vietnam were consulted and informed. Ziegler said this process was being completed Monday.

Looking ahead to 1970, Ky projected a cutback of U.S. troops in Vietnam that would reach a total between 150,000 and 200,000 by the end of next year - probably the latter. Ziegler did not go into this.

Nor would he say anything about a third withdrawal. But he stood pat on what Nixon said at his latest news conference on June 19 when he voiced a hope for upping the ante of former Secretary of Defense Clark M. Clifford. Clifford had called in a magazine article for getting 100,000 U.S. troops out of Vietnam by the end of this year and all ground forces by the end of next year.

Nixon told reporters at that time:

"As far as how many will be withdrawn by the end of this year, by the end of next year, I would hope that we could beat Mr. Clifford's time table. . ."

When he spoke, Nixon had announced the initial troop pullout of 25,000, which was completed in August. Another 40,500 by the end of November would leave about 34,500 to be withdrawn by year's end if Clifford's total were to be bettered.

Ziegler talked around a question whether Tuesday's announcement of the second stage of troop withdrawals can be viewed as indicative of progress toward peace.

Over the weekend, there were reports the United States might cut naval personnel assigned to Vietnam from around 35,000 to 5,000. Ziegler neither confirmed nor knocked these reports down. But he did say that Tuesday's White House pronouncement would not embrace these reports.

Ziegler said, too, the announcement will not cover draft calls or proposals for changing the draft system.

Free University City Sprouts Up Behind SW

Twenty-five UMass students are constructing a "Free University City" on the grass behind the Southwest dorms to protest the general institutional make-up of the University.

High on the students' list of complaints are the on-campus housing squeeze which has resulted in the inordinate number of triples this fall, the number of course cancellations made prior to registration and the generally crowded condition of most classes.

Spokesmen for the group plan to issue a statement explaining plans later this week.

The housing conditions on campus, admittedly the tightest in years, have caused nearly 3000 students to have to triple up this semester, and spokesmen in Whitmore indicate that many of the students now living in triples will not be able to move into doubles until second semester.

Southwest designed to house 5400 students, is now the home of nearly 7000 students.

The general condition of the dorms in the Quad and the central area have long been in need of repair, and students living in these areas have become increasingly upset over living conditions this semester.

The complaint about course cancellations results from the largest number of courses closed prior to registration in recent University history. This situation has become especially serious for seniors who have to fulfill graduation requirements this year.

Many of the classes which have not been cancelled are so crowded that students literally have to stand in the classrooms.

Student-Academic Union Sought By UMass 4-Year Honors Program

By NELSON SIGELMAN
Staff Reporter

With colleges and universities rapidly increasing their enrollment, various projects have been undertaken to limit the depersonalization and process-packaging that many students feel forced to undergo in large schools. One such program is the new four year honors program in the UMass College of Arts and Sciences.

In this program, an attempt is made to give qualified students personalized instruction, and a program of concentrated study in their major field.

Honors program director Everett H. Emerson explained, "The program is intended not only to challenge superior students, but also to increase student interest in academic and intellectual matters."

"Students selected for the program," he went on to say, "are in no way isolated from other students; perhaps some of the excitement the program should generate in honors program students will affect others."

Honors program classes are small, and consist more of discussions rather than lectures. Students write papers in most all the courses, and study a limited amount of material in depth.

Students in the program do not have to fulfill any of the traditional graduation requirements. They take instead only courses which meet their individual interests and needs. Each student is assigned a preceptor, a faculty tutor/advisor who helps the student select courses and study.

Ninety freshmen and 35 sophomores have been admitted to the program to date.

In order to gain admission to the program, a student must be either recommended by a faculty member to the selection committee on the basis of his scholastic record, or must be asked to be admitted himself. An interview is mandatory for all applicants.

No student can be admitted after his junior year.

The program is limited at this time, due mainly to the need for small classes and a lack of qualified students.

House Passes Bill Providing Student Loans

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House passed 322 to 60 Monday the longstymied bill designed to assure students of government - guaranteed loans by setting up an interest scale adjustable to the tight lending market.

Passage came after efforts collapsed to hold up action until provisions could be added aimed at punishing campus rioters.

The bill now goes back to the Senate which passed the legislation last month with several provisions the House refused to accept. The Senate can now either accept the House version or call for a conference to work out a compromise.

What course will be followed was not immediately clear since senators in charge of the legislation were out of town. But they had indicated earlier they wanted a conference.

There have been urgent demands for speed since President Nixon put himself on the spot by urging bankers to go ahead and lend students money on the assumption that Congress would approve the measure.

Students had been having difficulty getting loans when Congress took its summer recess without acting on the measure just before the new college year began. But after the administration appeal added thousands of loans were made.

The bill would permit an incentive payment of up to 3 per cent above the 7 per cent interest rate fixed by law for the loan program. The amount would be adjusted quarterly to reflect conditions in the money market, but the statutory limit would remain 7 per cent.

Opponents said approval of the bill would mean Congress was setting the official interest rate on government-insured loans at 10 per cent.

SDS Holds First Meeting, Will Protest at Convocation

By STEVE SCHMIDT

An organizational meeting of UMass SDS was held in the Student Union last night with approximately 150 people in attendance. The planned speaker, Bob Wolfang of Boston SDS was unable to attend.

However, plans for SDS activities at both the national and local levels were discussed.

Bart Kaplan told of plans for radical insurrection in Chicago on Oct. 8, to coincide with the trial of those arrested at the Democratic Convention. Kaplan then began a brief discussion of the various divisions within the national movement.

The emphasis of the meeting soon shifted to local issues and Sidney Finhurst took over as moderator. Planned action on the housing situation and high prices in Amherst were discussed. Among the proposals mentioned were an economic boycott of Amherst business, a tent city, and a rent control board.

A motion was presented to stage a laugh-in at the University Convocation on Wednesday. However this motion was voted down and plans were substituted to distribute leaflets at the Convocation.

Electoral Plan Proposed

WASHINGTON (AP) - A plan that would award electoral votes on the basis of congressional districts instead of states was put before the House Monday as an alternative to direct popular presidential elections.

After several hours of debate on the proposal, the leadership put off a vote on it until Tuesday.

Rep. John Dowdy, D-Tex., chief sponsor of the alternative plan, said it follows closely the original concept of the Founding Fathers in establishing the American government.

The direct - election proposal that Dowdy's plan would replace would abolish the electoral system and provide for choosing the president by nationwide popular vote.

Dowdy said the direct-election plan would destroy the federal-state relationship and lead to the nationalization of the government.

Dowdy's amendment would abolish the office of elector but retain each state's electoral vote total. One vote would go automatically to the candidate winning each congressional district and two would go to the statewide winner.

Faculty Senate Wants More Action

By ROBYN CHANDLER
Staff Reporter

Efforts are being made by the University Faculty Senate to express the dynamic energy and movement of contemporary campus life. Yet seldom does the Senate receive merited publicity, as many of their proposals are dwarfed by a seemingly intangible Board of Trustees.

The University Faculty Senate had been deliberated and voted upon in 1955. September 1969 finds it still in working order, having survived the onslaught of time and a tight budget.

The Faculty Senate is an advisory body which deliberates resolutions that pass through a finely-filtered selection of sub-committees before they are presented to the President or the Board of Trustees. Professor Glen Gordon of the Government Department is acting secretary of the Senate, and his role is one of a communication link.

His duties include keeping each of the committees informed of the status of the budget, and of correlating the faculty committees.

One of the more attuned committees of the faculty senate is the Rules Committee. This body sets the agenda and is the central committee channeling work and improving the quality of each resolution before it is referred to a committee.

Professor Gordon states: "We discourage resolutions coming to the floor cold."

This fall it is expected that the more lively deliberations will concern:

1. ROTC and whether or not to give it credit;
2. Black curriculum as it fulfills the needs of the students;
3. The new school of education and how to better deal with its expansion;
4. Selection of top-level administration to replace our dwindling ranks.

Projecting onto the Faculty Senate picture has been the whole-scale need for cooperation in a common effort among the Student Senate, the Alumni Senate, the Board of Trustees and the Faculty Senate.

Professor Gordon anticipates a future where the Senates may merge as a united front to resolve the problems of a University in semi-crisis.

Vermont College Goes Democratic

PLAINFIELD, Vt. (AP)- A small Vermont college is giving democracy a chance to work in its classic sense.

The new president of Goddard College, Gerald S. Witherspoon, has given all of his decision making powers to the faculty, students and staff.

Everyone at Goddard -- cook, freshman and president -- can participate in setting the institution's policy.

The school will be governed by a community council with membership open to anyone who attends the regularly scheduled council meetings.

The council will attempt to reach consensus, and the decision becomes the school's policy. If opposing viewpoints cannot be reconciled, then the whole school community will vote on a one-man, one-vote basis.

The 30-year-old college has 600 resident undergraduates, 100 adult students, 70 teachers and 150 staff members.

A Little Too Piggy?

More than 3000 UMass students most of whom are freshmen are currently living three to a double room. Most of these unfortunate people are freshmen, 3/4 to be exact, and it is these people who can least afford the discomfort and the tremendous adjustment which naturally follows the transition from high school to college and again that which they must face in adjusting from a single room which most are used to at home to a triple room when they enter UMass.

So, these people must go through a double adjustment and in the long run pay more for the latter.

As it stands now, those people living in triples get only a 20% reduction in rent which puts the University $135 per room ahead. It seems grossly unfair that the University is collecting more money per room from people who have to put up with a lot more inconvenience and overcrowdedness.

The reasons for the triples is obvious. Many people indicate that they will be attending the University in the summer and then change their minds later and fail to notify the University of their change of plans. Others sign up for residence halls and then when they arrive decide to live off campus instead.

All of this clearly indicates that invariably triples become an unpreventable reality, but the fact remains that the students end up not only putting up with the inconvenience but pay more for it in the end. It seems to us only fair that the University share of bit of the difficulties that are involved in the triples situation, instead of exploiting it at a great financial gain.

We urge that the housing office adopt a policy whereby those people living in triples get a 30% reduction instead of the 20% which they are getting now. And as the television ad to curb inflation states, "Let's all try to be a little less piggy."

THE EDITORS

The Affect of Minh

(Editor's Note: The following is the first article in a weekly column that Keith Bromery, the executive editor of the Collegian, will be writing. We will be featuring our new columnists this week on the editorial page.)

Ho Chi Minh, president of North Viet Nam, died two weeks ago, but as far as most of the experts close to the North and South Vietnamese people are concerned; the memory of him and his ideals will probably continue for a long time to come.

Few outsiders knew how strong the inward feeling was toward Minh on the part of the South Vietnamese people till after his death. Indeed the South Vietnamese themselves seemed to marvel at the extent of deep feelings that they had for this great leader. The feelings of the North Vietnamese toward their president were generally known to be quite strong and sincere much like that which we had for the late John F. Kennedy. But the question which confused me was why it took the death of Ho Chi Minh for the people of the south to realize where their feelings were.

It seems to me that the answer to this puzzling situation lies with us, the Americans who now in effect govern South Vietnam. After all, I don't believe that at this time there is anyone in Vietnam or in the U.S. who believe that the present government in South Vietnam is anything but a puppet whose strings are pulled from Pennsylvania Avenue or San Clemente depending upon where the chief puppeteer happens to set up his show that month.

The present Ky government which was "voted" in by the South Vietnamese people in what can very easily be called the greatest mockery of an electoral system since its conception back in prehistoric times is to this day as it always has been, a group of corrupt, greedy yellow American co-opted Vietnamese who are in there for what they can get, in of course the American way. Everyone connected in any way with this "government" has come out a loser. The South Vietnamese, without a doubt the greatest of the losers, have suffered from the land reform movements which can be easily compared to the white American take over of what once the Indian lands. The supposed "equitable apportionment" of these lands are what some experts have termed far from being anywhere near equitable. The American taxpayer has suffered from steadily rising taxes which are going into goods and supplies which are sent over to Vietnam to be sold openly on the Saigon black market for the most part which are secretly endorsed by the government. And of course the American military men who are continuing to give their lives for a government which the people don't even support if in vote certainly not in spirit.

The government in the North under Minh according to Foreign observers was a much more stable unit which if nothing else at least had the support of the North Vietnamese people. The people of the North are seemingly more united in the war effort than the South Vietnamese. It appears to be an all out effort on the part of the government and the people. Something which the South Vietnamese government has not even been able to obtain a semblance of.

So, the people of the South look to Ho if not for his past record in governing Vietnam and the driving out of the French aggressors, then for his stable form of government and the way that he has united his people in their efforts to drive out the American aggressors.

The people of the South look to Minh as a true leader. A few have of course been brainwashed by the Americans and the corrupt Vietnamese government into taking a dim view of the North, to put it mildly. But through all the propaganda and the purges conducted by the Ky government to route out the "Communist sentiment"; the South Vietnamese feeling toward Ho appears to observers to be stronger than ever especially after his death. It often is the case that a man is only fairly appreciated for what he has been and done after his death. And so with Ho, it would appear that the sentiment in the South came a little late, though Ho was lucky in that he was literally worshipped by the people of the North. Now that his death has caused such an uproar in the South; the American and the Ky governments are working even harder to supress this sentiment and to once again herd the people along lines of thinking in, of course, the American way.

The New Breed

WASHINGTON - There's a new breed of pilot now flying our commercial airways, and he's becoming a menace to the peace and tranquility of the traveler. The taciturn James Stewart-type of pilot is being replaced by the extroverted David Susskind-type who not only never stops talking, but tells you a lot more about flying than you want to know.

In the old days of air transportation you hardly heard from the captain up forward. He might have told you when you were taking off and when you could expect to land, but outside of that he spent his time flying the plane, which is the most anyone expects of his pilot anyway.

But now, either because he's lonely or bored, or because the public relations departments of the airlines are in charge of the crew, the captain does a complete monolog from the time you get on the plane to the time you land. This is how it goes.

"Hi folks, this is your captain. Well, we're going to have a great flight today to L.A. Your hostesses are Kitty, Patti and Sally; your co-pilot is George and your engineer is Harry and I'm Jack. I'm married and have three fine children - Hildy, Freddy and Lisa and we live in Roslyn, L.I. We have a swell house and we belong to the First Congregational Church.

"There are some clouds over Kansas City, so we'll just avoid Kansas City today, which is not a great problem because we can get to L.A. anyway. It's lucky we're not going up to Montreal because they're really socked in there and there's a hurricane off Puerto Rico. But that shouldn't bother us today.

"We had some trouble with the turbofram which delayed us a few minutes, but it's been fixed now. We really don't need the turbofram, but government regulations require that it be in working order just in case the gyro-whizzit goes out, which is hardly likely.

"Now when we get in the air you're going to hear a change in pitch in the motors, but don't let that bother you. If you DIDN'T hear a change, then you should be bothered. Ha, ha, ha.

"I'll be putting up my wheels as soon as I take off and you may hear a slight thump, but don't be disturbed by it. You have to get those wheels up fast when you're taking off - otherwise you don't get the lift and a plane this size needs all the lift it can get, believe you me.

"I can't see if the wheels are up or not, but I do have a red light on my panel and if that red light goes on I would, of course, abort the flight.

"We're second in line to take off. There are planes landing and taking off every minute and while the traffic may appear heavy to you, they seem to have it under control. Once we get away from the airport, we'll be out of danger.

"Well, here we go . . . there we made it. No red light. I'm getting a slight reading on my oil pressure gauge, but it doesn't seem serious.

"As we fly across the United States, I'll point out every town and city to you, and even if you can't see it because of the cloud cover, it's real beautiful country. You people on the right, if you took down now you'll see Interstate 5344 over by the river. Sorry you people on the left can't see it. I hope to be driving on it soon. I'm taking the wife and children out to visit her mother on my vacation in a couple of weeks.

"We're going to turn the seat belt sign off, but I'd advise you not to unbuckle your seat belt and not walk around. You can get a great deal of turbulence up here and without any warning the plane could hit an air pocket and take a dive, though of course it's unlikely.

"The temperature outside is now 80 degrees below zero, so I guess you're all glad to be inside. Ha, ha, ha. Say I heard one I'll bet you folks haven't heard. There was this little kid and the teacher asked him . . ."

Scholarly Conventions Preoccupied with Dissent

The annual conventions of the country's scholarly associations are normally sedate affairs, devoted primarily to professors reading and discussing the latest research in their discipline.

Any excitement is purely intellectual and confined to debate over the papers that are presented. Business sessions are usually considered secondary matters.

In the last year, however, this atmosphere has been unsettled by the formation of active caucuses of radical young professors and graduate students within several of the country's largest scholarly groups, particularly in the social sciences.

On the floor of business sessions and in the corridors of hotels they are challenging the notion--long proclaimed by professors and the associations -- that proper academic detachment and objectivity requires avoiding stands on controversial social and political issues.

Two weeks ago, such a group announced at the New York convention of the American Political Science Assn. that it will present its own slate of officers next year to challenge those picked by the group's nominating committee.

Meanwhile, a similar group took over the speakers' platform at a session of the American Psychological Assn. meeting in Washington to demand redirection for the organization.

In San Francisco, dissenters set up a counter-convention across the street from the regular meeting of the American Sociological Assn., which they said was not firmly committed to social progress. Similar groups also are active in the American Historical Assn. and the Modern Languages Assn. which met last winter.

The radical caucus of political scientists helped force the abolishment of an award its association periodically had given to Congressmen because they said it too often had gone to "defenders of the military industrial complex."

They were joined by some older members of the group who felt that the awards --even if they went as they have to such liberal figures as Edmund Muskie & Jacob Javits -- were inconsistent with scholarly non-partisanship.

This notion -- that scholars and their professional groups should remain officially uncommitted to specific political positions -- is one of the central issues in the challenge put forth by the young radicals. They claim that scholars in general and the associations in particular have never really been neutral politically and by hiding behind this facade have in effect supported the status quo against radical change.

One person who holds such a view is Noam Chomsky, the MIT linguistics professor and a frequent critic of American war policy. He says professors and associations that claim to be neutral in a society that has strong financial pressures to do government-sponsored research end up accommodating themselves to those pressures. They end up doing research for the U.S. government but not for the Viet Cong he says.

"They are taking a very definite political stand; they are ratifying the existing distribution of force and authority that determine American policy and saying we'll contribute," Chomsky says. "But to think they are neutral is sheer mystification."

Even some men who have risen to the top of academic association recognize that the government has sometimes used the social sciences to strengthen the case for its continuing policy. One of such is Karl Deutsch, a Harvard government professor and newly elected president of the American Political Science Assn.

"As one of my colleagues once remarked," Deutsch says, "administrators turn to experts as drunks turn to lampposts -- for support rather than illumination." And he admits that older scholars many of whom were influenced by American triumph over the Nazis, have been enthusiastic about goodness of the American political system.

Wilson, Army Commander Meet Over Deepening Irish Religious Crisis

BELFAST, Northern Ireland, (AP) - Britain's army commander in Northern Ireland, made a surprise flight to London Monday for talks with Prime Minister Harold Wilson amid a deepening crisis over the Belfast barricades.

Lt. Gen. Sir Ian Freeland, commander of the 7,500 British troops deployed here since last month's Protestant-Roman Catholic rioting was accompanied by Oliver Wright, the British trouble shooter attached to Northern Ireland's provincial government.

They met at 10 Downing St. with Wilson, Defense Secretary Denis Healey and Home Secretary James Callaghan, principal author of the reform package intended to meet Catholic charges of discrimination and to get the barricades down.

Officially, they met to review developments since thearmy took control of Northern Ireland's security in mid-August, but it was clear that the continued existence of barricades in Catholic areas of Belfast and Londonderry was high on the agenda.

Despite appeals from the two governments and the Roman Catholic hierarchy, Catholic defense groups have refused to cooperate with the military in removing the barricades erected during the riots.

Meanwhile, leaders of Belfast's Central Citizens Defense Committee, which claims to speak for more than 70,000 people, issued a series of demands that government spokesmen branded as completely unacceptable.

The demands clouded an agreement reached last week between religious and political spokesmen for the barricaded areas and Home Secretary James Callaghan by which the barricades would come down voluntarily once adequate military protection could be assured.

The committee demanded assurance from the army that no persons would be arrested under the Northern Ireland Special Powers Act, which gives the government the power to jail persons without trial. Committee leaders said no negotiations on bringing down the barricades could begin before the demand was met.

The committee also demanded disbandment of special police reserves, disarming of regular police, repeal of the Special Powers Act and British legislation if Northern Ireland's Prime Minister James Chichester-Clark fails to deliver the promised reform package.

UMass Botanist Investigates Underwater Plants

Clad in wet suit, flippers, mask and full diver's gear, a man snorkels around the edges of a Berkshire lake, gathering bottom weeds in a nylon net bag.

He's a University botanist in the process of making the first comprehensive survey in Massachusetts of lake plants, how they grow, and how they affect the quality of a lake and its water.

The diver is Philip Bentley and he's one of several UMass researchers working under federal and state grants through the UMass Water Resources Research Center to find out more about a process called eutrophication.

Eutrophication is over-enrichment of lake water with chemical nutrients that feed plant growth. In a comparatively few years, eutrophocation can change a clear-bottom lake with clean water into a scummy, body of cloudy water choked with weeds.

Bentley is in the final year of a three year study of aquatic plants in eight lakes and ponds in western Massachusetts, most of them in the Berkshires. "We want to know how these plants respond to eutrophication and how they grow and change as eutrophication progresses," he explained.

As far as UMass scientists can determine, the root causes of eutrophication are nitrates, phosphates and similar compounds that find their way into lake water, mainly from man's waste discharges and runoff from fertilized farm fields. Algae and similar microscopic plants feed on these nutrients, grow, multiply and die in massive quantities.

When they die, they settle to the bottom, where with other sediments they establish a base for rooted lake plants. At the same time, they give up the nutrient compounds to nourish a new crop of algae, starting the cycle all over again.

Bentley with his boat and trailer, diving gear and diving companion, travels from lake to lake, collecting plants, taking water samples and collecting other data. The lakes selected range from the heavily eutrophic Pontoosuc in Pittsfield to the comparatively clean Richmond Pond in the town of that name.

"I've found 40 to 50 different varieties of lake plants," Bentley said. "After I collect them, they are dried and analyzed for mineral content-phosphates and nitrates." Bentley also drops a secchi disc 10 to 12 feet over the side of his boat to take readings on water clarity and uses a VanDorn sampler to take water samples which are checked later for algae content.

"We use a metal square at a marked place on the bottom of each lake to measure plant growth," Bentley explained. "I go down at regular intervals and observe plants growing within the square."

Bentley is a graduate of Acadia University in Nova Scotia with an M.S. degree in botany from Mc Gill University. He has been a science teacher in high school and college and is a doctoral candidate at UMass. On the plant study, he's working under Dr. Robert B. Livingston of the UMass botany department.

The theory is, according to Dr. Livingston, that aquatic plants may trap substantial quantities of the nutrients that cause eutrophication. "Harvesting such plants and removal from the watershed may therefore be an effective way of arresting and reversing the eutrophication process," he explained.

Hellow Friend Opens

The Hello Friend Folk Society played Southwest this past weekend with two shows. Friday night was a closed concert with twelve acts. Saturday night featured five Hello Friend members. The stage was moved into the center of the floor for folk in the round. This brought singers and listeners into much closer contact so that they were interacting with each other. Close to 1 a.m., each evening closed with the reading of poetry.

Folk culture has found a home with Hello Friend. The Society travels to different locations on campus to reach different groups of people. In addition to doing a good job on other people's songs, they are writing some good, involved and real songs themselves.

For the future, there are tentative plans for a five college folk culture course, and a folk magazine.

Starting Berths on Line as Redmen Ready for Maine

By PETER PASCARELLI
Sports Editor

Hopefully there is no superstitition on the UMass football team. As the Redmen continue final preparations for their season opener Saturday at Maine, it comes to mind that the other team that practiced on the UMass fields was edged in its opener, 35-7. Of course they were the Boston Patsies (oops!! Patriots).

On a more serious note (Patriot football is anything but serious), Redman coach Vic Fusia is left with the work of sorting out his forces and making up some sort of starting units. It will be no easy task, as competition has developed at virtually every position, both on offense and defense.

The task wasn't made any easier by the intrasquad scrimmage the Redmen held Saturday, as sophomores more than held their own and generally made life a little miserable for their older teammates.

Fusia, in the midst of a busy week, commented, "I was generally impressed with our defense. They seem to be a little ahead of the offense. But we still have a lot of work to do with both.

"I was also impressed with several sophomores. Linebacker Dennis Collins, backs Angelo Di Nardo and Mike Sawyer, and lineman Bob Donlin all played well, in addition to others. There won't be a decision on starters until later in the week."

The scrimmage took the toll of one Redman however, Neil Herring, who has been doing some punting, and playing defensive back will be lost for six weeks with a shoulder injury.

Other Redmen, who came in for praise from Fusia, were veterans, John MacLean and Tom York, and also fullback Ed Sarno.

UMass will practice here the next three days before embarking to the wilds of the Maine wilderness Friday morning. The team will have a lot of work to do the rest of the week, the coaches just as much. And these next three days of practice will tell the story about who will be the 22 starters of this, the 87th season of UMass football.

With all the competition for jobs, there should be more depth. Now, hopefully, the Patriots magic didn't rub off.

Former Celtic Great Heinsohn Named Coach by Frustrated Auerbach

BOSTON (AP) - Tommy Heinsohn, 35, who helped the Boston Celtics to eight championships in nine years as a player, returned to the National Basketball Association team Monday as coach.

General Manager Red Auerbach named the former Holy Cross All-American to succeed Bill Russell, who announced his retirement as player-coach in July.

Auerbach grudgingly accepted defeat in trying to persuade Russell to change his mind and fulfill one year left on a contract which would have paid him more than $200,000 for the 1969-70 season.

"Right now he's retired," Auerbach told a news conference. "I got to the point where I don't discuss it with him. If he changes his mind about playing, he changes his mind."

In naming Heisohn, who broke in with the Celtics in 1956, the same year as Russell, Auerbach said: "It is necessary for us to move forward for this season. We cannot wait any longer for Bill."

Ironically, Heinsohn left the door open to return to the Celtics. "If they need me and if arrangements can be worked out" when he retired as a player to accept a lucrative insurance business opportunity after the 1964-65 season.

"Tommy has been intimately involved with the Celtics since his retirement," Auerbach said. "He knows our personnel, and he has scouted for us."

Heinsohn has been the announcer of Celtic's telecasts for the past few seasons. He often was joined by Auerbach.

Auerbach originally planned to handle the coaching duties with Heinsohn in the Celtics' training camp, which opened informally Monday with rookies and newcomers on hand. However, Auerbach apparently decided Russell was through and decided to turn over the reigns to Heinsohn.

Heinsohn, a 6-foot-7 forward, joined the Celtics after a fabulous career at Holy Cross. With Russell and another former Holy Cross All-American, Bob Cousy, the Celtics built a dynasty.

Heinsohn averaged over 18 points a game and earned NBA All-star honors five times. Cousy recently was named coach of the NBA Cincinnati Royals.

Heinsohn will have his work cut out for him as the Celtics, who have won the NBA title in 11 of the past 13 years, have been hit hard by the retirements of Russell and Sam Jones.

Sayers Declares Knee 110%

CHICAGO (AP) - The Chicago Bears' great running back, Gale Sayers, gradually has been building up a head of steam in preseason games and now is ready to go full force in the National Football League opener at Green Bay Sunday.

"I'm going to carry the ball at least 20 times against the Packers," Sayers said Monday. "The Bear offense is geared for me to run as much as I ever did."

Sayers has been used rather sparingly in six exhibition games as he works back from a knee operation last fall. There is little evidence that he is not the same great runner as always.

He has gained 211 yards in 47 carries with a 70-yard run his longest. He has returned eight kickoffs for 299 yards, including a 97-yard touchdown scamper. And he has caught 10 passes for 89 yards.

Sayers told pro football writer Ed Stone of Chicago Today that he is sure his knee is "110 per cent sound" and that he can cut and do everything else as well as before.

Any hesitancy at times about hitting the hole from scrimmage was discounted by Sayers.

"I think I'm just as quick as ever," he said. "But when I pick a hole, I'm looking for daylight and a lot of times the holes haven't been there. Last year, the blocking was so good that I could see the hole right away and pop through.

"Any back can plow into the line for a yard. But I'm not looking for just a yard. I'm trying to go all the way every time I carry the ball."

Cards Still Hoping for Miracle to Overhaul Mets

ST. LOUIS (AP) - During spring training, when most folks were conceding the National League's Eastern Division title to St. Louis or Chicago, manager Red Schoendienst cautioned: "Don't overlook the Mets." From the Cardinals' viewpoint, it is too bad that Schoendienst's spring judgment of the New Yorkers proved so accurate.

"You can get fooled sometimes by a team in spring training," Schoendienst said Monday. "But the Mets impressed me for two or three reasons. I liked their pitching. They had some young, strong boys doing good jobs. The team was hustling, playing together better.

"They weren't making the same kind of mistakes that beat them the year before. They were hitting the cutoff man, they weren't throwing to the wrong base. They weren't beating themselves."

Mathematically, going into Monday night's opener of a two-game series against New York, the defending champion Cards still had a chance to overhaul the front-running Mets and the second-place Cubs. But with the Mets nine games out front and the Cubs 5 1/2 ahead of the Cards, it would take almost a miracle.

"I figure we've got to beat the Mets and the Cubs every game the rest of the way," Schoednienst said. "We can't afford to lose another game to either team."

The Cards just took two of three from the Cubs over the weekend. They play Chicago four games next weekend in Chicago. Then they have two more against the Mets in New York.

St. Louis hasn't fared well against New York this season. The Mets have won eight of their 14 meetings, and in St. Louis the Mets hold a 5-2 edge. But the Cards players aren't ruling out a miracle.

"It's kind of remote but you can't convince me we're out of it until we're mathematically eliminated," said pitcher Bob Gibson after Sunday's 2-1 victory over the Cubs. "I can remember 1964 when we won it on the last day.."

Dome City Grows; Senate Supports Protest with Money

By JOEL FOX
Managing Editor

Charging that the University has become more and more insensitive to the College community, a group of students have begun organization of a Free University City to be located behind the Southwest Residential College. The students who started the work, presented a rationale for their Free University to the Dean's Council yesterday and will present the rationale to the students today. (The Rationale appears on page seven of today's Daily Collegian)

At the moment 50 people are working on the City setup with tents and domes being constructed to live and learn in. However, every day they are receiving more physical and now financial help. Yesterday afternoon, Student Senate President Bruce Balboni disclosed that the Senate Executive Committee has allocated up to $400 for use by the Free University City in construction. Last night, the Sophomore Class Exec. Council pledged $250 to help defray costs of the City.

Terry Tirrell, speaking for the Free University, said that an open invitation is given to the University community: faculty, grad students, and undergrads, to come to the Free University to lead and participate in discussion and to assist in the new enterprise. Presently, there is no specific date set for the completion of the geodesic domes and tents.

In the rationale the students listed seven complaints that they have with the University. Briefly, the complaints include: 1) University education operates under an antiquated course requirement system which leaves students with little choice of selection in half their courses, 2) By excluding students from decisions on hiring faculty, teachers are chosen on criteria, such as researchers and writers, etc., and may not prove to be competent teachers, 3) The grading system breeds competitiveness instead of co-operation which is essential in learning, 4) The University is becoming too large which may be helped by smaller student centered communities, 5) The emotional side of the student is lost as teaching continues on an intellectual plane, 6) The University, by not incorporating into the curriculum opportunities for students to act constructively as agents of social change is ignoring students widespread concern for the reform of the larger society, 7) Finally, the root of all these problems is the basic exclusion of students from policy making and decision making.

Class of '72 Exec Council Will Give $250 to Movement

The Class of '72 Executive Council last night voted to support the Free University and announced its intention to donate $250 to the City.

The Council, which is composed of representatives from all dorms, will hold a referendum in the near future to gain a concrete vote of class support.

In their meeting, the Council expressed their support for the City and its announced grievances against the University. Spokesmen for the class voiced their hope that the referendum would serve to further acquaint Sophomores with the plans of the City, and unify their class behind the City plan.

Pres. Lederle Delivers Last Convocation Speech Today

John W. Lederle will deliver the U Mass Convocation address for the last time today at 10:00 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

All 10:10 classes are cancelled to allow both students and faculty to attend the program.

In addition to Lederle's address, Rev. Arnold Kenseth will deliver the invocation, and the student body will be officially greeted by Student Senate President Bruce Balboni. Provost Oswald Tippo will preside over the program.

Also, the annual Distinguished Teacher awards will be presented at the Convocation. The recipients have been selected by a faculty committee and are honored for "manifest excellence in the art of teaching and outstanding devotion to the cause of education."

President Lederle's speech on the "Humane University" will be his last Convocation speech. He leaves the Presidency after a ten year administration this Spring.

The opening processional will be led by mace bearer William H. Rose. This honor is traditionally given to the teacher who has held the Distinguished Teacher Award for the longest time, and Dr. Rose won the award in 1962.

In a related development, the campus SDS chapter Monday night voted to protest Lederle's address at Convocation.

Students Discuss Crowded Dorms, Field Sees Little Help in Sight

Students occupying crowded residence halls met last night to air their gripes about the housing crisis now existing on campus.

Right now, there are 430 "over-normal occupancies" in residence halls with a total of 1290 students tripled. Almost all of these triples exist in the Southwest area with 253 tripled female residence halls and 145 tripled male residence halls. This means that the remaining campus housing facilities must cope with only 32 tripled rooms.

When asked why such a housing crisis had been allowed to develop, Dean of Students, William F. Field pointed out that because of housing vacancies last year, the University decided to raise its normal projection of housing capacity from 95% to 100%, so that rents would not have to be raised. But the administration overshot its mark because of a lack of co-ordination, and achieved 104% capacity in residence halls. This caused the present housing crisis.

Chairman of the Student Senate Services Committee, Mark Brenner, questioned Dean Field as to why such an error causing a terrible hardship especially on freshmen could be allowed to take place.

Dean Field answered, "The enrollment of the University has grown over the past 6 or 7 years, unfortunately the Administration hasn't."

Dean Field also said that he would like to see the University adopt the security deposit system which would guarantee a student a normal occupancy room, but when asked if this sytem would have alleviated the housing crisis, he answered, "No."

What kind of relief is in sight for those who are victims of this crisis? There are some vacancies which exist in the Northeast, Orchard Hill and Central areas, but these will hardly make a dent in the amount of triples. The housing office should have notices out to the various heads of residence today concerning these vacancies.

The chief complaint aired by students at the meeting was the absence of aid to those suffering in the emvironment of a triple. One co-ed complained that she could not get anyone to find another lamp for her to use. Another co-ed was allowed to walk aimlessly through Administrative "buckpassing" for 12 hours before someone finally found a room for her so she would not have to spend the night in the street.

President Considers Suspension of Draft

By CARL P. LEUBSDORF

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon has given thought to suspending the military draft at least for a while, but hasn't made up his mind yet, the White House indicated Tuesday.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler declined to confirm or deny that it is a likely possibility in the near future. He said the idea has been talked about from time to time.

Ziegler said Nixon is in the midst of discussing with his aides draft reforms and possible executive orders or directives to change parts of the procedure.

"There's no firm decision at the moment on that," the press secretary said, without indicating when it might come.

Ziegler made the comments when asked whether outright suspension of the draft is among alternatives Nixon is weighing in his discussion on the future of the Selective Service system.

Prospects of Congress changing the law this year remain doubtful, although Nixon sent up his proposal months ago.

These sources suggested that Nixon might act by executive order if Congress does not pass reform legislation before the end of the current session, which may run into early December.

Defense authorities said a total halt in drafting for several months would probably have a more telling impact on the campuses, where the administration is hoping to damp down antiwar turbulence.

The possibility of a suspension of draft calls is tied in with plans to reduce the over-all strength of the armed forces, and this in turn is related to the reduction of U.S. troops in Vietnam, sources said.

Officials cautioned that a halt in drafting might result in a drop-off in voluntary enlistments, unless it were made clear that the action was only temporary pending reform of the draft system.

Provost's Office Conducting Review Of Teaching Loads

Provost Oswald Tippo has disclosed that his office is conducting a complete review of the teaching load of every University faculty member.

The Provost made the disclosure following an editorial in last Friday's DAILY COLLEGIAN which called for he and Dean Shapiro "to review the teaching load of every faculty member and where possible ask the faculty member to teach an additional section."

The Provost expects a complete report within the next two weeks.

All undergraduates who have registered their cars with the Parking Office as of Sept. 11 can pick up their parking decals in the Student Union ballroom Thursday and Friday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. ID cards are required to receive the stickers.

Administration May Support Leniency for Marijuana Users

Attorney General John N. Mitchell indicated yesterday that the administration may support more lenient Federal penalties for marijuana users while seeking stronger authority to pursue professional drug traffickers.

Testifying before the Senate juvenile delinquency sub committee, Mitchell noted that young people "are in frighteningly increasing numbers turning to marijuana, hard narcotics and other dangerous drugs as a way of life."

But he drew a distinction between various drug law violators.

"Perhaps the most promising alternative is to approach the narcotics violator in relation to his function - the professional trafficker who should be given as severe a sentence as possible; the casual and intermittent user who is perhaps only experimenting out of curiousity, or the mentally or physically ill addict who, without additional help, cannot break a confirmed habit," Mitchell said.

The existing Federal penalty for a first-time marijuana user is a mandatory sentence of five to 20 years.

Although Mitchell noted that this "penalty structure" is higher than Federal sentence for man-slaughter or sabotage, there had been no proposal for changing this law in President Nixon's message to Congress on drug abuse July 14.

In fact, the Nixon message proposed that the penalties for possession or sale of LSD be increased to be the same as for marijuana. There is no federal minimum sentence for LSD offenses.

The L.A. Times reported that Justice Department sources said Mitchell's remarks indicated the administration is now willing to accept lesser penalties for young marijuana offenders.

Mitchell said yesterday: "I personally believe in sentences which are reasonably calculated to be deterrents to crime and which also will give judges sufficient flexibility to tailor the sentences to the requirements of the drug violator or narcotics addict."

"Prison is not the only logical alternative," said he.

"In some cases, it may be advisable to use Federal rehabilitation programs, half-way houses and private medical treatment on probation or parole.

He said he would like to explore alternative penalty structures with members of the senate subcommittee. The chairman, Thomas J. Dodd (D-Ct), favors elimination of the minimum sentence in all drug cases.

To aid the Federal effort against organized drug operations, the Attorney General asked the subcommittee to approve authority for "no knock" raids in which agents could descent on suspected hideouts without advance warning.

Authority for such raids would have to come from a Federal magistrate.

Discussing the incidence of drug abuse among young people, Mitchell said that nationally in 1968, 26.6 percent of persons arrested for violations were under 18; 56.6 percent were under 21 and 76.6 percent were under 25.

Student Union Open 24 Hrs.

Hatch will Close at 1.30

The Student Union will be open 24 hours a day this semester.

That announcement from the SUG Board is the culmination of several years urging by the Student Senate, long hours of SUG Board research, and two trial "late closing periods."

For the remainder of this semester, the Hatch will close at 10:30, as in the past, but the Union lounges will remain open throughout the night. A coke machine has been installed in the music room, and candy and cigarette machines have been put in the main lobby.

The reason the Union has not been open all night in the past has been the difficulty in hiring and maintaining help.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon formally announced Tuesday his intention to nominate Dean Burch, Tucson, Ariz., attorney, to be chairman of the Federal Communication Commission.

Burch helped direct the 1964 Republican presidential compaign of Sen. Barry Goldwater and served briefly also as Republican National chairman. Nixon also announced his intention to nominate Robert Wells, Garden City, Kan., to be a member of the FCC.

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) - The barricades began falling in "Free Belfast" Tuesday, but British troops sent in to help with the work encountered stout opposition on some streets in the Roman Catholic Falls Road District.

Debates and confusion on the streets and among civil rights leaders slowed the dismantling operation in the Catholic stronghold. But some leaders predicted the area would be clear by Wednesday.

MOSCOW (AP) - Radio Moscow derided Tuesday night President Nixon's announced plan to withdraw at least 35,000 more troops from South Vietnam. The broadcast called it "just a drop in the ocean."

A commentator said Nixon "failed to reply to any points" in the 10-point peace plan put forward by the Viet Cong.

The commentator further charged that Nixon's previous announcement of withdrawal of 25,000 troops "was seen by world opinion as a propaganda maneuver and an attempt to deceive the public."

He did not make a similar charge about the new announced withdrawal.

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon is getting ready to prod congressional leaders in hopes of speeding action of his lagging legislative program.

Nixon began a review of the status of his program in Congress today with House and Senate Republican leaders in preparation for drawing up a list of items he wants to see passed this year.

House GOP leader Gerald R. Ford of Michigan, talking to newsmen after the White House session, said it will take another meeting Friday to complete the review and the list.

Despite the fact it has been in session nearly nine months, Congress has completed action on only a tiny fraction of the bills Nixon has asked it to pass. Most of his proposals are still in committees.

Authority on British Lit. Named English Dept. Head

An authority on 17th Century English literature who formerly headed the English department at the University of New Mexico has been named head of the UMass English department, Provost Oswald Tippo has announced.

He is Dr. Joseph Frank, who relieves Dr. Russell K. Alspach as head of the University's largest academic department. Dr. Alspach has been acting department head since 1967 and will remain in the department as professor of English.

Dr. Frank has been awarded two Guggenheim Fellowships, a Huntington Library Fellowship, and a Folger Shakespeare Fellowship. He is author of three books on 17th Century writing, has edited three others and has written numerous other publications.

Dr. Frank

Before going to New Mexico to head the English department in 1967, Dr. Frank was at the University of Rochester, joining the English faculty as instructor in 1948 and leaving as professor. He holds A.B., M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Harvard University.

He has served as president of the University of Rochester Chapter of the American Association of University Professors, as president of the Genesee Valley Chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union and as a member of the New Mexico State Board of the ACLU.

Dr. Frank's books are "The Levellers," a study of the 17th Century English pampleteers published in 1953 by Harvard University Press; "The Beginning of the English Newspaper," Harvard University Press, 1961; and "Hobbled Pegasus," a descriptive bibliography of minor 17th Century English poets published in 1968 by the University of New Mexico Press.

He edited "Literature from the Bible," published by Little Brown and Co. in 1963; "Modern Essays in English," a 1966 Little Brown book; and "McCarthy's Campaign: The New Look in Politics," published by the New Mexico Press in 1968.

Dr. Frank has worked as an advertising copywriter, and as an economist for the War Labor Board for a short period during World War II. During that war he was first an American field Service volunteer with British forces in the Middle East and later in the U.S. Army in the China-Burma-India Theater.

"I think an English department can play a very significant role in the changes that are taking place on campuses all around the country," Dr. Frank said. "I believe, for example, that contemporary literature does not end with the printed word but includes such things as film and TV."

With the adhesiveness of the cement being poured below, students and teachers alike have been glued to the construction site of the new library.

Cement filled in the holes and crevices of the framework as it poured from the truck and moved swiftly down a portable conveyer belt. A hose, emitting a stream of air, stabbed beneath the gray surface to spread and settle the cement.

Twenty hours of continuous work will be needed to fill in the large area in the center of construction.

Nuclear Test Blast in Nevada Sends Shock Waves Through West

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) - A major underground nuclear blast termed "very important" to national defense bulged the top of a desert mesa Monday and sent shock waves rippling through western states.

The Atomic Energy Commission said there was no leakage of radiation and no reported damage from the 7:30 a.m. detonation with energy equivalent to 800,000 tons of TNT.

The test of the hydrogen device was described as for development of a future weapons system. Unofficial reports said it was an experimental antimissile warhead.

Experts estimated it vaporized, melted or shattered 10 million tons of rock and created a 700-feet diameter cavern, which later could collapse creating a surface crater.

Pictures televised from a helicopter when the blast occurred showed the mesa top bulging upward about 15 feet for a few seconds, like a shallow dome. Cracks perhaps 50 to 70 feet wide and several hundred feet long appeared momentarily, vanishing as the bulge fell back.

Three distinct shock waves were felt in Las Vegas. The gambling town's tallest building, the 19-story Landmark Hotel, swayed for a minute. James Truesdell of Los Angeles, a 12th floor guest, said he thought it was an earthquake. His wife, he said, was "running around hysterically in her nightie."

Moon Dust Looks Like Dirt; High in Helium

CAMBRIDGE, Mass (AP) - "It looks just like dirt," said Dr. Edward L. Fireman as he displayed the 10-gram sample of moon dust Monday at the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory.

Dr. Fireman returned with the $5 million worth of lunar soil in his coat pocket Saturday and began a series of tests Sunday which revealed the sample contains "an enormous amount of helium."

The precious black dust brought to Cambridge contained more helium than the samples examined at the Lunar Receiving Laboratory at Houston, Tex.

Dr. Fireman said the sample he returned with had not been sterilized in Houston like the other lunar dust returned from the Apollo II lunar landing.

He is checking the sample for radioisotopes Argon 37 and 39 and tritium, chemicals formed in outer space by the bombardment of hydrogen and argon by cosmic rays.

Space officials revealed in Washington Monday that some of the moon samples brought back are probably older than the earth.

Law Averages Cannot be Raised By Taking "Pass-Fail" Courses

Which course should I take "pass-fail"? "None" may be the best answer if you are concerned about your cumulative average.

The "pass-fail" option was instituted to encourage students to be venturesome in the choice of their elective courses. For example, the science major with a high cumulative average who has satisfied the University and College requirements in the humanities might elect a course in literature or in creative art if he could enroll in a course with the assurance that he was not thereby jeopardizing his average.

"Pass-fail" was never intended as a crutch for those with low averages, and those who have so interpreted it have often come to regret their choice. Even a grade of "C" served to raise the average of every student with less than a 2.0 average. Furthermore, if a grade of "Pass" is earned in a course, the quality point average is based upon grades in a fewer number of courses than would otherwise be the case. The student who earns three C's, one D and one F in five 3 credit courses has a 1.4 semester average. If one of the "C" is converted to "Pass" the semester average is reduced to 1.25!

If you are enrolling in a course in a field in which you are truly uncertain of your ability, "pass-fail" is perhaps what you want. Under other circumstances, beware. The restrictions on the use of the "Pass-fail" option are stated on page 31 of the Student Handbook. If you have further questions, consult your adviser. Students in the College of Arts and Sciences are invited to visit the CASIAC office in South College entrance A.

Applications for Financial Aid Greatly Exceed Funds Available

The number of applications for financial aid this year and the need represented by these applicants far exceed the funds available for distribution.

This year, because of the large number of applicants and the high amount of need shown by those applicants, in most cases UMass has been able to meet only about half of the need and occasionally three-quarters of the need, but in only a handful of cases has the school met the full need.

There are three programs from the federal government which provide financial aid for students. One is the Educational Opportunity Grants Program which, basically, provides that a student can receive between $200 and $1,000 per year based on his need and that any amount given under this program must be matched equally by the University either in National Defense Loan money, in Work-Study funds, or from outside scholarships or state scholarships.

The second program is one of Work-Study wherein students who show a need are allowed to work and receive an hourly wage which currently is set at a minimum of $1.45 per hour at the University.

The third program is the National Defense Student Loan program wherein students are allowed to borrow up to $1,000 per year at 3% interest with some of this being written off for those who go into teaching. The funds for the National Defense Student Loan program were low this year compared with other years. The University asked for $348,750 and received only $148,645.

UMass did receive the entire amount of scholarship money and matching money which it requested from the state, namely $850,000. This has been distributed as matching money for National Defense Loans (10% required), matching Work - Study programs (20% required), and the remainder has been distributed both on the Boston and Amherst campuses in scholarship aid to those persons who showed a combination of need and the required cumulative qualify point average (currently at 2.5) or superior high school record for freshmen.

The University received approximately 6,000 applications for financial aid. Of these, about 2,200 will be given aid.

Students have been encouraged to try the Higher Education Loan Plan through commercial banks and although the financial aid office is processing a larger number of these than ever (over $2,000,000 was borrowed under this program by our students last year) they still receive many calls from parents and students stating that the banks are turning them down.

There is a possibility that additional National Defense Loan money will be allocated sometime during the fall and that a higher interest percentage will be granted to the banks for the Higher Education Loans and if both of these are acted upon by Congress a better picture may present itself for the second semester.

Robert J. Morrissey, Director of Placement & Financial Aid, reminds students that all awards are made on a yearly basis and an award given in any one year does not guarantee a similar award in subsequent years. Each year is considered separately based on the number of applicants, the need of those applicants, and the amount of money available. A new application is necessary each year.

All undergraduate financial aid programs are geared to the concept of financial need and seek to aid those most in need of assistance. Financial need is a figure arrived at by the difference between the total cost of one year's study at the University (figured at $1,900 this year) and the total resources available to the student from his parents and other sources that he might have available to him including his own assets. After assessing the financial need of a student an effort is made to give a package of financial aid which might include one or more of the following: loan, scholarship, grant, or work-study.

MLK Holds Open Meeting

There will be an open meeting of the Martin Luther King, Jr. Social Action Council Wednesday, Sept. 17 at 8 p.m. in Hasbrouck 20 Aud, open to all students, faculty and administrators interested in joining the King Council or simply curious about its activities.

The King Council is presently working out a number of programs it will be conducting during the current year. It will be co-ordinating October 15 activities on campus in support of the National Moratorium protesting the war in Vietnam and is planning to present another Night of Inquiry all-night teach-in.

There will also be ongoing education programs. Plans are now being made for speakers and films on various topics. The King Council's researching the power structure and other aspects of the University. It is also continuing involvement with the NES tutoring program in Springfield.

In addition to these programs, the King Council needs people to maintain contacts in each dorm and residence area, to help with office work, and to help man a literature table in the Student Union.

State Rent Freeze Urged To Stop Spiraling Rents

A legislative proposal that would freeze apartment rentals throughout the state was introduced yesterday at a meeting of the Brookline Board of Selectmen by Brookline Rep. Jack H. Backman.

Appearing before the group in a general discussion of the rent situation in Brookline, Backman offered his proposed legislation as a solution to the problem of rent control in other cities and towns besides Brookline, notably Amherst.

The Backman proposal would freeze all apartment rental at July 1, 1969, rental level and would demand certain ordinary services from landlords.

Control over the rent situation would be exercised by a five-member non-paid rent board. Exempt from the plan would be hotels, motor courts and housing built after January, 1970.

The measure, if given legislative approval, would require the vote of a city council or a special town meeting.

Rep. Backman told the board the town of Brookline had not met its responsibility towards tenants.

He said the Brookline situation was becoming "increasingly acute" because of spiraling rents.

Yale President Says Cynicism Is Big Problem

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP)-The president of Yale University cited the Rev. William Sloane Coffin Jr. yesterday as an example of Yale men who not yielded to "the temptations to cynicism which pervade the country."

In a speech to the freshman class-which includes the first female undergraduates in Yale's 268-year history - President Kingman Brewster Jr. said cynicism is a more serious problem than campus disorders - or sex.

"The young tend to be cynical about the old," he said. "The old tend to be cynical about the young.

"Both tendencies are disastrous."

Brewster portrayed Yale men as men who "have not been disposed to hide their public motivation, their idealism, or even their romanticism."

Point of Information

The UMass Convocation or that little ritual that we all go through each year to officially open the school (which by the way has been open now for over a week) will take place tomorrow morning at 10:10 a.m. in the Student Union Ball Room.

While most students probably tend to look upon convocation as another one of those centuries old ivy covered ceremonies to be attended by only those required to attend along with a few rather "square" undergraduates, this one is anticipated to be at least a little different from the rest in that it does mark the end of the reign of President Lederle.

It is true and maybe even an understatement to say that many of us (students and faculty) have differed with Lederle on occasion for things that he has done or left undone in the past. But this will be his last convocation speech as president of this university, and for all we know, he may just say something that we all would like to hear this time.

We, as members of the University community, have been invited to come and hear what he has to say. So let's all try to see just how much that extra hour of sleep means to us, and this time, if we never do it again in our lives, we should make it a point to be present. Who knows; he might just say something this time.

A Matter of Fairness

The student dorm counselors from the various residential areas at a meeting last week outlined plans to attempt to get back counselor compensation which has officially been cancelled by William F. Field, Dean of Students, for the spring semester.

The chief complaint is that the counselors were promised last year before the school closed that they would be compensated again this year with a salary increase for their work. The counselors received a letter over the summer stating that they would be compensated in the fall, but that in the spring semester sufficient funds were not available to pay them.

It seems to us to be grossly unfair that these people were promised the money many of whom were counting on it in order to come back this year to be told shortly before their return that they would not be paid in the spring.

Dean Field has said that he will do all that he can to get the money in order to pay these people next spring. We strongly urge him to use his influence and to do all that he can to get the money in order to prevent another in the long line of breaks in communication between the students and the administration that always seem to inevitably occur.

The Announcement

(The following is the first article in a column that Doug Packer will be writing on a weekly basis for the Collegian. We will be featuring our new columnists this week on the editorial page.)

In a few days President Nixon is expected to hold a press conference in order to announce an important decision. I have it on good authority that the conference will go something like this.

An excited anticipation was evident in the smoke-filled press room in Washington as correspondents from around the world speculated on President Nixon's announcement. They knew that a press conference of this kind, which was announced only a few days before could change the world situation in an instant. Everyone speculated but no one in the room was the least bit sure of what President Nixon was to announce.

"Maybe he's going to announce that he's coming back from San Clemente."

"I heard it's going to be another appointment."

"Well, I heard he's going on another good-will tour."

The noise in the room stopped abruptly as heads turned to see the President's Press Secretary enter from the right wing of the small platform. He strode to the microphone and announced the President and the press rose.

President Nixon walked slowly, almost embarrassed, with his hands behind his back and his head slightly bent. He arrived at the microphone, turned, and the members of the world press sat in unison and waited for the President to speak.

"Ladies and gentlemen, members of the press, I have an important announcement to make." He stopped and the press readied their pens and notebooks. The President took a deep breath, paused, and spoke. "I quit." Pens and pencils dropped, mouths opened, no one moved. He looked up and let out an embarrassed laugh.

"I only wanted to see what it was like. I really didn't think anyone would take me seriously.

Ike told me it was really great to be President, to have people call you "Mr. President", and I just wanted to see for myself. Gee whiz, I didn't think I'd have to take care of any domestic or foreign problems. Ike didn't have to.

But I'll tell you this, and I want to make this very clear, it was fun while it lasted. Riding in my own jet, vacationing in San Clemente, making appointments, going on good-will tours all over the world, it was great, just like Ike said it would be.

Now all these problems people are coming to me with the war, poverty, welfare, hunger, inflation, Russia, China, it's too much. I just never expected people to come to me Dick Nixon, the poor boy from Whittier, California, and ask me to solve their problems. Frankly, I think they have a lot of nerve. This job was just getting to be fun and here, they come along and ruin it for me.

Well, I quit, I've had enough, and Spiro told me that when I quit, he would quit too.

So I'd like to thank you, members of the press, for letting my honeymoon last this long and if any of you are ever in need of a story, just come to me, Dick Nixon, former President, do you hear that, President of these United States.

This Is A Recording

WASHINGTON -- The most important division of the telephone company these days is the Department of Recorded Announcements. As telephone service in this country keep getting worse, the Department of Recorded Announcements plays an ever-greater role in the system.

Heading up the DRA at the phone company is Miss Shirley Thrush, who recently was made a full vice president. I visited her at her complex which covered several acres outside Pleasantville, N.Y.

Miss Thrush told me, "A few years ago, I used to do all the recording for the telephone company at my desk during lunch hour. But now, as you can see, I have an entire division devoted to it, and we're growing all the time."

"Then, you thrive on the bad luck of the rest of the company?"

"I wouldn't say that," Miss Thrush said. "But let's say for years everyone in the company thought I was a joke. Now it's my turn to think they're all jokes."

"How do you make the recordings?"

"Come, we'll go to one of the studios."

She took me down the hall to a large studio with a dozen mikes hanging from all positions. An attractive woman was standing at one of the mikes. In the control booth was an engineer, a writer, a script girl, a director and a producer.

Miss Thrush asked the producer what he was working on.

"We're doing the circuits are busy' recording."

"Oh," said Miss Thrush. "This is one of my favorites." We sat down in the control booth behind the director, who said over his mike "All right, Gladys. Let's do it again."

Gladys, holding her script, started to read into the microphone, "I'm sorry, all circuits are busy now. Would you please place your call at a later time?"

"No, no, no," the director shouted over the mike. "You didn't sound sorry when you said it. The person who hears you isn't going to believe you. You must make him feel you're sorrier than he is that he didn't get the call. OK, let's try it again."

"I'm SORRY," Gladys said dabbing her eyes with a handkerchief. "All circuits are busy. Would you please place your call at a later time?"

The director said, "The sorry part was OK, but you didn't sound strong enough when you asked them to call at a later time. It was too weak. If someone heard you, they immediately would have dialed again. We want them to get the hell off the phone."

Miss Thrush said to me, "They'll be doing this for hours. Come, I'll take you to another studio."

We went down the hall to another studio and into the control booth. A girl was just reading the lines, "I'm sorry, the number you have reached is not in service at this time. Please be sure you have dialed the right number."

"Where were the chimes?" the director yelled. "They were supposed to come in before she says she's sorry."

"I thought you wanted chimes at the end," the engineer said.

"No, at the beginning, to get the caller in a good mood. You're going to tell him he's an idiot, and the chimes prepare him for it."

When we finished the tour, I said, "You're doing a wonderful job here."

Miss Thrush replied, "The tail is now wagging the dog. If things continue as they have been, the telephone company could have its first woman president."

Rationale on Free University

Rather than increasing its sensitivity to the outside community and to the lives of its students, the University has become more and more insensitive. As the number of students at the University increases one would think the University would do more to become less impersonal and would try to be more aware of the problems of identity and personality development that its vastness creates.

This has not been the case. Not only has the University continued to proudly increase numbers while being totally insensitive to the humanity which these numbers represent; but it has continually disregarded all of the necessary reforms that the University's growth demands.

BEFORE THE BUDGET CUT Massachusetts ranked 50th nationally in state aid to higher education and now the situation is worse. With insufficient campus housing and outrageously high off-campus rents, thousands of students have been forced to improvise in finding housing space. Dormitory rooms have been stuffed, corridors have been turned into barracks, and study lounges have been used as hostels for students wandering around campus looking for a place to spend the night.

As the semester started almost 900 rooms across campus were tripled. According to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts Sanitation Code, Regulation 11, Space and Use, 180 square feet of usable space, excluding closet space is required for the occupancy of three people. A large number of rooms are well below this limit, notably Van Meter, where some rooms measure 134 square feet. At the University where one would expect the educational environment to be conserved, we find three people living in one room with one desk and one bureau. It would seem that the institution has lost all sense of human ecology, and is setting priorities on a basis of its own efficiency, rather than on the needs of the individuals who live in it.

Thousands and thousands of students went to registration to pick up their schedules only to find they had been cut out of one, two, three, four and sometimes even five of the courses for which they had pre-registered. The full ramifications of the course shortage are yet to be felt.

The actions of the legislature and the University administration have also affected students whose University education depended on financial support from the state. Large numbers of student loans and scholarships have been cut and additionally salaries of residence hall counselors have been cut in half for the coming year.

All these problems in housing space, course scheduling, and financial aid are very recent, and are largely a result of the insufficient funds.

Aside from these immediate issues, however, there are several more longstanding problems. The University has a history of showing disregard for both the internal lives of individual students, and for the external conditions of the world that lies outside the University. To give just a few examples: (1) University education operates under the yoke of an antiquated course requirement system within which students have little or no choice in the selection of over half of the courses they take. Requirements remove the only defense the student has against bad teaching - the elective system. Learning and retention takes place only when the student is actively self-directing his education, not being force-fed. (2) The University, by excluding students from decisions on hiring faculty, continues to recruit teachers who meet criteria as researchers, writers, and competent professionals, but who in many cases fail miserably as teachers. (3) The University grading system guarantees competitiveness amongst students rather than cooperation. Learning is rarely an individual event - it is more soundly based in the shared experience, something made difficult to impossible in a competitive environment. (4) The University is rapidly becoming a mass group and bringing along with it all the illnesses of masses. Individual alienation, a sense of powerlessness and eventual anomie must be dealt with. It is possible for people to interact, to identify, to feel a sense of belonging, to be effective, visible members of a community, if we can reduce the massness into smaller student centered communities, but this is not being done. (5) While it is recognized that no real learning takes place unless a student's feelings are engaged as well as his intellect, teaching continues solely on an intellectual plane, entirely disregarding the emotional side of the student. (6) The University, by not incorporating into the curriculum opportunities for students to act constructively as agents of social change is ignoring student's widespread concern for the reform of the larger society. (7) At the root of all of these problems is the basic exclusion of students from policy making and decision making.

Students no longer believe that the University is capable of rising to meet these issues. Therefore they have joined together to create a model of what a University ought to be. Students from all over campus have organized and begun construction of a Free University City. The most important aspect of Free University City is that it is a constructive action.

Scholarships Available For Studying in Europe

By NELSON SIGELMAN
Staff Reporter

How would you like to go to France or possibly England? "No," you say, "can't afford it." Well, for a great many UMass students who have both a good academic record and the initiative, the cost could be either nothing or little more than it costs to attend the University. The opportunities exist but students are either unaware of them or feel they haven't got a chance.

One of the best ways for this year's seniors or graduate students to study or to do research next year in Latin America, Asia or Europe is with a Fulbright-Hays scholarship. This scholarship covers everything from tuition and international travel to living costs. A student should have either a B.A. or M.A. or the equivalent and at least a B average.

The Fulbright-Hays scholarship is a wonderful chance for outstanding UMass students to study in a foreign country. Interested students should contact Prof. Greenbaum, room 636 Herter Hall (50 643). There is an October 1st deadline.

There are also many other chances for both graduate and undergraduate students to study abroad; indeed there are so many that it would be hard to give information on them all. In addition to numerous scholarships for studying abroad that the government offers, there are scholarships offered by foreign governments. UMass has summer and academic year programs which enable students to study in Madrid, Spain; Bologna, Italy; Pau, France and Oxford, England.

On Oct. 9th at the School of Business Administration, the Mortar Board sponsors a program in which students who have traveled abroad will speak. In addition to attending the meeting, students should contact Mrs. Burn, Director of International Programs, Whitmore (52710). Mrs. Burn would like to see every student at least travel abroad and she can direct them as to how to accomplish this for as small a cost as possible. She also has information on Marshall and Rhodes scholarships.

Students Read Prayer in New Jersey High School

NETCONG, N.J. (AP) - High school pupils in this rural community were read a prayer from the Congressional Record Tuesday despite the 1965 U.S. Supreme Court ban on prayer in public schools.

The brief passage, read by the principal to about 300 pupils who voluntarily assembled in the gymnasium of Netcong High School prior to the start of classes, was taken from the Record of Aug. 6, 1969. It had been delivered in the Senate by Rev. Edward L. R. Elson, Senate chaplain and read in part:

"Eternal Father - may Thy Spirit which is eternal be within us to refresh us . . ."

It was the first time a prayer was read in Netcong public schools since the high court's ruling that prayer in public schools was unconstitutional.

School Supt. Joseph Stracco declined to term the passage a prayer, calling it instead a "message to Congress." He said prayers from the Record also would be used in Netcong's elementary school starting Wednesday.

The reading was part of a five-minute meditation period authorized by the school board last week.

"It is not the intent of the board to use this as a method of circumventing the ruling of the Supreme Court," he said.

He said the board did not take the attitude that "if Congress have prayers read, so can we." Stracco said the Record was selected because nothing "would be better than a public document."

Palmer Stracco, board president, said he did not see how anyone could find fault with the reading in public school of a published public record of Congress.

The New Jersey chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union - ACLU - said it would file a Superior Court suit to halt the readings.

We Have "Soul" Declares British Political Campaign

LONDON (AP) - "Soul", that catchword from pop music and American Negro speech, is making the scene in Britain's usually staid politics.

It's the keynote of a $240,000 advertising campaign aimed at stirring up support for Prime Minister Harold Wilson's Labor party. The full slogan, "Labor's Got Life and Soul," is appearing in full-page ads.

"The government has been coming under attack, and worse, there is growing apathy and disappointment among our own supporters," confided a party idea man. "We want to underline the government's very considerable achievements. By using the word 'soul,' we mean to emphasize that the government genuinely cares about people."

British cartoonists, however, have gleefully seized on other aspects of the slogan. The Guardian showed Wilson strumming a banjo and leading a jazz band singing "I got soul, you got soul, all Labor's children got soul." The New Statesman protrayed the Labor leader, bludgeon in hand, beside the party's corpse, with a wraithlike soul emerging from the cadaver.

MLK Council Approves Committee on Poverty

At its meeting of August 7th, the Board of Directors of the Martin Luther King Council voted to approve the formation of a new working committee, called the Committee on Poverty.

According to a prospectus drafted by George Child and Ken Mosakowski, two active members of the King Council's Board of Directors, the Committee's purpose for existence will be twofold. First: ' to disseminate specific factual information concerning poverty in the United States and its tragic byproducts --malnutrition, overpopulation, exploitation, political impotence.'

A second function of the Committee on Poverty will be "to collect funds, clothing, food, and other materials to provide immediate tangible assistance to those areas of the nation which are most urgently in need.'

In this phase of its work, the Committee "will renew intensively the Drive to Alleviate Malnutrition at least once each academic year, covering at minimum the University campus and the town of Amherst." Child and Mosakowski plan to resume the Drive before mid-October. They also hope to organize a large-scale food and clothing drive for the poor between Thanksgiving and Christmas.

Several individuals have already indicated an interest in serving on the newly-formed committee. Anyone sincerely willing to contribute his time and effort toward helping the poor is welcome to attend the first open meeting of the Committee on Poverty, Thursday, 10 p.m. Student Union (room location to be announced).

Further information may be obtained from George Child or Ken Masakowski at the Martin Luther King Council office, 207 Hampshire House, 545-0648 or 545-0649.

The fewer the better.

How many tampons do you use? Maybe you ought to try MEDS tampons. MEDS are so absorbent you'll probably use fewer of them. Fewer to change. Fewer trips to the Powder Room. Fewer "excuse me's."

The fewer the better. MEDS are made differently. That's why. They're made with soft absorbent rayon.

First, there's a gentle rayon cover. Then a layer of rayon fibers that absorb quickly. Then another layer of fine rayon storage fibers that absorb steadily. And, in the center, a cushioned layer that holds, and holds some more.

Can you imagine? Some tampons are just chunks of cotton. No wonder you probably need more of them.

This month try MEDS. They come in regular or super, with a soft polyethylene applicator.

See how much better fewer tampons can be.

Real Problems Lurk Behind University Unrest

The Federal government has been looking into the possibility of applying provisions of national anti-riot legislation to student activists and faculty members involved in campus disorders. It has even been suggested that "detention camps" may be necessary, although this idea seems to have died in limbo.

For some time now violent activities by extremists, both of the right-wing and left-wing variety, have concerned local, state and federal law enforcement authorities. Fanatic vigilante-type organizations have injected themselves into racial and student disputes to fan the flames of disorder. They have been aided in this by the action-reaction cycle involving the kind of violence witnessed at the Chicago convention of 1968 and condemned by one of the task forces of the President's Commission on Violence.

THE CAUSES of student unrest go deeper, however, than the usual rhetoric about take-overs of buildings, etc., would indicate. From the standpoint of many academicians dedicated to the proposition that the university must remain an independent center of learning, the involvement of the "military-industrial complex" on the boards of trustees of many universities represents an unwarranted intrusion into campus affairs.

Campus activists critizing the influence of businessmen and government officials on curricula and course content as expressed in certain institutes and schools associated with big busines and government contracts believe that such ties should be severed in order to allow for a different thrust.

Some of them would like to substitute a different guiding philosophy for that of free enterprise and the "welfare-welfare state". In this struggle they have come into conflict with both the established power structures of the society and the police.

The history of universities in Europe indicates that one of the most jealously guarded prerogatives of academicians through the ages has been independence of the "gown" from the "town." Town and gown fights are nothing new when one considers conflicts between academes of the University of Paris, Oxford, Cambridge, etc., and the guiding forces of the communities around them.

UNIVERSITIES HAD to free themselves from both state and church interventions. The result in some cases was the right of asylum. Of course, teachers and students from different institutions of learning continued to play a role in society in general; but they guarded their "academic freedom" with a passionate dedication outdone only by those religious apostles who felt called upon to evacuate their communities from the societies in which they could not live in freedom to the New World.

The two, religious and academic forces, combined in the original Harvard Corporation which represents one of the first of the great institutions of learning in this country. Through its history and that of other similar colleges and universities academicians have striven to avoid the pitfalls of too close an association with power elites of the surrounding society while they attempted to contribute to the well-being of the larger community by turning out generations of dedicated citizens.

What then has happened to alter the structure of universities in this country to the extent that the influence of military contracts and business interests has provoked violent reaction?

First of all, the importance of fund-raising cannot be overstressed in assessing the motives of university administrators bent on procuring the wherewithal for expansion. Some institutes were founded for the specific purpose of loosening funds from certain business interests and government.

BEARING THIS in mind, it becomes understandable why a sceptical attitude toward "strings attached" to funds has grown up. In a democracy it could be expected that the trustees of public funds would feel compelled to supervise their expenditure.

The loyalty oath issue was one question which brought into sharp focus possible conflicts between the academic community and the society which university administrators called on to support it.

The seeds of conflict were sown in this clash of views on how far control by the appropriating authorities should reach. Since the appetite for government funds has increased in view of the rising costs of education, the discussion about where the line between academic freedom and accountability should be drawn was bound to become more intense.

Added to this syndrome are the personnel problems involved in selecting "trusted individuals" in the universities who can communicate effectively with financial interests and government officials.

Faculty members in many universities look with envy on the prerogatives of administrators, including expense accounts, privileged office space, etc. While in the universities of old the positions of honor at ceremonies were filled by leading scholars and scientists, administrators with "connections" take front rows in the government-business oriented American school.

THOUGH THE UNIVERSITY cannot separate itself from the community surrounding it, there is a difference between "involvement," as represented by social action programs of one variety or another, and "dependence." What some campus activists who criticize over-involvement of the universities with power structures fail to realize is that their kind of participation in the larger society may bring about an even greater dependence on outside pressure groups.

The truly free university sees itself not as a reflection of surrounding force, but as a "molder". In exorcising its critical function it keeps the society on its toes. At the same time, the ordinary responsibilities of citizenship devolve on academicians as on anyone else.

The problem is one of disentanglement from interests which threaten to entrap people's minds by making the university a tool for ulterior purposes. The primary responsibility for this devolves on the administrators who invited outside interests in to begin with; at stake is the well-being of society itself.

Direct subsidies "without" strings attached may be the only solution. Further intervention would only aggravate the crisis. (Reprinted from the Boston Herald Traveler)

THE STUDENT UNION IS OPEN 24 HOURS DAILY

Court Decides Removal of Art is Denial of Rights

By LOUIS DIMONACO
Monday Issue Editor

Charles Close, former UMass art professor, has won his legal fight against the UMass administration, it was disclosed Tuesday in Boston by Federal District Court Judge D. J. Ford. Close was represented by UMass Business Law Professor Isidore Silver.

"It is unfortunate when the administration takes it upon itself to enter the Student Union and censor art. My work is considered porngographic by the administration. The Art Department and I do not consider the show pornographic, and we are more or less experts on the subject," Charles Close made this comment when, in January, 1967, UMass administrative officials decided to remove his exhibit from the Student Union.

According to the official University statement at the time the exhibit was closed because of the "theft of one item, telephone threats of damage to the collection and complaints from students faculty members and the general public concerning the appropriateness for the display in a main public hallway of the Student Union."

Subsequently Close decided to file suit against the University, strictly for the purpose of determining who was right in this case. It was not a question of money.

It was disclosed Tuesday that the United States District Court in Boston decided in favor of the plaintiff, Charles Close. Judge D. J. Ford said, "the removal of the plaintiff's paintings from exhibition was a denial of his right of freedom of expression in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment as it incorporates the First Amendment."

As early as the spring of 1966 Professor Norton, the chairman of the UMass Art Department asked Close, then an art instructor, if he would like to schedule an exhibition of his work in the Student Union. Close consented and his works were to go on display from January 8 to the 31, 1967. The exhibition consisted of 31 pieces many of which showed nude or partially nude figures.

Shortly after Close set up his paintings there were complaints made to University officials, anonymous threats to damage the paintings and the theft of one piece.

At a meeting of UMass officials on January 12, it was decided that the exhibition should be removed, and that evening UMass Secretary Robert McCartney ordered them removed.

According to Dr. Norton, neither he nor Close were notified that the paintings were being removed or to where they were being taken. Close said that he did not know where his paintings were for approximately a day and a half. They were estimated to be worth $8,000.

Judge Ford decided the "expression of plaintiff's thoughts through the medium of his paintings and the exhibition of them is a form of 'speech' within the protection of the Fourteenth Amendment as it incorporates the First Amendment... Plaintiff had fully complied with the procedure for scheduling a time for his exhibition and the works had been placed on display... Having chosen to permit and even to encourage expression in the form of exhibitions of art, the University cannot by arbitrary or discriminatory action bar Plaintiff from exhibiting his work."

PROFESSOR ISIDORE SILVER

In his verdict, Judge Ford went on to say, "There was nothing in the evidence to show that the continuance of the exhibition for the scheduled period would have in any way resulted in any substantial interference with the legitimate interest of the University. At most the exhibition seems to have displeased some persons who saw it, and to have given rise to some lively discussion."

One of the most controversial paintings of the Close exhibit was one called "Bobby Dylan" depicting a nude folksinger. Close reacted to the criticism of the painting. "It seems funny to me that the use of exposed male genitalia has helped certain people who wish to read that sort of thing into it to assume that a reference to homosexuality was intended. This is of course not the case.

"I do not feel that this painting is by any means one of the most successful works in the show, but no one has questioned me as to how well it was painted. The only criticism I've received is on the nature of subject matter and I don't feel I have to defend it on that level."

The Close exhibit was by no means the first at UMass to be terminated by the administration because of the "inappropriateness" of subject matter. The Contemporary Print Series, a show of Pop and Op art was also taken down in the previous year.

At the time, the students of the UMass Art Department and THE COLLEGIAN sponsored a petition supporting the Art Department's refusal to remove the exhibit and condemning the University's action.

Ironically, Pres. Lederle, in response to the controversy over the reading of Huckleberry Finn at UMass-Boston, prior to the Close incident, said that the banning of such a work "reflected a misinterpretation of the university's principles...This is against the principle of non-censorship in a free-university."

But, in an official policy statement issued by the University Trustees on academic freedom, May 11, 1964, it stated that "As a man of learning and a member of the professional staff of the University, he (the teacher) must remember that the public may judge his profession and the University by his utterances. Hence, he must at all times be accurate, exercise appropriate restraint, and show respect for the opinions of others.

CHARLES CLOSE
Former Art Professor wins legal fight.

"The teacher is entitled to freedom in the classroom in discussing his subject, but he should be careful not to introduce into his teaching controversial matter which has no relation to his subject."

After more than two years the District Court of Massachusetts and Judge Ford have decided in favor of Close and an order will be issued directing the University officials to permit Close to reinstate his paintings again for the number of days of the time originally scheduled for the exhibition in 1967. Close filed suit for the purpose of determining who was right in this case. It is undecided whether he will exhibit his paintings again. Close is now teaching art in New York.

Alaska Faces a Pleasent Chore; How to Spend 900 Million Dollars

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) Alaska's 280,000 residents faced a pleasant problem Thursday: How to spend the $900 million proceeds from the largest oil lease sale in U.S. History.

The money was bid Wednesday in Anchorage by the world's oil giants for a share of the potential oil bonanza on Alaska's frozen North Slope.

By Thursday the money had been flown by chartered jet to banks in New York and Chicago to draw interest estimated by state officials at close to $45,000 daily.

The money will be invested in U.S. Treasury securities. The state will use the interest and the borrowing power to build roads, schools, medical facilities and airports, lure industry and bolster its tourist, lumber and fishing industries.

The state also may repeal its income tax and possibly other taxes to make living in this vast, usually frigid state more attractive.

Bids were taken on 179 tracts, totaling 450,858 acres.

Everyone in Alaska had his own idea about how the money should be used.

"We shouldn't rush to follow any idea," said Rep. Bill Ray of Juneau, chairman of the state House Finance Committee. "There should be a cooling off period, at least until the legislature meets in January."

Gov. Keith Miller has set up several study committees to consider which of the state's needs should be met first.

State Sen. Vance Phillips, Anchorage Republican, is a leader in the move to repeal the income tax.

"That might be the only chance the people get to share in this money," he said. "I don't think state government should grow just because we have money."

Most politicians agreed that an over-all reassessment of state goals and programs in needed.

State officials had hoped for $1 billion from the lease sale, but they weren't disappointed that the total fell $100 million short.

"The total is great," said Thomas E. Kelly, state commissioner of natural resources. "There is no disappointment."

Kelly said if the money is wisely invested the interest "should be sufficient to take care of the needs and services of the people."

"It would be a horrible mistake to spend the money unwisely - for instance, to appropriate it to retire the state's bonded indebtedness," he said.

"It is a windfall and we must consider it that. If we're smart and prudent it will last for generations."

The oil money is only part of the bonanza to the state. It still gets 12-1/2 per cent royalty on the oil taken out of its soil.

And there are already economic spinoffs to the oil boom. Tandy Industries of Tulsa, Okla., has announced plans to build a "21st Century City" outside Anchorage. It will be enclosed and climate controlled through malls, will cost $800 million and house 20,000 persons. The central building will be an Alaskan Petroleum Center, Tandy officials said.

The University of Massachusetts Chorale is stationing a table in the Student Union lobby all this week in its drive for patrons of the Chorale's European tour. Hampshire College, Smith To Sponsor Dance Workshop Hampshire College and Smith College will join this month in sponsoring a workship and lecture by Mrs. Mary Whitehouse, a member of the Dance Faculty at UCLA. Mrs. Whitehouse's work with "movement in depth" comes out of a wide background of professional dance training, teaching, and performing, as well as studies in analytical psychology in Los Angeles and at the C. G. Jung Institute in Zurich, Switzerland.

On Friday, September 26, at 2:00 p.m., Mrs. Whitehouse will offer a lecture on "The Tao of the Body: Movement in Depth." The lecture will be open to the public of the Five College Community, and will be given in the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre, Center for the Performing Arts, Smith College.

On September 27 and 28, Saturday and Sunday, Mrs. Whitehouse will give a workship for a small Five College group, admission by invitation only.

As a consultant to Hampshire College's School of Humanities and Arts, Mary Whitehouse has been influential in the shaping of Hampshire's current plans for program in dance and human movement. Fracis D. Smith, the Dean of the School of Humanities and Arts has said:

"The view. . .that will inform Hampshire's program is one that seeks to draw the life of the body into expressive and disciplined interplay with the life of the mind. The rationale for such a view can be simply sketched. Our patterns of learning and growth become more cerebral, more verbal, as we pass from childhood through adolescence. It is, to some degree, a natural progression. But it the body loses its capacity for expression, the person is diminished. The sophistication of the body no longer keeps pace with that of the mind. . .(and) there is lost an important dimension of experience, for much of our lives--love, joy, anger, grief, fear--is naturally expressed by our bodies."

Dean Smith has expressed a particular hope that those who are skeptical or hostile to such sensuous concerns in liberal arts programs will hear Mrs. Wiitehouse's talk.

Mary Whitehouse is a graduate of Wellesley College and holds a Professional Diploma from the Wigman Central Institute, Dresden, Germany. She is a charter member of the American Dance Therapy Association. Her work with movement therapy--in her phrase, "movement in depth" -- has grown through dance experience with the Jooss Ballet School, Bennington Summer School, the Martha Graham School and others; through her own dance workshop in Boston and college teaching in the East and on the West Coast. Mrs. Whitehouse's studies in analytical psychology in this country and abroad, combined with personal depth analysis, influenced her development of a psychosomatic approach to personality.

What's a mobile machinability laboratory? It's a collection of equipment that travels around on a trailer, demonstrating new machine technologies. The laboratory originates at the University of Wisconsin and was presented recently in five appearances in Massachusetts by Comtech, the Commonwealth Technical Resources Service at the University of Massachusetts School of Engineering.

The lab is shown in a presentation at the University. Closed-circuit TV helps the group view the demonstration.

INSIDE UMASS SPORTS

Hansen, Semino Voted Diamond Co-Captains

BY PETER PASCARELLI
Sports Editor

When you're on top, you have to work that much harder to stay there. At least that must be the philosophy of the 5th ranked nationally UMass baseball team as they begin fall practice sessions this week. The Redmen nine will work out from now until October 11, playing in addition to intrasquad scrimmages, informal practice games with Mass. Bay Community, New Haven College, Springfield College, Vermont, and University of Hartford.

There are 50 candidates for the varsity and junior varsity and 50 freshmen candidates. They will be led by the recently elected co-captains for the 1970 diamons season, Tom Semino and Bob Hansen.

Semino, only a junior, was a steady second baseman for the New England champions, while posting a .314 batting mark, and slugging six home runs and knocking in 25 lruns.

Hansen, a second team all-American in left field, batted ..350, hit seven homers and drove in 37 runs. Hansen is a senior and was drafted by the Seattle Pilots.

Coach Dick Bergquist has found these fall sessions valuable for a twofold reason. One, most importantly, says Bergquist is "It enables us to select our team for next spring, and gives me an edge when next spring begins in that I don't have to waste time selecting a team but go right into the season.

"Secondly, the fall practices give any kid at UMass the chance to see how well he can play baseball. These are open tryouts and anyone has a chance to make the team."

Bergquist, of course, has some idea of who will play this spring, and through fall practices, he hopes to "find some new combinations while getting the fellows to play together. We have some big holes to fill."

The UMass coach, who is beginning the third year of formal fall baseball, will be assisted by former UMass all Yankee Conference third baseman, Tony Williams, who will handle the freshmen, and newly-appointed basketball and baseball assistant Ray Wilson, who will handle the junior varsity.

The above-mentioned Ray Wilson, was appointed this summer to assist in basketball and baseball. Wilson is a graduate of Boston University where he was a basketball and baseball star. He played one year at B.U. with UMass hoop coach Jack Leaman

Wilson who is the first black coach at UMass, was previously coach at Roosevelt High School, on Long Island, N.Y., where he was one of the most successful New York basketball coaches. Among his Roosevelt products, is one Julius Erving.

Former UMass great Milt Morin, who was expected to miss most of the coming N.F.L. season with a back injury, will be activated by the Cleveland Browns this week and will be ready for the Browns opener with Philadelphia. Morin, finished fast last year, ranks with the best at his tight end spot

Cautious Booters Set for Test

By STEVE SHAMBAN

"Don't make any predictions." Peter Broaca is forced to use it when assessing his squad's chances for the coming season.

This is an old line that reeks of cliche but UMass soccer coach

1968 was a disastrous year for (4-6-1) for the Redmen but Broaca is seeking a rebound and a note of cautious optimism cannot help but be noticed in his outlook as the team prepares for Saturday's College Jamboree at Western New England College.

"We look good so far, but all we've had are a lot of practices so it's really hard to say how we'll do. However, I have no complaints."

The outlook for 1969 appears to promise improvement as eight lettermen return along with several sophs up from last year's undefeated freshman team.

Heading the list of lettermen are halfback Rick Matuszczak, forward Duane Brown and goalie Tom Malone. Matuszczak and Brown are players of proven quality while Malone will most likely have the goal chores all to himself. Broaca singled these three in particular for praise.

Five sophs are virtually assured of starting berths. They are halfbacks Joe Cerniawski, Augie Calheno and Lindo Alves and fullbacks Dick McGarron and Gary Hart.

The schedule is not an easy one however and this, coupled with the unexpected loss of several players help to explain Broaca's cautious approach.

In the Yankee Conference, where UMass last year compiled a 2-3 mark, "URI, Vermont and UConn are the teams to beat." All three defeated the Redmen a year ago and Broaca says that "If we're going to win conference, we'll have to beat them while avoiding injuries to our own squad."

In addition, Springfield College and Trinity do not lighten the load. Springfield was 13-0 and New England small college champ and Trinity made it to the NCAA playoffs. Nothing more need be said.

The aforementioned jamboree will feature, in addition to UMass and WNEC, Westfield State and AIC. Each team plays three 30 minute periods.

This is UMass' third appearance in the jamboree and Broaca feels that it offers good preparation for the regular season. Last year the Redmen came out 2-0-1 in their three periods of play.

Following Saturday's action, Broaca will have one more week to work out the kinks for the September 27 opener at Maine. Needless to say, no predictions will be made.

Cubs Finally Win, Top Expos, 5-4

MONTREAL (AP) - Home runs by veteran Billy Williams and 19-year-old Oscar Gamble helped the Chicago Cubs break their slide last night with a 5-4 victory over Montreal.

The Cubs had lost three games in a row and 11 of their last 12. They trail New York by four games in the National League East pending the outcome of the Mets night game at St. Louis.

Williams hit his 18th home run of the season in the first inning following Glenn Beckert's one-out single but it was rookie Gamble's first major league homer in the third that snapped a 2-2 tie and put the Cubs in front to stay.

The first three Chicago runs came off loser Jerry Robertson, 5-14, but the two decisive runs came in the fifth against reliever Dan McGinn.

Williams opened the fifth with an infield hit and McGinn bobbled Willie Smith's bunt for an error. Ron Santo singled for one run and after Jim Hickman hit into a double play, Paul Popovich singled for what proved to be the winning run.

Right-hander Bill Hands, 18-13 struggled through several Montreal threats and was replaced by Phil Regan with one out in the eighth when he walked Kevin Collins following a walk to Ron Fairly and Mack Jones' 22nd homer, which cut the Cubs' lead to 5-4.

The Expos scored their first two runs in the bottom of the first to tie the game. With one out, Gary Sutherland singled and Rusty Staub walked, they moved up on Fairly's infield out and Jones was purposely passed, filling the bases.

Bosox Burn as Hawk Sings, 5-2

BOSTON (AP) - Ken Harrelson smashed a three-run homer in the eighth inning last night snapping a 2-2 tie and leading the Cleveland Indians past his old Boston Red Sox teammates, 5-2.

Jose Cardenal singled and stole second, and Duke Sims was walked intentionally to set the stage for the Hawk, who cracked Jim Lonborg's first pitch into the left field screen for his 29th circuit clout of the year.

The flamboyant Harrelson, a big favorite here last year before being traded to the Indians in a controversial deal last April, received a standing ovation from the crowd of 16,597 as he circled the bases and was cheered loudly again as he trotted out to right field waving his arm in a victory sign at the end of the inning. The homer was Harrelson's third against the Red Sox this year and his first in Fenway Park.

Earlier Jose Cardenal of Cleveland hit his 10th homer to open the scoring in the third inning and Rico Petrocelli slammed his 39th for Boston to tie the score in the seventh just before Harrelson's climatic blast.

Petrocelli's towering shot high into the left field screen tied the American League record for most home runs in a season by a shortstop, set by Vern Stephens, also with the Red Sox, in 1949.

Stan Williams went all the way on the mound for the Indians.

The only other run he gave up came in the fifth when Tony Conigliaro doubled and scored on an error.

Cleveland scored its second run in the sixth on a double by Baker followed by a single by Sims.

The victory hiked Williams' record to 6-12, while Lonborg, who took the loss, is now 7-11.

Bad News: Hodge Out

BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Bruins' high scoring right winger, Kenny Hodge, underwent emergency surgery for appendicitis yesterday and will be out of action 4-6 weeks.

A team spokesman said the 25-year-old Hodge became ill Monday night at London, Ontario, where the Bruins are in practice sessions, and the operation was performed at London's Victoria Hospital.

Hodge, of Toronto, scored 45 goals last season, his second with the Bruins since he was acquired in the trade with Chicago that brought Phil Esposito and Fred Stanfield.

Scott to Stay at UNC

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. (AP) - The University of North Carolina yesterday denied reports that basketball star Charlie Scott had been offered a professional contract and said he would play for the Tar Heels again this year.

The University's statement was issued by Coach Dean Smith after he met with Scott, U.S. Olympic team player last year.

The report, originated by Durham television station sportscaster Don Shea Monday night, said Scott had been offered a three-year $600,000 contract by the Chicago Bulls of the National Basketball Association.

After his meeting with Scott, Smith said, "I am convinced that the Chicago Bulls have not entertained any thought of signing any player out of college nor have they made any offer to Charlie Scott. It was a rumor among many rumors during this NBA-ABA basketball war."

All men's tug 'o war and tennis singles entries are due in the Intramural Office in Boyden by 5 p.m. today.

AND THEY'RE OFF! - Contestants in last year's intramural cross country race break from starting line. Dick Meyer (TSP) was the campus winner. Entries for this year's 1 7/8 mile race around the stadium are due in Boyden by October 1. Tentative date for the competition is set for October 8.

Convocation Speakers Stress University Cooperation

Lederle Calls for Understanding Within Educational Community

By BILL DICKINSON
Senior Reporter

President John W. Lederle yesterday called on students, faculty members and administrators to make UMass a school with "soul".

Addressing some 1,000 persons attending the Opening Convocation in the Student Union ballroom, Lederle said, "Education, which has traditionally led man in his evolutionary path to a higher degree of civilization, today runs the very real risk of becoming simply one more fossilized monolith in an already overstructured, materialistic society."

Presiding at the ceremony was Provost Oswald Tippo who lead the processional of robed academics.

Also, included in the program was a speech by Student Senate President Bruce Balboni and the presentation of the Distinguished Teacher awards.

Lederle, who is leaving his post in June, laid the blame for the "dehumanizing trends" in the lap of the entire university community.

"We have our administrative bureaucrats. And we have out faculty careerists. And we have our selfish thoughtless uninvolved students," he said.

On the whole, Lederle felt that the University has maintained its humanity, but has no guarantee against losing it.

"In our case it appears that if we become dehumanized we will do so because of the same combination of elements which is at work in society at large. The combination is that of bigness and acceleration. The combination of these two phenomena is probably at the root of every major social ill which confronts our nation and our world today," he said.

Lederle explained, "The University of Massachusetts has become big, fast."

He said this combination has caused most of the frustration and tension in the University community.

"As a result," he explained, "Students are tempted to either flail out in anger at the 'system' or else to withdraw within themselves. Faculty are tempted to forget that they have the awesome opportunity of inspiring their students--there is so much pressure to concentrate only on those areas which forward their professional careers. Administrators, frustrated by financial stringincies, are tempted to put in their eight hours, to maintain the status quo, rather than play more creative and meaningful a role in this university community."

Too often, he said, the response to these pressures in society and education has been "rigit structuralization with resultant dehumanization."

Lederle continued, "We already have the means at the University of Massachusetts to make a courageous response to the challenges of size and pace which confront us."

He cited formal two-way channels of communications on campus. But he warned, "these channels will remain mere mechanical devices unless we use them creatively."

Lederle, besides warning administrators to "clean their own shops" and the faculty to communicate with students, touched on student revolt.

"I think that we ought to realize that revolution is sometimes necessary for evolution," he said.

"We are the beneficiaries (or the victims depending upon how one looks at it) of an industrial revolution...But a revolution without positive goals is no revolution at all. It is more accurately a regression - a regression through

King Council Plans Vietnam Moratorium

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

'We have one demand, relatively simple, and that is the immediate withdrawal of all U. S. troops from Vietnam." These were among the opening remarks of Gil Salk as he addressed a general meeting of the Martin Luther King Social Action Council last night on a proposed Oct. 15 Vietnam Moratorium.

Approximately 75 students listened on as Salk, a spokesman for MLK, described the upcoming October action as a "massive movement" across the nation to inform President Nixon and his advisers that 'business cannot go on as usual during war", and that they must stop the war immediately. Tentative plans also call for a two day National Moratorium in November and a three day one in December if necessary, stated Salk.

The Martin Luther King Social Action Council will coordinate activities on the UMass campus on Oct. 15 to include mainly a rally in the early morning followed by a march to Amherst and door to door confrontation with town citizens. Salk described this later move as "missionary" in nature with the primary goal of informing citizens the "People are dying, some Americans.' "We want those guys home, and stop being killed," he added.

In addition to this door to door campaign Salk also stated that MLK is calling for the University to cancel all classes for that day and for all area merchants and workers to stop work and business also. And on Oct. 2 there is planned a teach in on the war followed by a door to door campaign in all campus dorms.

Salk termed the October venture as "relatively small in nature" to be used mainly as a "picture of how much strength we will have." He stated that the Moratorium action will at first probably result in more 'token withdrawal" of troops from Vietnam.

The MLK meeting also discussed to a much lesser extent such programs as, Women's Liberation, Poverty in America, another Night of Inquiry, Research, Dorm Organizing and NES (Northern Educational Service) tutoring. A call for another political faction on campus, Young People's Socialist League, was made and also an economic boycott of Amherst businesses and possible rent strike.

Salk spoke on the philosophy of the MLK Council stating that it is interested in "people as human beings, 'and 'freedom of people."

He described it as a group "engaged in the struggle for self-determination of all men. As such it has a broad concern with the national and international problems of war, racism, and poverty. As a local group it is more specifically concerned with the problem of self-determination of members of the University community."

The published deadline for the last day for undergraduate students to add a course, or drop a course without record, is Monday, September 22. Since a number of faculty and students will not be present on campus this date, this deadline has been extended to Tuesday, September 23.--Ralph D. Jones, Undergraduate Registrar.

Senate President Balboni Appeals For Student Decision Making

By MARK SILVERMAN
News Editor

"Students are impatient for long-awaited changes, both social and academic, and we are dissatisfied with our role in the various decision making bodies."

With this, Student Senate President Bruce Balboni told a convocaton audience of 1,000 yesterday that real progress can only be achieved at UMass by a "sincere spirit of cooperation and mutual respect amongst this tri-partite community."

'As a student government,' he said, "we expect to be brought in on every proposal at the outset and not at a time when all we can do is approve or reject the final decision, as appears to be the case in the choice of the new University president."

The Senate President also scored the Governor's proposal to include one student on the University's Board of Trustees, saying that the plan was merely "tokenism."

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

WASHINGTON (AP) - A proposal to abolish the Electoral College in favor of direct popular election of the president survived a crucial House test Wednesday.

Supporters of the proposed constitutional amendment defeated a substitute plan that would have kept the electoral vote system but awarded the votes on the basis of the popular vote in congressional districts.

The vote against the district plan was 192 to 159, indicating there will be a close vote when the issue comes up for final passage, probably Thursday. It takes a two-thirds majority to pass a constitutional amendment and 159 votes against direct election at that time would be enough to kill it.

However, several members who voted for the district plan have said they would support direct election as a second choice and its supporters think there will be enough switches to put their plan over.

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon, noting the rising cost of living the past five years, said Wednesday he would ask Congress next week to authorize a 10 per cent across-the-board increase in Social Security payments April 1.

At almost the same time, Rep. Jacob H. Gilbert, D-N.Y., introduced what he called the biggest Social Security proposal ever. It would double by 1974 present Social Security benefits.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) - Diplomatic efforts to settle the Middle East crisis mounted Wednesday in advance of President Nixon's policy speech to the U.N. General Assembly.

The U.S. State Department announced in Washington that the U.S. and the Soviet governments had agreed to reopen bilateral talks on the Arab-Israeli conflict possibly Thursday afternoon.

Nixon will address the 126-nation assembly Thursday morning. He is expected to launch a vigorous plea for progress both on a Middle East peace plan and disarmament.

BOSTON (AP) - The Executive Council voted 5-3 Wednesday to grant stays of execution for 15 months to four condemned prisoners on death row at Walpole State Prison whose present respites were due to expire in 13 days.

Council Patrick J. McDonough, D-Boston, made the motion to agree with Gov. Francis W. Sargent's request for additional respites through Dec. 31, 1970, to allow time for the U.S. Supreme Court to review the constitutionality of the death penalty.

Student Senate Donates Funds To Free University City Drive

By JOEL FOX
Managing Editor

Meeting for the first time this year, the Student Senate began proceedings by considering three special business motions, the first of which was a request from Tim Ney speaking for the Free University City for financial support for the project.

The City, which is due to start within three days, needed an additional $1600 from the Senate on top of the $400 they received from the Executive Council of the Senate, to begin operations. The breakdown of the money would be: $500 for electricity for the City, $300 for public relations, $300 to be added to the Exec Council's $400 for building costs, and $500 for transportation of five grad students from the University of Houston who have worked with projects like the UMass proposal and who would aid in the set-up and workings of the UMass City.

Ney, in responding to questions from the Senators said, "What we're trying to do is create something totally separate from the University of Massachusetts." He stated that the new University would continue throughout the year even after the cold weather forced the students from the domes and tents.

Senator Kathy Kennedy, in arguing against the allotment of funds said that if it is a Free University City those participating should pay for it and money should not be taken from the Student Activities Fund which all students contribute to.

The greatest discussion occurred in debating whether $500 should be approved to bring up the help from Texas. However, with Ney stating that these people would be available immediately, whereas others who have the know-how of constructing a Free University system may not be available, and with the UMass project due to begin right away, Senator Rick Verrochi's amendment to strike the $500 was defeated on a voice vote.

The motion to direct the Senate Treasurer, Al Gauthier, to provide the $1600 to the City was then passed by the Senate. By having the money go through the Treasurer, the City does not have to register as an RSO organization to receive Student Activities Tax funds.

Next, the Senate considered and passed unanimously, Senator John Dubois' special business motion that the Board of Trustees approve the report of the Student Activities Committee supporting residence hall visitation, Greenough's Co-ed dorm, and the alcoholic beverage policy which has recently been accepted by a sub-committee of the Board.

In the final special business motion of the meeting, the Senate unanimously censured the administration for lack of foresight concerning triples and overcrowded classes. Mark Brenner, chairman of the Senate's Services Committee who presented the special business also disclosed that students living in triples would receive 33-1/3% refunds in their room bills instead of the 20% figure which had previously been discussed.

Attempting to clean up old business, the Senate started by referring Senator Dan Madden's motion which "expresses a lack of confidence in the actions of the University Administration" during last February's Dow Demonstration, to a sub-committee. Senator Dubois' who suggested that the bill be returned to sub-committee said that he would like to ask President Lederle to speak to the investigating committee and help clear up what happened last February 13. In keeping this old bill alive, the Senate hopes not only to find out why State Police were called last year, but what will happen if a similar situatio n arises in the future.

Commuters to Form Coalition Tonight

In an effort to give commuters a united voice in the University community, a meeting to form an Independent Commuter Coalition has been organized for tonight at 7 in SBA 120.

This move i s a result of the area Government Act passed by the Student Senate last Spring. This act authorizes governments for residence areas and makes provisions for commuters.

The Senate has allocated money to these area governments. The commuter allocation is $4,263 plus a share of the 15% contingency fund of $4,221. If no government is formed by an area, the funds will revert to the Student Senate.

The purpose of tonight's meeting is to see if there is sufficient interest among commuters to warrant the formation of a Coalition. If the air of this meeting is favorable, committees will be established to develop a constitution. After a constitution is drawn up, it will be submitted to commuters and finally the Student Senate for ratification.

Subjects which the Coalition hopes to bring to attention include the campus parking problem, the shuttle bus system, off-campus housing (including a rent control board), and dependent care at the Infirmary.

It is hoped that such a coalition will enable commuters to tackle these problems in much the same manner as other resident area groups.

All commuters are urged to attend this meeting. The future of the Independent Commuter Coalition depends on the turnout at tonight's organizational meeting.

frustration to a lower form of civilization than we have previously attained. We don't need regression at the University of Massachusetts. We need progress - progress in solving our common problems; progress in human relations; progress in the development of humaneness in this community.;;

He said, "If we are to be a community with a 'soul' - if we are to be humane - we must care and we must act from consideration of others."

As the ceremony ended and the recessional was played by the University Band, Gilbert Salk, executive secretary of the Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council, jumped onto the podium and asked the crowd to stay to discuss the "inhumane university."

About 150 stayed for the hour discussion from the audience.

Girl Dances Nude at Trial

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) - Judge Earl Warren Jr. and a jury watched Wednesday as Susanne Marie Haines danced nude at the Pink Pussy Kat bar.

The 22-year-old brunette, charged with indecent exposure, went through her routine while the juke box played "Suzy Q."

Warren, a municipal court judge and son of the former chief justice of the United States, decided the bottomless dancer trial should shift from the courtroom to the bar to see the dances.

Housing Office Gives De-Tripling Procedures

The Housing Office has distributed the following information to students involved in the current housing problem. Students in tripled rooms should note the proper procedure for de-tripling.

All information regarding vacant beds on campus will be reported by telephone to the Housing Office, Room 232 Whitemore, between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. Students wishing to de-triple are asked to go immediately to this office during those same hours.

A priority list for de-tripling rooms will be set up by class in descending order, commencing with seniors. Special cases will be decided on their own merits.

The Housing Office will take full information on each student, including fastest means of communication, by telephone or other means.

As of this date, there are 24 vacancies for men in the Orchard and Northeast areas. Therefore, men may begin to move immediately upon reporting to the housing office.

Upperclassmen are urged to "show the ropes" to the freshmen-perhaps even accompany a freshmen to the Housing Office to initiate the de-tripling procedure.

Government Medical Expert Says:

Present Marijuana Laws Are Unreasonably Stringent

WASHINGTON (AP) - A top government medical expert testified Wednesday that while marijuana can't be given a clean bill of health, penalties for its use should be substantially reduced.

The reason: There is no clearer instance, "in which the punishment for an infraction of the law is more harmful than the law itself."

Dr. Stanley F. Yolles, director of the National Institute of Mental Health, vigorously opposed Justice Department recommendations that marijuana be classified with heroin and LSD and that mandatory jail sentences for its use be continued.

Yolles told a Senate judiciary subcommittee considering changes in the nation's narcotic laws that current penalties for use of marijuana are strict enough to ruin the life of a first-time offender, "with total disregard for medical and scientific evidence of the properties of the drug or its effects."

Marijuana, he said, has, by conservative estimate, been used at least once by at least eight million Americans and possibly as many as 12 million.

Its use is increasing swiftly and, he said, recent surveys of high school students indicate that in many urban and suburban areas, up to 50 percent of students have had some experience with it.

"Can you imagine what would happen to the law enforcement and corrections system of this country if each of these 12 million people had been caught by a policeman when smoking his first marijuana cigarette?" he asked.

Present law provides a mandatory five-year sentence for the first sale of marijuana. Penalties range to 20 years for the first offense and 40 years for a second with no provision for probation or parole.

Two pending bills would retain those provisions but allow for parole and probation.

Pending bills also would retain the present 2-to-10 year first-offense sentence for possession of marijuana. Like the present law, they would allow probation or parole.

"The principle and the effects of mandatory penalties defeats the whole purpose of treatment and rehabilitation of drug users," Yolles said.

"As a result of my professional experience with drug users sentenced by the courts," he said, "I am convinced that the social and psychological damage caused by incarceration is in many cases far greater to the individual and to society than was the offense itself."

New Mount Holyoke President Speaks at Opening Convocation

SOUTH HADLEY, Mass. --"Let us look to our common goals," President David B. Truman urged the Mount Holyoke community Wednesday evening during Convocation ceremonies marking the opening of the College's 133rd year.

It was the first official speech by the new president in what he promises will be "the year of the speech." Mr. Truman, political scientist, author and administrator, began his duties on July 1 and comes to South Hadley from Columbia University where he last served as vice-president and provost.

He praised Mount Holyoke's record of achievement particularly during the past academic year which saw significant change in all areas of the College. "I would challenge anyone to review--the record of last year at Mount Holyoke and not come away from it with a feeling of confidence and admiration."

Two of the most difficult decisions that must be faced by Mount Holyoke in the immediate future, he said, are coeducation and Five-College cooperation. He praised the establishment of a fact-finding committee on coeducation.

On Five-College cooperation he pointed out that "we and our colleagues in the other four institutions--must soon reach a clear understanding of what we want this joint enterprise to look like ten years from now and what we are prepared to pay for it, not so much in dollars as in the relinquishment of independence, which may be more the miser's coin." (The five colleges include Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke, Smith and the University of Massachusetts).

In the area of curriculum and curricula requirements Mr. Truman noted that "we can and should consider extending the wise and sensible decisions that were taken last year."

UCF Appoints Ministry Interns

The United Christian Foundation has appointed Mr. Samuel Johnson and Mr. Donald Cunningham as campus ministry interns for the coming year. The United Christian Foundation coordinates the campus ministry efforts of six major Protestant denominations at the University of Massachusetts. A wide variety of ministries for individuals, groups, and special occasions are carried on by the UCF and all of these activities are fully inclusive of persons of various races, religious backgrounds, and academic standings.

A reception for the new interns will be held Sunday September 21 from 4:00 - 6:00 p.m. at the home of the Rev. and Mrs. Thomas Lindeman at 138 East Pleasant Street.

Mr. Johnson is from Danville, Illinois and attended DePauw University where he majored in Political Science and has completed two years of the Bachelor of Divinity course at Harvard Divinity School. He has worked as a Community Organizer and Assistant Hospital chaplain while in Divinity School. He and his wife Clare are living at the Presidential Apartments.

Mr. Cunningham, originally from Billings, Montana, attended west Virginia Wesleyan and Marshall University in Huntington, West Virginia and graduated this year with a Bachelor of Divinity from Andover Newton Theological School. He has been a program director for the Baptist Student Movement and Christian Campus Centre Community, and has been involved in Civil Rights Study Groups. Mr. Cunningham has had pastorates in West Virginia and Massachusetts. He and his wife Sharon reside at 62 Chestnut Street.

Members of the community who would like to meet the new chaplains are cordially invited to attend the reception on September 21.

Text of the President's Convocation Address

"If I were founding a university" said Stephen Leacock, "I would found first a smoking room; then when I had a little more money in hand I would found a dormitory; then after that, or more probably with it, a decent reading room and a library. After that, if I still had more money that I couldn't use, I would hire a professor and get some textbooks."

I'm afraid that Mr. Leacock's university, thus founded, would encounter rough seas in 1969. "Smoking rooms', whether for the use of tobacco or of more exotic plant-life, are hardly to be encouraged in this day and age. A dormitory would involve Mr. Leacock in seemingly endless problems of 'open house" visitations, coed residences and 'tripling'. A library would mean another gaping, muddy hole on his otherwise verdant campus. And I hardly think that the American Association of University Professors would show much enthusiasm for the appointment of professors as the last and lowest priority.

Still, Leacock's plan does contain a message for us as we begin this academic year. Because at the heart of his rather tongue-in-cheek proposal is the recognition of the fact that a university should be a place where individual human beings meet and talk and interact with one another. A university should have a 'soul''. A university should be humane.

It is obvious that education today is 'big business''. It is obvious that in many places education has lost its "soul" - has lost its humanity. Administrators have become bureaucratic; faculty members have become careerists; students have become violently revolutionary or confused and unsure of their own identity and purpose, or hopelessly apathetic. Education, which has traditionally led man in his evolutionary path to a higher degree of civilization, today runs the very real risk of becoming simply one more fossilized monolith in an already overstructured, materialistic society.

The University of Massachusetts has not been immune to the dehumanizing trend which has been sweeping through education. We have our administrative bureaucrats. And we have our faculty careerists. And we have our selfish, thoughtless, uninvolved students. But I believe that such individuals are still a small minority on this campus. I believe that, by and large, we have managed to preserve our humanity here. We CAN talk to one another. We CAN interact. We CAN recognize our problems and try to work them out. And now, as we begin a year of transition for the entire university system, I believe that we have a golden opportunity to re-examine and reinforce those elements within us - as a society and as individuals - which will help us to keep this university on course as a humane institution.

Recognizing a danger is one thing but understanding the cause of the danger is something else. In our case, it appears that IF we become dehumanized we will do so because of the same combination of elements which is at work in society-at-large. The combination is that of bigness and acceleration. The interaction of these two phenomena is probably at the root of every major social ill which confronts our nation and our world today. It wears many faces and it expresses itself with many complications, but it can be understood, it can be met and it can be handled.

To state our problem as simply as possible, let me put it this way: The University of Massachusetts has become big, fast. As a result, we have long lines to stand in; we have a torn-up campus to navigate; we have foulups and snafu's; we have pressure and tension and irritation. Students are tempted to either flail out in anger at "the system" or else to withdraw within themselves. Faculty are tempted to forget that they have the awesome opportunity of inspiring their students - there is so much pressure to concentrate only on those areas which forward their professional careers. Administrators, frustrated by financial stringencies, are tempted to put in their eight hours, to maintain the status quo, rather than to play a more creative, meaningful role in this university community.

So we are all under this pressure of having become big, fast. And we are all affected by it. Still, we should recognize that there is nothing wrong, per se, with either bigness, or acceleration or the combination of the two. Indeed, much of the progress we have made on this planet stems from the combination of these two qualities. The fact that we ARE big has several very obvious advantages. Our new library is a good example. Only a large instutition like the University of Massachusetts could justify the existence of such a resource for the individual student. And our acceleration in growth has meant that we have been able to admit increasing numbers of Massachusetts young people with high potential to the educational opportunity which IS the University. In fact, although we are grateful to the Governor and the Legislature for the financial and moral support which they have given us during these past years of explosive growth, we still find ourselves in a position of needing to grow even bigger, faster--if we are to meet the demands of the Commonwealth for high quality low cost public higher education.

So the combination of bigness and acceleration is not bad in itself. In truth, it is a fact of life in 1969. The problem comes in our RESPONSES to the challenge which this combination presents to us. Too often the larger society has responded with fear rather than courage. Too often the response has been rigid structuralization with resultant dehumanization. The apparent reactionary conservative trend in many sectors of our nation's life today is a good example of fearful response to challenging problems which have gotten big, fast. We are certainly all concerned with the problems which face our nation and we are equally concerned with society's response to these problems. But we have the same problems in microcosm here on this campus. And if we cannot respond to these challenges with courage in this community of 20,000 students and staff, what possible impact can we have, individually or collectively, on a society of two hundred million?

We already have the means at the University of Massachusetts to make a courageous response to the challenges of size and pace which confront us. We have formal channels for two-way communication so that problems may be analyzed, defined and acted upon. But these channels will remain mere mechanical devices unless we use them creatively. We have been able to solve some extremely difficult dilemmas in the past few years--primarily because those segments of the university involved in the problems used the existing channels creatively and in good faith. But we still have a long way to go.

There are some specific actions which we can take if we are serious about preserving the humaneness of this university.

In the area of administration, some of us should clean up our shops. We should take a more creative and contributory attitude toward the role which we are playing in this complex society. As administrators we are here to keep this university running as smoothly as possible with a maximum of service to the individual and a minimum of bureaucratic red tape. Our attitude should always be positive--never negative. We should be ever eager to solve problems and serve our students and faculty members. And we should provide our services cheerfully and thoroughly. We should follow the biblical injunction and "walk the second mile."

As faculty members, we ought to ask ourselves some tough questions. Do we really care about our students? Do we try to establish TWO-way communication with them? Are we in our offices for consultation with our students when we are supposed to be? Do we ever engage our students in real and meaningful conversation? Do we ever share a cup of coffee with them in the 'Hatch?" Are we learning anything from our students? Or do we have a 'take-it or leave-it' attitude? Are we here to help build other people--or simply our own careers?

As students we ought to take a pretty careful look at ourselves as being here to "get" an education or do we realize that we must "give" an education as well? We must give to each other and we must give to those in other age groups, formed by other years, and sometimes unaware of the prespectives with which students view contemporary problems. And if we give, do we make our contribution in a constructive way? Do we work through existing organizations and channels? Of if no suitable channels exist, do we create new ones? Or do we simply take the easy way of the dropout or the negative revolutionary?

There is a lot of talk about student revolt today and, from what I can see, it is pretty loose talk. I think that we ought to realize that revolution is sometimes necessary for evolution. We're citizens in a country that has evolved from a revolution. We're the beneficiaries (or the victims--depending upon how one looks at it) of an industrial revolution. Like bigness, there's nothing intrinsically wrong with revolution. But a revolution without positive goals is no revolution at all. It is more accurately a regression -- a regression through frustration to a lower form of civilization than we have previously attained. We don't need regression at the University of Massachusetts. We need progress -- progress in solving our common problems; progress in human relations; progress in the development of humaneness in this community. With progressive evolution here, the need for so-called revolution will be limited to those who wish to use revolution as a vehicle for the furtherance of their own public images.

In addition to the questions which we ask ourselves in our roles as students and faculty members and administrators, I think that we ought also to ask ourselves some questions as members of a human community dedicated to a broad general goal--the improvement of ourselves, collectively, as a civilized society.

I believe that we ought to talk more to one another without the artificial categories that we constantly find surrounding us. I think that it is fine to be a professor and it is equally fine to be a student. But I believe that we will all grow more if we can meet one another as open human beings and if we can discuss our problems and ideas from that underlying base rather then from our special interest role--whatever it may be. This is everyone's responsibility. Thus I hope that during this year of growth and tension and transition, administrators will talk with faculty and students; that blacks will talk with whites; that conservatives will talk with liberals. If true communication is to result, both sides in these talks must devote at least half their time to listening.

Having uttered a plea for greater communication through talk, I want to go one step further and discuss the concept of action. Because an intellectually oriented community such as the University of Massachusetts often sees problems with much more depth and perspective than a nonintellectually oriented community, there is an ever-present danger of a lack of action in solving problems. But in order to respond to the challenges which face us, with courage, we must recognize that no matter how complicated the challenge may be, there comes a time for action. There comes a point at which further talk is simply a manifestation of a reluctance to decide. "Rational discourse" is not rational when endless delay frustrates plans for progress.

Our Board of Trustees is giving us an example of the decision making process right now. A few days ago, in five hours of serious talk and study and thought, a sub-committee of the board considered the difficult and controversial issues of alcoholic beverage policy, co-educational residence halls and residence hall autonomy in the determination of open - house policy. In these issues all sides were heard and the traditional democratic process for change was followed. Next Monday, the full board will meet to hear the report of the sub-committee as well as student spokesmen for these issues. All may not agree with the conclusions the board will reach, but the board, once the issues were placed on its agenda, has proceeded with dispatch to consider everyone's views and to bring the matters to a decision.

Would that all of the problems facing us could be brought to such a point of decision.

At the moment I would hope that we are close to a decision on the question of a fair and equitable picketing policy. The faculty senate and the student senate have both put forth their recommendations and this important policy now awaits concurrence by the two legislative bodies before any changes are submitted to the Board of Trustees. I hope that such concurrence will be forthcoming as soon as possible so that we may all have and know the ground rules in this delicately-balanced area.

One of the major problems which cries out for solution and action this year is that of curriculum reform. This problem has been discussed, studied, argued, restudied, turned upside-down and inside-out. And much significant progress has been made. Students in the honors program no longer have fixed requirements. The pass-fail option is being adopted in some areas and all of the School of Education is now operating on a pass-fail basis. Special courses for nonmajors have been overhauled and revitalized. The College of Arts and Sciences has introduced many changes including a new foreign language policy which is giving 60% of our freshman class credit for work they have completed prior to entering the University this year. And I go on to mention Project 10; and Project Able; and changes in psychology and sociology. Progress has been made. But problems still remain in other areas of curriculum reform and I call upon the faculty to recognize these problems, attack them, and solve them with all reasonable speed.

There are other, more subtle areas in which action is needed. The continued support of the University by the people of Massachusetts through their elected representatives is a goal for which we all must continually strive. Last spring, with the budget for higher education in jeopardy, students, faculty and administrators joined in an effort to bring their case--our case-- to the public. They contributed money and bought advertisements in newspapers around the state. It was a noble effort but a tardy one. We cannot tell our story in a crash program when our financial lifeline is in the process of being severed. We must tell our story constantly and we must tell it not only in words, but in our responsible actions. In this regard, our students are our best potential ambassadors. The attitude which you students reflect outside of this campus community will have an increasingly cumulative effect upon our finances and our fortunes.

There is a final, broad area in which I would issue a call for action. I would ask all segments of this university community to care and to complain. This is going to be a difficult year. The administration will be working with a shortage of manpower as well as funds for student aid. Many academic departments are suffering from a lack of personnel to teach courses which were previously offered. We're feeling the pinch in housing and room equipment. We have parking and traffic problems on campus that we're trying to solve. Necessary construction is still tying up large sections of the campus. There will be irritations and annoyances in little things as well as big things. I sometimes feel like the leader of a "pothole" gang on the highway--as fast as he plugs up one hole, three more pop open.

We'll solve many of these problems of inconvenience as time goes by. We can solve them more rapidly with everyone's help. If you care, you'll be a little more considerate of the other people around you. Consideration ranges all the way from concern over a troubled neighbor in a residence hall to where you park your car or how you drive it. Consideration will make you reconsider your first impulse to add to the litter on the campus. Consideration will encourage you to get involved in activities which make positive contributions to university life. Consideration will make you want to help each other grow and learn and develop as human beings. Many of these things are small and perhaps seem insignificant. But they are not. It is the accumulation of many small acts of inconsiderateness which slowly but inexorably drain a community like this of its humaneness. It is the accumulation of these small acts of carelessness that is turning so many of our cities into jungles of indifference. If we are to be a community with a "soul"--if we are to be humane,--we must care and we must act from consideration of others.

And I ask that you complain. If things aren't the way they should be, let's hear about it. Let's not lose our "salt". Let's not become indifferent. A positive complaint is an indication that a person is concerned enough -- cares enough-- to take action. So to those who will have complaints to make, I say "Make them". And to those who are on the receiving end of complaints, I say "Receive them in the spirit in which they are given." Because complaints are a form of communication and communication is our most basic need in this university if we are to remain humane and if we are to continue our past pattern of steady progress in the face of challenge.

Carlyle once said: "Even in the meanest sorts of labor, the whole soul of a man is composed into a kind of real harmony the instant he sets himself to work."

A university needs a kind of real harmony too. And its soul will be so composed the instant we set ourselves to caring--and to acting out of care.

Gorden, Cannon, Kofler Receive Distinguished Teachers' Awards

A chemist, a political scientist and a physicist have received the 1969 Distinguished Teacher Awards at the University.

Honored at Convocation were Dr. George W. Cannon, professor of chemistry; Dr. Glen Gordon, associate professor of government; and Dr. Richard Kofler, associate professor of physics and astronomy.

The Distinguished Teacher Award, is given each year for "manifest excellence in the art of teaching and outstanding devotion to the cause of education." Selection is by an all-University committee and the award carries a $1000 stipend. The presentations were made by Dr. Oswald Tippo, University Provost.

Dr. Cannon has been a UMass staff member since 1948 and before that was a research chemist with the Rohm and Haas Co. of Philadelphia. A North Dakota native and a graduate of Dakota Wesleyan University, he holds M.S. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Illinois. A member of Phi Beta Kappa and a number of other honorary and professional societies, he is the author of some 13 publications in his field.

Dr. Gordon is a New York University graduate who holds two M.A. degrees, one in political science and one in social science, and a Ph.D. degree in political science, all from the University of Chicago. He came to UMass in 1964 from Michigan State University, has published articles on American government and has served as executive officer of the government department. He is the secretary to the Faculty Senate.

Dr. Kofler is a specialist in high energy physics who joined the University in 1965 from the University of Wisconsin, where he was a research associate. He is a Marquette University graduate with M.S. and Ph.D. degrees from Wisconsin. He has published a number of articles on high-energy particle studies.

Defendants

OPINION, September 10, 1969

FORD, D.J. Plaintiff in this action is an artist and was formerly an art instructor at the University of Massachusetts. Defendants are the President, Trustees and other officials of the University. The University is a public institution governed by a Board of Trustees appointed by the governor, and the expenses of the University are paid in substantial part from state funds.

For some time prior to January 1967, works of art had from time to time been placed on exhibition on the campus of the University and particularly on the walls of the corridor of the Student Union Building. No written rules or regulations governing campus art exhibits had ever been issued by the University. However, an informal procedure had grown up under which a representative of the Student Union and a representative of the Department of Art scheduled exhibitions for the Student Union corridor. Prior to the events involved in this case, at least ten art exhibits had been held in the corridor.

The corridor in question is located on the main floor of the Student Union Building. This building operates to provide educational recreational and dining facilities for students. Its operating expenses are met by funds derived from fees paid by the students. Its day to day activities are supervised by a governing board of students, faculty, administrators and alumni, approved by the President of the University and operating subject to his general supervisory authority.

The corridor in question was used daily by many students, faculty members and administrators, especially by those going to the dining facilities in the building. It was also frequently used by members of the general public, including some children, attending lectures and other activities open to persons outside the university community. The corridor had been redesigned for the specific purpose of displaying exhibits of art.

In the spring of 1966 Professor Norton, the chairman of the Department of Art at the University asked plaintiff, then an art instructor, if he would be interested in scheduling an exhibition of his work. Plaintiff said he would, and eventually, under the informal procedure described above, it was agreed that an exhibition of plaintiff's works would be hung in the Student Union corridor from January 8 to January 31, 1967. An exhibition of 31 works was put in place under plaintiff's supervision on the evening of January 7.

This exhibit consisted of 31 pieces. Some were completed major works, others were preliminary drawings or studies for these works, included for educational purposes.

Certain of these paintings showing nude or partially nude figures and scenes of bathrooms, as well as certain captions on pictures characterized as depicting campus life, immediately produced discussion and controversy. Several meetings for discussion of the exhibit were held in which several university officials took part including the President, the dean, the Secretary, the Provost, and on some occasions the Chairman of the Art Department. Plaintiff was not present at these discussions, although on at least one occasion he was sitting outside the meeting room, but was not invited to come inside.

Finally at a meeting on Thursday, January 12, it was decided to remove the exhibition. On that evening the paintings were taken from the walls by employees of the University. Plaintiff was given no notice that this was to be done. His paintings were returned to him several days later.

Plaintiff brings this action for a declaration that the removal of his paintings deprived him of his rights under the First and Fourteenth Amendments and for an order that defendants be required to reinstate his exhibition for a time equivalent to the number of days by which his scheduled exhibition period was cut short. (Except for two paintings which have been destroyed, or the other items of the exhibition are still in plaintiff's possession or are available to him if the exhibition is to be reinstated.)

The University is an instrumentality of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and its administrators and trustees in actions taken in their official capacity are subject to the restrictions of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The expression of plaintiff's thoughts through the medium of his paintings and the exhibition of them is a form of "speech" within the protection of the Fourteenth Amendment as it incorporates the First Amendment. Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 487. Joseph Burstyn, Inc. v. Wilson, 343 U.S. 495.

Plaintiff, of course, makes no contention that he is entitled to hang his paintings anywhere on University property at any time he wishes, or even that the University was required to provide any facilities for the exhibition of works of art. In the present case the University had adopted the policy of allowing such exhibitions. It had provided an area open to the public, and had moreover taken steps to adapt this area for that particular purpose. Plaintiff had fully complied with the procedure for scheduling a time for his exhibition and the works had been placed on display. In these circumstances, the court agrees with plaintiff that his right to maintain his exhibitions for the scheduled period came within the protection of the First and Fourteenth Amendments. Thereafter defendants could terminate the exhibition and remove his paintings only in accordance with regulations narrowly drawn to serve the legitimate interests of the University. Plaintiff was given no notice that this was to be done. His paintings were returned to him several days later.

Plaintiff brings this action for a declaration that the removal of his paintings deprived him of his rights under the First and Fourteenth Amendments and for an order that defendants be required to reinstate his exhibition for a time equivalent to the number of days by which his scheduled exhibition period was cut short. (Except for two paintings which have

Ho Humdrum

President Lederle presented what was in gist a very well written, middle-of-the-road speech. It followed naturally in the Lederle tradition of safety first and of being careful of big stately-type toes.

Actually the speech was so general and middle grounded that many people expressed difficulty in understanding just what he was trying to say. It would seem that a man who is on his way out would have, at least this time, let his true feelings come out, having nothing to fear in retribution, instead of covering them up in the guise of well-written rhetoric.

Among the main points enunciated in the speech were the communications gap between the students and the administration, the University as a humane institution, the increasing size of the University, and the progress which is being made in state education. As can readily be seen nothing specific was mentioned. The generalities stuck out like a sore thumb and hit upon the eardrum like a cracked record. It was really a shame that President Lederle could not have said something, at least this once.

Bruce Balboni, Student Senate President, on the other hand, shocked many people in what probably was the greatest thing that Mr. Balboni has said or done thus far as senate president. Mr. Balboni should be praised for his rejection of the obvious tokenism of Governor Sargent's porposed bill to add one student to the Board of Trustees. Balboni also made the position of the student senate clear when he said that he expected the senate to be brought in on every proposal of the University at the outset.

Also mentioned in Balboni's speech was a push for academic changes and the problem with out more research inclined faculty.

In all the convocation ended up fulfilling its main objective which was the official opening of the University. It is indeed fortunate that President Balboni has finally shown to the University community where he and the senate stand. We are optimistic that this will be a year of progress in which the Student Senate will play an integrate part. President Lederle's speech was at best a let down, but then again, one can't have everything.

Real Patriotism

Everyone keeps telling me it's getting better, that it's going to get better. My girl, my best friend the S.D.S. chapter's secretary.... "Oh it's great, people are getting together, being gentle, people aren't hung up on sex anymore, there's the pill, and people aren't afraid of life anymore. You got more kids going against racism, a non-violent ethic, and an anti-big brother movement."

Sure.

But listen, I keep remembering. Before you get to feeling the old U.S. is getting to be groovy just think a minute. Out there in the non-campus , anti-intellectual, bowling club and frozen french fries world are the people who run the country. Out there are people who voted for Wallace, who equate God with country, people who think pot is immoral, who are shocked at bra-less girls and shoeless kids.

"Do you believe in pre-marital sex?

"Yes".

"What are you, a socialist?

Out there in East Jesus, Iowa is where America really is. We see only the vocal, east coast liberal campus scene.

Out there schoolchildren cheered when John Kennedy was shot. The Boston five were tried for dissent and to salvage Gen. Hershey's pride. The Knights of the Green Forest really did try to shoot Mayor Evers.

And there are plenty of people under 30 who subscribe to the old verities. They will follow in their uptight daddy's mindtracks. Our generation is not quite so liberated as you may think. Out there 20 year olds fight against "Commie inspired pornography". Heil, students protested a nude art exhibit at UMass last year.

The whole scene is not just here. It's in Dallas as well as in Woodstock. The pace of social change is glacial. You can't just groove along and feel the whole society is getting better. You've got to follow Yaz's advice to little leaguers - "work hard". The only way the U.S. will be changed is from inside the power structure outward.

If you work at it, the scene will change. People won't go to jail for 20 years for smoking. Movies won't be censored. The Justice Department will protect rights, not trample them.

There will always be a government, and the structure won't crumble due to smoke and radical raving.

You can change the whole socio-political scene. Make the country a place where a person can look and talk as he pleases. But you can't do it by trying to convert friends to pot or by just wishing there were more Woodstocks everywhere. Deeds are what do things, what change parents, the social atmosphere, the government. It will take a truly massive change in ethics, life style, and in the make-up of elected officialdom to rearrange the U.S.

But that is what real patriotism calls for.

Tax Relief is On Its Way

WASHINGTON - President Nixon's new tax reform program, presented by Secretary of the Treasury David M. Kennedy to the Senate Finance Committee, has been greeted with joy by taxpayers all over the country.

The President's tax proposals are very similar to those suggested by tax reformers, with just a few exceptions.

In order to understand the tax-reform measures as outlined by the Nixon Administration, I went to see Prof. Heinrich Applebaum, the conomist, whose best selling book, "How to Avoid Taxes by Going to Jail" is the last word on the subject.

"Professor, what does the Nixon tax-reform package mean as far as the average taxpayer is concerned?"

"Well, we're not very sure, because there are still many vested interest groups to be heard from. But from what I can gather, everyone stands to gain. If you're married and have two children and make less than $3,500 a year, which means you're starving, you don't have to pay any taxes at all."

"If you make over $3,500, you must pay taxes. But there will be great savings. For example, if you earn $5,000, the savings on your taxes will permit you to go to one extra movie a year.

"As we get into the middle-class income brackets, the savings will be enormous. A married couple with two children in a lower middle-income bracket will save enough money under the Nixon tax reform program to buy a tire for their car."

"Suppose they can't afford a car?"

"Then the taxes saved will allow them to purchase 200 bus tokens, providing of course, they have the correct change."

"The Nixon Administration has really gone out on a limb," I said.

"That's true, and you have to admire the President for it. He's made it possible for any member of a family of four, earning $12,000 a year, to save enough to stay in a hospital for one extra day."

"I hope the little guy is not the only one getting the benefit of the tax-reform bill."

"You have nothing to worry about on that score. The Nixon Administration people are aware that you can't just give tax relief to the little guy without getting the people in the upper brackets and the corporations mad. So, he's done all he could to make things easier for them. For example, a family of four earning $200,000 a year from municipal bonds and oil investments will be put in the same tax bracket as a family on welfare."

"That's only fair," I said. "If the poor don't pay taxes, the rich shouldn't be asked to carry the burden."

"Where Nixon really showed courage as far as I'm concerned," said Applebaum, "is when he decided to aid companies suffering from corporate taxes that have been siphoning away profits. If you're a conglomerate corporation with two dependent companies, your tax savings under the new reform plan will give you enough money to buy three more companies."

"That should take the strain off a lot of corporations."

"Of course, the Nixon tax proposals may not please everyone. But you have to help those in the greatest need, and if we can ease the burden on our large companies and upper-income bracket families, the Nixon Administration will have gone a long way in bringing much needed tax relief to this country.

"This is the first instance in a long time that a President has taken into consideration the problems of the rich. He has made a concerted effort to remedy the inequities of our tax system, which was originally written to give people in the lower-income brackets all the breaks."

War And Sheep

(Editor's Note: The following is the first article in a column that Ed Bryant will be writing on a weekly basis for the Collegian. We will be featuring our new columnists this week on the editorial page.)

In Monday's newspapers, Linus Van Pelt, resident intellectual of Peanuts, made a profound statement. Discussing the draft with the knowledgeable Charlie Brown, Linus says, "I have no desire to be sent wherever they'll be sending people when I'm old enough to be sent. Linus is fortunate, being fictitious. But what of the rest of us, who are both fact and fodder?

The feeling seems to pervade that we don't want to go. A glance at the surface reasons for this reluctance is sufficient to see that military service is extremely unpopular. Not only our youth, but also our education is interrupted. The desire I feel most of us have not to destroy the lives of others might also be mentioned. And it would be negligent to overlook the gun the other guy is pointing at us.

It seems to me to go much deeper than that. Most everyone's father went to war in the forties. In fact the Amalgamated Grandfathers of America went to war in 1917, thus ending all wars. They certainly had the same discomforts as we face, yet they went willingly. The differences between them and us are both circumstantial and evolutionary. It would be impossible for us in today's world to react as they did. Hitler and Pearl Harbor were for almost everyone sufficient to take up one's gun and risk one's life. From what I have heard of Hitler, I think most of us would have gone then. Still, although we can call the Second World War different from Vietnam, our generation would be more reluctant to go fight Hitler. There are two major reasons for this.

The first is an intellectual-political dissatisfaction with war as an effective international game. While the dice have been smoothed, and a rule booklet is included with every ICBM, war has made no real progress beyond the feudal stage. The absolute futility of war is the transcendent reality of the game. When one considers that the British after the war treated the Jews as poorly as did Hitler, and the present state of Western Civilization, one wonders what the Second World War accomplished other than a few dozen bad movies and a new toy for the Strangeloves of the world. We really should be beyond war as a means of expressing our inability to communicate. The Paris Peace Talks, for example, are a much better way to demonstrate communication failures. Unfortunately while the Paris game is being played, they are still shooting people and bombing people and villages on the main gameboard.

The second reason lies in the cancerous state of the American Dream. The GI of 1942 really dug America. Separate but equal was still the law, and everyone had recently been poor. Coupled with the Yellow Peril and the nasty Nazis, America looked perfect.

Not so today. No political leaders commands much respect or trust. The institutions we would be preserving are not clearly something we want to preserve. On top of that, they aren't even threatened. The issue today is imperialism vs . nationalism, and we are asked to fight on the side of imperialism. Since national independence must precede any hope of sane international dealings, it is hard to find much good in the United States retaining the province of Vietnam. To summarize, we are asked by something that holds little for us to destroy someone else's dream, a dream with which we either sympathize or to which we see no viable alternative.

To enlist on the side of the Cong is no answer as it too would mean killing people. An awful lot is required to justify killing someone; perhaps there is nothing. Even so, to ask someone to kill for the reasons we are asked to kill, by the people who are asking us to kill, is absurd, and it may even blow up in their faces, if the sheep of our generation will declare their rights as human beings.

Desperate!

We are writing this letter to protest the unfair treatment of fraternity men by the majority of the female populace on this campus. This attitude, brought about by the slanderous references of various student organizations, and the acts of a few irresponsible fraternity men is ruining our social lives.

Due to the drunken, sex-crazed image attributed to all fraternity men we have been unable, as have many of our brothers, to procure a respectable date in many months. When we are fortunate enough to get any date they will neither drink (though everyone knows a few drinks never hurt anyone), nor will they enter our rooms, even to listen to a stereo under dim lights. One cannot pick up a girl at any function, and this is getting us down.

Girls, please give us a break! We are normal, healthy, polite boys, looking for a good time. please help us, WE NEED DATES!!!

Team Effort

Provost Tippo's recent announcement that the entire University would be involved in the selection of a successor to President Lederle is in itself a concession and a challenge. Without questioning the merit of magnitude of the power that has been given to the college community, it still remains an exercise of choice not previously granted, or, in most cases, not even considered to exist within the university. For this, we as belonging to the community should be grateful, and those who played a part in achieving this ne w voice should be pleased with themselves. However, it is at this point that we must accept the challenge, and succeed with it.

It is often sufficient to take up arms for a cause on the strength of a principle alone, without foresight or plans in the event of victory. But it follows that as the privilege becomes ours we must pause and reflect upon our exercise of that right. That we act intelligently and with direction is indeed a challenge to our word and ability to be responsible as we profess. A change in the system has been affected, and the ball is returned to our side of the net, well within play and easily reached with a little team effort.

Obligation?

May I use your pages to announce a matter of importance to all male students who might have missed it in the flurry of activities last spring?

The University will no longer automatically inform Selective Service that a male student has left school. In the 143rd Regular Meeting of the Faculty Senate, May 15, 1969, this motion was favorably voted:

"That the University will inform a local board of the Selective Service System of a student's withdrawal, dismissal, graduation, or departure from the university ONLY IN RESPONSE TO A DIRECT REQUEST from the local board (emphasis added). The University will notify the Selective Service System of this change in procedure."

The University before this has been informing the Government of all drop-outs even though it had no legal obligation to do so. Does this not show the Administration's over-zealous eagerness to demonstrate its devotion to the war machine? Not much better is the attitude of the faculty: as a measure of the faculty's devotion to the students on one hand and the Selective Service System on the other, the voting of the above motion resulted from the Chairman's breaking a tie vote! In any case, a student who leaves the University may now, by vote of the Faculty Senate, choose to report the fact to his draft board or not, without compulsion from the University, i.e. he can feel free to obey or not to obey a law, which I for one believe to be immoral.

I would like to be informed of any indication that the Administration is not complying with the will (however timid) of the Faculty Senate. In fact, I would like to be informed if the Administration tells ANYONE of a student's withdrawal.

Amherst Housing Authority to Explore Rent Subsidies

Amherst Housing Authority is expected to vote rent subsidies for low income families in the town.

At a meeting Tuesday the Authority decided to get more information on the rent subsidy program and to hold a special meeting later in the month when the program would be voted on.

Indications at the meeting were that the subsidy will be approved when the Authority meets again.

There has been considerable ferment in Amherst about the high-cost of rental housing, and the difficulty many low-income families, and particularly married students, have in finding housing in the community they can afford while attending school.

Under the subsidy program the town Housing Authority could disburse up to $100,000 in rent subsidies. The money, the Authority indicated, would come from funds made available by the State.

The various criteria for disbursing such funds, who would be eligible and how the program would be administered still have to be worked out.

The subsidy program would be the first in this area, officials noted.

Housing Authority at its regular monthly meeting heard Peter DePaola, senior manager and supervisor, and Edward Mangini, director of financial assistance of the State Department of Community Affairs in Boston.

Their subject was "Rental Assistance for Families of Low Income".

The speakers said that this program if voted for Amherst could be under way by Nov. 1. Rental assistance does not have to be a a vote of town meeting just a vote of the Amherst Housing Authority they said.

They said that it provides rent subsidies for low-income families and extends to the elderly person.

It allows local housing authorities to rent or lease private units and to pay a rent supplement to make up the difference in the agreed total monthly rent for the apartment.

They continued by saying, "A housing authority shall, in order to encourage the construction and remodeling of dwelling units, endeavor to lease units constructed or recently reconstructed or remodeled but may enter into lease for other units.

"All units to be rented or leased must be certified by the local board of health that some units meet at least the minimum standards of fitness for human habitation in accordance with State Sanitary Code.

"Prior to lease agreement by local housing authority the following determination must be met: 1. The Housing Authority adopts scale of gross rents (all utilities specified) and approved by Department of Community Affairs;

2. In explaining tenant selections there are listed in three categories: 1. Families with four or more persons; 2. Families displaced by public action such as highways, urban renewal etc., and 3. Elderly persons of low income."

The speakers pointed out the funds appropriated for rental assistance shall be allocated as follows:

Cities over 500,000 population according to 1965 State Census, not in excess of 50 per cent of such funds for anyone such city.

Cities and towns between 100,000 and 500,000, not in excess of 20 per cent of such funds for any such city and town.

Cities and towns under 100,000, not in excess of 10 per cent of such funds for any such city and town.

The Division of Community Development shall allocate funds on the basis of application therefore from the Housing Authority.

An eleven - page lease is authorized among the housing authority, the owner and tenant.

Miss Ann Whalen, a member of the Amherst Housing Authority, had it recorded officially that there was a discussion and action by the Amherst Authority at the July meeting in which it had made plans to meet with the town manager, selectmen, Planning Board and Housing Authority and the University about it's future planning for housing of students.

No meeting had been scheduled as of this date.

Text of Senate President Balboni's Convocation Speech

President Lederle, Provost Tippo, Faculty and fellow students. As I see the University today there are three aspects of our lives here in Amherst that deserve careful attention.

The first is student life. Hopefully we have reached the stage now where the concept of "in loco parentis" for the administration is out. In terms of student rights and decisions about the conduct of our lives we students have asserted that the administration has no right and actually shouldn't want to be involved in the determination of social regulation. The Student Senate has passed legislation instructing the student courts to enforce only Student Senate regulation--and this they will do.

As a student government we expect to be brought in on every proposal at the outset and not at a time when all we can do is approve or reject the final decision as appears to be the case in the selection process for a new University President. I cannot fail to mention that we as students must not lose sight of our goals. We must not let Student Government become so awesome that it hinders progress. Only in its proper perspective can we hope to use it as an effective tool for change. Governor Sargent, in attempting to give us a device for change, has proposed a bill that will add a student to the Board of Trustees. In its present form the bill is unacceptable, and I hope this student body will reject this plan and see it as the tokenism that it is.

The role of the student in the operation of the classroom is yet undefined. And aside from the question of how a course is taught, there are other questions concerning the faculty. What part should students play in the hiring and firing of teachers? Should the administration work with the students in trying to move the often rather slow faculty towards meaningful academic changes?

And on this day when we award the Distinguished Teacher's Awards it seems fitting to ask the question: Is research beginning to dominate teaching? It seems that we are building a graduate institution where undergrads will soon be a secondary consideration. We are attracting big name faculty who in turn attract the grad students; but while we have good faculty, do we have good teaching? There is no question that we need a grad system here at UMass, but when undergrads feel as an appendage to the grad school and when classes become more crowded due to more research and less teaching, we undergrads will feel the neglect that led students at Berkeley and Columbia to violent reaction.

We are at a point now where this crisis can be averted. The faculty can do much if it will take positive and progressive action. Let us take heed and not make the mistake of ignoring history. The role of the student in institutional development is also unclear. While the Student Senate has representatives on the Master Planning Committee and the Long Range Planning Committee, there is still the problem that students have had no part in the decision of what our overall goals will be for the University. The question of developing the grad school is a case in point. Once again a course of action was set upon and THEN students were brought in.

I only wish to point out that we as students are impatient for long-awaited changes, both social and academic, and we are dissatisfied with our role in the various decision-making bodies. Hopefully this year real progress can be achieved through a sincere spirit of cooperation and mutual respect amongst this tri-partite community.

Trustees Establish Procedure for Selecting a New President

1. The Board of Trustees has designated a "Committee to Advise on Selection of a President" to recommend for its consideration a nominee (or nominees) for President of the University. The following Trustees are members of the committee: Messrs. Crowley, Lambson and Plimpton; Mrs. Knowles, Mrs. Rowland, Mrs. Snowden. General John Maginnis is chairman.

2. Advisory groups to recommend the names of individuals deemed suitable for the presidency are being established on each campus of the University as follows:
   Alumni Association - Amherst.
   Alumni Association - Boston
   Faculty (8) and Administration: (Provost; one Dean, one Department Head) - Amherst
   Faculty (5) and Administration: (Chancellor; one Department Head) - Boston
   Faculty (3) and Administration: (Dean of School; one Department Head) - Worcester
   Student Body (Undergraduate) - Amherst
   Student Body (Graduate) - Amherst
   Student Body - Boston

3. All names of Advisory Committee members elected on the three campuses should be forwarded to Chairman Maginnis on or before October 1, 1969. (See proper address below.)

4. A Faculty member, Dr. Charles H. Page, Professor of Sociology, will serve the Trustee Committee as part-time coordinator.

5. All correspondence relating to organization, procedures and/or the suggestion of names for consideration by the Trustee Committee should be addressed as follows:

   Whitmore Administration Building
   University of Massachusetts
   Amherst, Massachusetts 01002
   Attn. Robert J. McCartney, Secretary, Board of Trustees

6. All names suggested must be accompanied by complete curriculum vitae including present address and telephone number.

7. Personal contact with any individual suggested by the various campus advisory committees will be made ONLY BY THE CHAIRMAN OF THE TRUSTEE COMMITTEE, GENERAL MAGINNIS.

8. In full awareness that persons recommended to its attention by the campus advisory committees should derive from a broad background of career specialties, the Trustee Committee is not establishing written criteria or guidelines in its pursuit of suggestions. Letters of explanation or justification may accompany each recommendation, but these are not required.

Pentagon to Allow Protest in Services

WASHINGTON - The Defense Department told the armed forces today to allow protest within their ranks unless it interfered with morale, discipline or military "effectiveness."

The five-page directive was similar to guidelines made public by the Army last week.

The Pentagon directive said activities such as underground newspapers and demonstrations should be allowed, within limits, because "dissent in its proper sphere is healthy for the United States."

Roger T. Kelley, Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower and Reserve Affairs, said the directive was intended to make the rules of all the armed services uniform.

It provides that publications such as underground newspapers can be banned if the commander thinks they constitute "a clear danger" to loyalty, discipline, or morale, or will interfere with a "military mission.'

According to the directives, demonstrations on a post are banned if they present a "clear danger" to the post. Demonstrations off a post are banned when they are in a foreign country or when they breach law and order or are "likely" to end in violence.

Dirksen Successor

Fraternity-Sorority Park is Becoming a Reality

By PATT FRANCIS
Senior Reporter

The traditional fraternity row on college campuses may be on the way out if the latest building project at the University of Massachusetts is successful. Members of the Greek letter societies have decided to replace their present scattered houses with a Fraternity-Sorority Park.

The park, believed unique, is situated on a 55-acre tract just northeast of the campus. It was developed to provide a new image for the present structures, which are rapidly becoming inadequate, eyesores and potential fire and health hazards.

Thirteen of the university's 28 Greek chapters have already joined the Fraternity-Sorority Park Corp. Others are expected to join as they decide to move to the park. Ten years is the projected time.

$50,000 ENTRY FEE

The corporation's board of directors is composed of Amherst-area businessmen, some of whom are advisers to Greek chapters.

Each Greek chapter becomes a corporation member on payment of $50,000 of which $30,000 covers the cost of the lot and its preliminary development, and $20,000 buys the chapter's shares in the corporation. Plans call for each member to have an equal vote in the corporation.

The university is lending no financial assistance. Some chapters will receive aid from their national organizations or from alumni; others expect to raise money from the sale of the houses they now occupy.

Ground was broken for the first house at the park in March. Completion is slated for late fall or early in 1970.

WILL SLEEP 50

Neither the university nor the corporation has set a specific style for the new houses. However, plans are submitted for approval to the university's master planning board and the corporation's coordinating architect David Carlson of Springfield.

Exteriors range from wood to brick to poured concrete. Each will be set on a 1-1/2 acre lot.

Generally, the houses have sleeping quarters for about 50, dining facilities for up to 80, a recreation room chapter room, apartment for head of residence and kitchen.

Although some chapters will maintain traditional two-man rooms, others are planning a suite arrangement, which includes a bedroom for two or three, with an adjoining living room, or study room. In at least one house, there will be single-occupancy rooms, intended mainly for seniors.

The better of the present chapter houses will be used by new chapters that are building up their resources or by those awaiting completion of construction in the park.

Most of the UMass "Greeks" are enthusiastic about the park. They see it as an advantage in competing for membership with the university's southwest (high-rise) residential complex.

There has been some apprehension over the fate of the Greek system at UMass, but proponents of the park foresee no problem in filling all of the 23 available building lots, with one new chapter expected to open each year.

This site will be occupied by one of the UMass Greek chapters planning to move to the Park.

Phi Mu Delta may not be completed until late second semester.

Tri - Sigma house may be occupied by next semester.

The good things of life . . .

The love, the quiet laughter—and the freedom to build the kind of life we want.

Twenty years ago, these things were pretty rare. After the most terrible war in history, people felt lucky to be alive, let alone happy.

That's why they invented NATO—the world's first effective peaceforce—just so it would never happen again. For two decades we've had NATO and enjoyed the good life, too.

NATO isn't the only reason why we dare hope that the next twenty years will be as good as the last.

But it's a big reason.

"The Fox" Shows Tonight at SU

"The Fox" is a daring and provocative drama, centering on two young women. Retreating to the isolation of a run-down chicken farm, they are forced to face the realities of life - and their own hidden emotions - by a fox, which preys on their chickens, and by a virile young seaman, who becomes an unexpected guest.

The two women are played by Sandy Dennis and Anne Heywood and the man is played by Keir Dullea.

Filming "The Fox" in Canada, during a February and a March, provided the production with a harshly beautiful and natural winter setting which enhances the drama.

The original music for "The Fox" was composed by Lalo Schifrin, a man who has also done the musical scores for "The Cincinnati Kid" and 'Cool Hand Luke."

"The Fox' is being shown in the Student Union Ballroom Thursday, Sept. 18 at 7 and 9.

ANNE HEYWOOD and SANDY DENNIS find themselves bound not only by the isolation of their lonely country farm house, but by emotional ties difficult to express and to handle in "The Fox."

Amherst Opens

Amherst College is currently in the process of orienting 312 freshmen for the coming year. The class is the second largest ever at Amherst - only the class of 1950, which included many veterans of World War II, was larger. It had 410 students.

The College received 2,260 applications for the class of 1973, the highest number in Amherst's 148-year history. In his report to secondary schools concerning the admission policy at Amherst, Dean of Admissions, Eugene S. Wilson, explained that "we were able to accept only about a third of the applicants we wanted to accept."

Dean Wilson pointed out that for the first time, the college was unable to award financial aid to all accepted candidates who had applied for financial assistance. This year 38 per cent of the freshman class is receiving aid.

On College Board Aptitude tests, the largest group of the freshman class, 132 students, fell into the 600-699 range on the verbal portion of the test, and the largest group on the mathematical section was 142 students in the 700-800 range. About two thirds of the class was in the 600 - 800 range in both areas.

Approximately two-thirds of the freshmen come from public schools, and one-third attended independent secondary schools. The class includes representatives from 37 states and 3 foreign countries.

According to Dean Wilson's report, law, teaching, and medicine in that order have attracted the class of 1973 as far as occupational goals are concerned. Their academic interst falls by and large into the categories of English, mathematics, and political science.

For the first time in the College's history, women exchange students will reside on the Amherst campus as full members of the college community this year. The 23 girls are assigned to a new dormitory, will attend Amherst classes, eat in the commons, and take part in appropriate extracurricular activities. The girls will study at Amherst only for the fall semester, although another group will take their place for the spring semester.

In selecting the women students, preference was given to girls from Smith and Mount Holyoke Colleges.

The College hopes to learn whether allowing women students to reside on the campus - as opposed to the exchange that already existed under the Five College Cooperation Program between Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges, and the University of Massachusetts - adds any specific demensions to Amherst's educational aims.

Educational Studies Program To Instruct Area Students

The newly - organized Educational Studies program is offering, as its first project, a series of courses led by undergraduate students. The courses, which will cover a wide variety of topics, are offered to Amherst area high school students on Saturday mornings.

The program is seeking students who are interested in any of the following areas:

– teaching, in a conventional manner, accelerated or supplementary courses in subjects normally open to high school students.

– treating the traditional material in an innovative way.

– working with high school students on subjects not normally presented to them, such as creative writing or philosophy, etc.

– leading discussion or research groups on student initiated topics. The 'teacher' could offer to help an interest group in his field of expertise by suggesting reading and resources and helping with technical terminology, etc.

– doing research on the realities of the American educational system and its prospects for change, along with people who are involved with it in a different role.

– doing workships, covering drama, music, dance, film, etc. or leading sensitivity groups, even doing research on new sensitivity exercises.

Anyone interested in working with the high school program on any of these or on any other topics should leave a note in the ESP mailbox in room 126 of the School of Education or contact Phil Appel, 212 Moore, tel. 6-5327.

Maine's Experience to Prove Tough Test for Redmen

Black Bears Back with 28 Lettermen

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Staff Reporter

Bright is the outlook for University of Maine football as the opening of their 1969 season approaches, marked by the invasion of UMass on Saturday. The Redmen are not likely to escape with an easy victory as they have done the past two years in their traditional opening game affair with the Black Bears.

Maine head coach Walt Abbott commands a squad which includes 28 returning lettermen, several promising sophomores and a group of notable transfers. Experience and depth are quite obviously the assets upon which he will draw as Maine will be striving to improve on last year's 3-5 mark.

Of the 28 lettermen, nine held starting positions on offense and nine started on defense for last season's Black Bears.

Leading the attack will be 5'8-170 lb. senior quarterback Dave Wing, who was the Yankee Conference's most improved player in '68 as he hit on 75 out of 173 passes for 815 yards and seven touchdowns. Steve Daly, a 5'10-165 lb. senior, is Wing's relatively inexperienced replacement.

Wing's prime target will be All-Conference split end Gene Benner, a 6'-180 lb. senior who is holder of seven Maine pass catching records. Last year he caught 36 passes for 549 yards in addition to leading the conference in kickoff returns.

Tight end has been won by Paul Soucy, a 6'4-195 lb. sophomore who will be counted upon to take some pressure off of Benner. Senior Bob White, 5'8-190 lbs., provides depth for the receiving corps.

Running back is a Black Bear strong point. Starting halfbacks are 5'10-182 lb. Chris Eaton and 6'-183 lb. Bob Hamilton, both juniors. Hamilton led the team in rushing last year with 585 yards. Junior Dan Sullivan, 6'-175 lb., is an experienced backup man.

Fullback duties belong to junior Steve Naccara, a 5'11-205 pounder. He has a strong reserve in the person of senior Mike Barra, 5'1'-196 lbs.

Senior John Wolfgram, 5'11-194 lbs., is the center and he will be flanked at the guard spots by seniors John Dugan, 6'1-235 lbs., and Jay Vance, 5'10, 190 lbs. Both are two-year lettermen.

One offensive tackle post is manned by 6'1-195 lb. senior Dennis Walch. The remaining tackle slot was left open by the graduation of Charlie Hews, who was picked up as a free agent by the Dallas Cowboys. It will be filled by 6'1-212 lb. junior Stan Vasalle. Reserve strength in the offensive line comes from the likes of 6'-6'1-210 lb. junior Rod Sparrow.

On defense, the Black Bears boast standouts such as senior Mark Richardson, 6'-215 lbs., at linebacker, senior tackle and captain Paul Dulac, 5'11-212 lbs. and 5'9-165 lb. cornerback John Collins, also a senior. All are steady veteran performers who like to hit.

The other tackle spot beside Dulac was vacated by a recent injury to senior Ernie Gilbert, who suffered a dislocated elbow. Gilbert's replacement will be Henry James, a 6'-190 lb. junior.

Maine's defensive ends will be 6'1-190 lb. junior Mike Landry and Rick Coffin, a 6'1-167 lb. junior. Reserve strength is weak in this position.

Joining Richardson as the other linebacker is 5'11-190 lb. senior Dave Coltin. John Rhodes, a 5'11-190 lb. soph standout, has won the middle guard berth. The substitute here will be 5'9-180 lb. senior Walt Lee.

The defensive backfield looks strong with seniors Joe Hochadel, 6'1-188 lbs., and Dale Inman, 5'10-168 lbs., at safeties and senior Tom Jordan, 5'11-185 lbs., complimenting Collins at cornerback. The only reliable reserve at present is a sophomore, 5'10-167 lb. John Zinno.

All in all, Maine's starting lineup is impressive and the reserves are more than adequate, al of which points toward a winning campaign for the 1969 Black Bears their first in four years.

MAINE'S BLACK BEARS will be out to revenge last year's 21-3 loss at the hands of the Redmen. With these standouts returning, they should prove stiff competition for UMass' opening encounter. Maine will have a good chance to improve on their 3-5 mark of last season.

JERRY GRASSO will be a prime target for quarterback Tim Adams' aerials this Saturday. Above, Grasso awaits a pass in last year's 21-3 Redman victory over Maine's Black Bears. He has been a steady performer for the last two UMass seasons and will again provide a solid punch at halfback.

Cubs Edge Phils, 9-7 Trail Mets by 3 1 2 Games

CHICAGO (AP) - Ferguson Jenkins blasted a bases-loaded triple in a five-run sixth and notched his 20th victory as the Chicago Cubs struggled to a 9-7 triumph over the Philadelphia Phils Wednesday.

The victory enabled the Cubs to pull to within 3-1/2 games of the leading New York Mets in the National League East. The Mets were to play a night game at Montreal.

Jenkins, now 20-14, was removed in favor of Ken Johnson when the Phils loaded the bases in the eighth, but his six strike-outs broke his won Cub season record with a total of 261. He had 260 last year.

The Phils also chased Johnson and Phil Regan in a four-run eighth before Rich Nye finally retired the side.

The Cubs' only third victory in their last 14 games came on a 14-hit attack which also included Ron Sanot's two-run homer in the third off Jerry Johnson, first of five Phillies' hurlers, and Billy Williams' leadoff homer in the seventh.

Jenkins, in his fourth try for victory No. 20, became the first Cub hurler in 50 years to post three successive 20-game winning seasons. The last was Hoppo Vaughn in 1919 with a 21-14 record.

The big Cub sixth broke a 3-3 tie. A leadoff double by Williams, followed by singles by Santo, Ernie Banks and Jim Hickman produced two runs. Paul Popovich's bunt single filled the bases and Jenkins hammered a triple off John Boozer, second Phil pitcher in the inning.

Celts Open Training Camp Under Head Coach Heinsohn

BOSTON (AP) - The National Basketball Association champion Boston Celtics officially opened their 1969-70 training camp Wednesday, but the assemblage bore little resemblance to the team which won the latest in its long string of titles a year ago.

Missing via retirement were player-coach Bill Russell, who led the Celtics to 11 NBA titles in 13 seasons, and high-scoring Sam Jones, whose sharpshooting was a key factor in most of those crowns.

Also not on hand was Captain John Havlicek. His absence stirred speculation for a while, since he reportedly has received a lucrative offer to jump to the rival American Basketball Association. It turned out, however, he was making a television commercial in New York and the Celtics had given him permission to report a day late.

Reserve center Jim "Bad News" Barnes also failed to report, and was declared a holdout.

The rest of the squad was on hand for picture-taking, the annual tap-off dinner and the first full drill of the training season under new coach Tommy Heinsohn, who was named Monday to take over for Russell.

FIELD DISCUSSES FREE U.

By NEAL NOVACK
Senior Reporter

A special meeting was called last night in the Bristol Room at the S.U. by Senate President Bruce Balboni to discuss Free University City. Dean Field and Assistant Dean of Students, Jerry Scanlon, were present to raise questions about the project.

Dean Field and Asst. Dean Scanlon suggested to the Free University spokesman present at the meeting tha t those involved in the community should examine problems which might arise once the proposed dome "living and learning" structures are built. These problems would include factors of public health, fire hazards, and response by faculty, administration, and the University Planning committee. Dean Field did express the opinion that the ideas presented in the rationale on Free University as printed in the Wednesday issue of the COLLEGIAN were valid and should be considered. Dean Field cautioned the Free University spokesmen that if they went ahead with construction of the dome structures they might be confronted with problems of authorization from various sources including the Mass. Building Authority who has control over the proposed building site. Dean Field also expressed the view that the project might receive a more negative reaction from the faculty than from the Senate.

Showing support for the rationale, Senate Pres. Balboni also recommended that the Free University Community members consider those suggestions made by Dean Field concerning problems of authorization.

Among those representing the Free University were Student Senator Steve Levy (Moore House), Tim Ney ('72) and Marshall Spriggs ('73). They expressed the idea that the dome structures, more than just being living and learning facilities, are the means to demonstrate and to bring into light to the rest of the University those ideas presented in their rationale.

Senator Levy stressed the fact that the Free University project is one that has been student initiated and is student controlled, and that this type of academic structure is necessary to promote freedom of self-expression and individual creativity.

Tim Ney concluded by indicating that those suggestions made by Dean Field, Asst. Dean Scanlon, and Bruce Balboni would be discussed by the Free University Community this morning, but that construction of the domes will begin this Saturday, September 20, at 9 a.m. behind Southwest Residential complex. The Free City invites all those interested in helping with construction or interested in becoming a member to call 545-0742 in Moore House.

There will be a referendum on the subject of the Free University for the sophomore class today in the S.U.

Newsmen Arrested at Chicago Trials

CHICAGO (AP) - Federal officials began arresting newsmen and photographers in the Federal Building today on grounds that they violated an order banning radio and television broadcasting and photography in federal courtrooms and their environs.

The order, issued Wednesday by William J. Campbell, chief federal judge in Chicago, barred broadcasting and photography on floors housing courtrooms and the ground floors, plaza and sidewalks surrounding the court house.

The first arrested today were Michael Rollins, a reporter for radio station WCFL, and Arvid Carlson a cameraman for WGN-TV, who were in the lobby of the building.

Immediately after these arrests, other newsmen in the lobby of the Federal Building began turning on their cameras and tape recorders and were arrested.

They were not immediately identified.

At the time of his arrest, Rollins was taping an interview with Sherman H. Skolnick about a suit Skolnick had just filed as a private citizen challenging the constitutionality of Judge Campbell's order.

Skolnick was holding a press conference at the time about his suit and was surrounded by reporters.

After Rollins turned on his tape recorder, Frank Reddy, supervising deputy U.S. marshall, warned him that he was violating the order.

Skolnick, a legal researcher, then demanded that he be arrested because he had invited the newsmen to attend his press conference there.

Assembled reporters were then told by John Adams, chief deputy marshal:

"We are asking any people with recording devices or cameras to leave. If you won't, you are under arrest."

When Rollins continued to tape, Adams asked him: "Do you refuse to stop?" Rollins replied that he would continue and Adams arrested him.

Carlson, who was holding but not using a camera, was arrested shortly afterward by Reddy. Carlson argued that the order prohibited actual filming and that he was not using his camera.

Judge Campbell issued his order a week before the scheduled trial of eight anti-war leaders charged with crossing state lines to promote a riot.

The judge said the action was taken to bring about "uniformity at all United States District courthouses throughout the country, and at the direction of the Judicial Conference of the United States."

In the past, the lobby of the Federal Building often has been used by the news media for press conferences with U.S. Atty. Thomas A. Foran.

Skolnick, too, has in the past used the lobby and other floors in the building for press conferences.

Skolnick has filed numerous court actions against public officials, alleging various forms of misconduct.

His latest suit, filed with Mrs. Harriett Sherman, states that the plaintiffs are acting as representatives of all persons who watch television and listen to the radio, particularly news programs.

The Daily Collegian regrets that due to reasons of space, we were not able to give adequate coverage to the post-convocation discussion between Gil Salk, Bob Kentfield and Dean Seymour Shapiro.

This discussion, which centered on concrete issues of University policy and their direct relation to the student community was of great importance, and we regret that we were unable to cover it.

LIBE Committee to Add Students

In a meeting with David Clay, the new director of the library, Senate President Bruce Balboni discussed the need for increased student representation on the Faculty Senate Library Committee.

Presently there are two student members of the committee which numbers over twenty and Mr. Clay was in agreement that this was not a sufficient representation for a committee of this size. He therefore suggested that President Balboni set up an Ad Hoc Committee to advise the Director of the Library as to the number of students which should serve on the Library Committee. The Senate is looking for students interested in this area.

Pentagon Costs Soar

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate beat back final attempts to restrict defense spending Thursday and passed a $20 billion military procurement authorization virtually intact. The vote on passage was 81 to 5.

The measure now goes to the House while the Senate turns to another controversial matter - space spending and priorities.

The procurement bill authorizes $19.98 billion for aircraft, missiles, naval vessels and tracked combat vehicles. Included is a go-ahead for the controversial Safeguard antiballistic missile.

Some $7.1 billion is earmarked for research, development, test and evaluation of various projects.

The Senate has been debating the bill since July 7, the lengthiest debate over military spending in nearly two decades, yet the bill emerged virtually unscathed. The actual money for the programs must be provided in separate legislation.

Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird Thursday lifted a ban on new military construction which had threatened to hold up $99.5 million in contracts this month.

The suspension of new construction had been ordered two weeks ago after President Nixon directed federal agencies to cut back government construction contracts by 75 per cent.

The Pentagon said military contract awards may now be made under certain limitations, not otherwise specified, which had been drawn up by the Bureau of the Budget.

Exactly how much new military construction can now be authorized was not immediately clear although the defense components had planned to award $99.5 million in construction business between Sept. 6 and Oct. 6.

Fraternity System Rallies, Greeks Plan Year Ahead

By PAT FRANCIS

For many years, there has been a difference of opinion between the Greek societies and the independents on the UMass campus. Last fall, the DAILY COLLEGIAN editorialized:

"Many UMass Greeks concerned about the future of their system admit they are in trouble: popularity, prestige, power -- in short, the entire system -- is on the wane.

"...Division between North Pleasant Street and the rest of the campus has become more than one of purely physical location. Why? ... Two factors may hold the key."

"... fraternities have lost all concepts of well-defined goals. Trying to compare actual fraternity life with ideals expressed in pledge handbooks is a farce..."

"The second factor (is) that Greeks, once student leaders, are falling to the rear. It appears that the fraternity man has not kept pace with the American student ... responsible Greek influence has declined..."

Since then, the Greek societies have been consciously working to improve their "image", and have been concentrating on trying to improve relations with the rest of the campus.

Particular attention has been given to academics. The Greek men's average was higher than the overall men's average for last year. Part of this is attributed to the study halls held at the houses each evening. During this period, pledges are required to go to the houses or go to the library to study with their big brothers.

In addition, brothers have been voluntarily tutoring pledges and other brothers who find themselves weak in a subject.

In addition to the academics, fraternities are becoming more service-oriented. Most houses now sponsor fund-raising activities for charitable organizations. Pledge classes are generally assigned to some sort of service project, instead of the traditional "Hell Night" and paddlings.

According to Bob Lewis, of Sigma Phi Epsilon, Interfraternity Council Rush Chairman, the pledge handbooks were, for the most part composed a few years ago, and since then, the system has undergone vast changes. The IFC is working on new booklets which will point up the differences.

According to Lewis, the basic concept of fraternities, to build and maintain lasting friendships has not changed. A fraternity is a place where 50 or 60 guys live, and become close to each other, because they care about what happens to each other. This is different than in dormitories, where students might get to know only the people on their floor.

Fraternities are frequently charged with discrimination. Lewis rejects this notion. He noted that a fraternity is composed of 50 or 60 individuals, each of whom has a different background, and has a different philosophy. As much as houses are being discriminatory in choosing their members, potential members are also being discriminatory in choosing the house they want to pledge.

"Within the Greek system on this campus, you go from one extreme to the other. With so much variety among houses, there has to be something for everyone who is interested in pledging," adds Lewis.

Although Greeks reject the idea that houses are stereotyped (a house is composed of individuals), certain houses are stronger in some areas than others -- for example, one house may be sports-oriented, another academically, and still another may be emphasizing involvement.

The reason for this is that fraternities are a small part of society -- a society in which people of like interests tend to associate, and enjoy each other's company.

The Greek system on the UMass campus is becoming harder on itself. Fraternities are setting higher standards of behavior for their members than ever before. Rowdy or disorderly conduct is frowned on as harmful to the "image". The "good time guys" are beginning to evolve into serious citizens, concerned with the society around them.

According to Lewis, many people have preconceived ideas about what "the Greek way" is like. "We wish that people would take the time to find out for themselves what it's like, instead of listening to secondhand information."

This year, fraternities will offer freshmen a look at the inside, in addition to the smokers and other rush activities second semester. Chapters will have periodic open weekends, when freshmen can visit the houses. Plans may include parties, sporting events, or just "hanging around - maybe watching the football game on Sunday afternoons". In some houses, according to facilities, the freshmen may be able to stay overnight.

Traditional upperclass rush is Monday, September 22.

Tiny Tim Will Marry

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - Tiny Tim, the long-haired, falsetto-voiced entertainer, said Thursday he would marry a 17-year-old New Jersey girl Dec. 25-Christmas Day-and he presented her with a diamond engagement ring during the taping of a television program.

The singer confirmed details of his engagement to Vicki Budinger of Haddonfield, N.J., during the taping of Johnny Carson's "To - night" show to be seen late Thursday night on NBC.

Tiny Tim gave "Miss Vicki" as he called his fiancee, what appeared to be a round diamond that he said came from Tiffany's.

Introducing her to Carson, Tiny Tim explained Miss Budinger's silence by saying "Miss Vicki is so awed by this."

Asked if he planned to have children, the ukelele-plucker said "Well, that's one of the main reasons for marriage."

More News on Moratorium

By ROSE L. MILLER
Staff Reporter

A proposed "national moratorium for colleges on October 15 to consolidate public sentiment to be expressed in favor of withdrawing troops from Vietnam immediately," will produce much debate between the tri-partite community of many college campuses in coming weeks.

At UMass the three arenas of debate are the Student Senate, the Faculty Senate, and student social action groups. A bill remaining on the Student Senate agenda from last semester calls for a two day moratorium of classes the first week of October. The Faculty Senate, at its first meeting, heard mention of the upcoming peace move.

The King Council has become the main coordinator for the moratorium on campus.

Gil Salk, Executive Secretary of the King Council, hopes to see a Student Senate bill with more forceful language on the agenda. Salk, in a COLLEGIAN interview, explained, he "wants to see classes called off by the Student Senate." He stated that he had spoken to Provost Oswald Tippo about class cancellation and was told that classes could not be called by the administration.

Dean of Students William F. Field, talking to COLLEGIAN, said he thought the jurisdiction in calling off classes rested with the Faculty Senate. Commenting on the idea of having a moratorium for peace, Dean Field said he was "skeptical over the kind of support the 18,000 students would show to the Vietnam issue." Elaborating on his skepticism he said he "would be in favor of a moratorium having a larger scope, perhaps a two day moratorium where students and faculty would talk over a whole range of topics of importance to them." Such areas as poverty, ecology and racism were mentioned as possible topics by Dean Field.

Gil Salk responding to Dean Field's desire for a moratorium of a broader scope, said the King Council would not be opposed to such a move.

Continued discussion of the purposes and plans of a National Vietnam Moratorium will be heard on campus. Salk expects a strongly worded bill calling for a cancellation of classes at the Student Senate's session Wednesday. Further mention is likely in the next Faculty Senate meeting Thursday. Meanwhile, the King Council begins to go about gaining support and publicizing the moratorium on campus.

School of Ed. Offers Seminar

Dwight W. Allen, dean of the School of Education, will offer an informal, one-shot, noontime seminar on "Innovations in Education" next Monday, September 22. The session is scheduled for Room 227 in the School of Education.

Dean Allen has been a spokesman for educational change for at least the past decade. He has developed or influenced certain specific educational tools that are rapidly growing in use throughout the country--such practices as modular scheduling, differentiated staffing, and performance curriculum.

WESTERN MASS. MEETS HIGH DRAFT CALL

By NEIL PERRY

Is politics behind the announced troop reduction in Vietnam?

Some Western Massachusetts selective service officials are beginning to wonder because draft calls in the area and throughout the state have jumped significantly since President Richard Nixon announced a systematic, limited withdrawal of troops from Vietnam earlier this year.

"I think President Nixon is just feeling the public with his heavily publicized troop reduction," James Faulkner, chairman of the Hampshire County Draft Board, said Wednesday. "We have had the largest draft calls since 1964 this summer, at a time when the government is talking about reducing its armed forces."

Col. Paul Feeney, head of the selective service system in Massachusetts acknowledged Wednesday that draft calls have risen sharply throughout the state this summer. "In Massachusetts, 609 men were drafted in September and the state has a quota of 826 men for October," Col Feeney said. "In 1968, we supplied 386 men in October, while in October 1967, we called 290 men."

On Wednesday, Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird announced in Washington that draft calls throughout the nation will be reduced in Vietnam and an overall 20,000 man cutback in U.S. armed forces strength. Earlier this year, the administration said 25,000 troops had been returned from Vietnam, while draft calls substantially increased in Massachusetts.

Since 1964, the Hampshire County Draft Board monthly draft quota has been about six or eight men, Faulkner noted. This jumped to 58 men in July, 28 in August, 19 in September and 30 in October. "With the publicity about troop reductions, parents of potential draftees have assumed that the draft calls would also be reduced and that their sons stand a better education or take permanent employment," Faulkner said. "This has been a false hope and the reasons behind the increased draft calls are as mystifying to members of the draft board as they are to the parents."

Springfield's six draft boards have an October quota of 69 men and, while no figures were available, officials indicated that the October call is significantly above October calls of 1967 and 68.

The Franklin County draft board in Greenfield was hit with an October quota of 32 men this year. The board, with a normal call of five to seven men, has had quotas of 29 men in June, four in September this summer.

Holyoke and Chicopee draft boards, with October calls of 47 and 22 respectively, report no significant increase in manpower requirements this summer, and the draft call for Berkshire County is 27 this October. The boards have had a monthly average of 5 draftees.

In Westfield, Draft Board Chairman Charles R. Kupek noted that his city has an October draft call of 12 men, with eight men drafted in September and four in August. He added however that the Westfield board has called for 74 pre-induction physicals this next month, the highest since the Korean War.

Col. Feeney could not explain the rapid increase in draft calls in Massachusetts this summer, but noted that the state has a disportionate number of draft eligible men in the older age groups - 19 to 23 - which has contributed to the rise in draft quotas in some areas.

House Votes: Abolish Elec. College

By JOHN BECKLER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House approved a far-reaching constitutional change Thursday that would abolish the Electoral College and provide for electing the president by direct popular vote.

The House took its historic step on a 339-70 roll-call vote, with the proposal winning much more than the required two-thirds majority.

Before it can become an amendment to the Constitution, it must get through the Senate by a two-thirds margin and be ratified by 38 states - both formidable obstacles.

In any event, it appears unlikely the ratification process could be completed in time to put the new procedure into effect by the 1972 election.

But seven months ago when the House Judiciary Committee began hearings on electoral reform, few people thought such a sweeping proposal would even reach the House floor.

Priority Expenditures

The great budget battle is just about over for another year at UMass as the university, for the fifth year in a row, has emerged on the short end in its struggle with Beacon Hill over operating expenses. Instead of the requested 49 million dollars, the university must now be operated under only 38 million dollars. It is incomprehensible that a university, which is teaching and turning out tomorrow's leaders, should now be able to spend only 16 dollars per student. Because of the money shortage, there are not enough teachers and equipment – and consequently many courses have been cancelled. People come here to learn, and yet it is becoming virtually impossible!

Another problem is the dormitory situation. In rooms intended for two people, we find three. The infirmaries are now being used as part time dorms! A lab building is currently under construction for graduate students. It seems to me that if money is limited, what funds there are should be used for dorms and equipment for both undergrad and graduate students.

It is not necessary that to leave more money for UMass, welfare or poverty programs should be cut -- but how about a little less road building and such?

In the next four years, about 6,000 students will be ready for this university. But -- will the university be ready for them?

Campus Comment

Promise

"Chairman of the Student Senate Services Committee, Mark Brenner, questioned Dean Fields as to why such an error causing a terrible hardship (triples) could be allowed to take place." This excerpt from an article in the Collegian of Sept. 17 seems ludicrous in view of the fact that Mark Brenner was one of the members of the University Housing Committee. Has this committee died?

The original committee consisted of five students and five members of the administration. Unfortunately, most of the administration members are no longer available. Dean Noffsinger, Associate Dean of Students, Jack Wells, Head of Housing, and Mr. Kittle of the Treasurer's Office are among the missing, leaving the committee with Mr. Stockweather from the computer center, and M. West who is the Northeast area Co-ordinator. Yet there is no excuse for not replacing these representatives and continuing with the committee's work.

Admittedly, the committee has accomplished little. It's goals, however, are too important to be discarded. These goals included a thorough study of the housing situation, determining if any other schools have a better system, the construction of a comprehensive report on room deposits, and finally, a report on the triples. The concensus was the triples were to be avoided at all costs.

As noted, progress was minimal - one school in Connecticut was contacted. No one seems to remember if their system is any better, or even what school is in question. It was decided that the room deposit is a necessary evil.

Nevertheless, one other product of the Housing Committee which is too valuable to be shelved is a plan to alleviate some of the stress caused by triples. This is a three part plan which calls for (1) the counselors in double rooms to either choose a roommate or have one assigned to them, (2) the utilization of a new barrack or bunking system, and (3) the conversion of some of the very large utility rooms in Southwest into living quarters.

Perhaps these suggestions are totally unrealistic or impossible to implement, but that is not the question here. The question is: why has this committee been allowed to die when it at least produced some suggestions? As the situation stands now, the administration has completely forgotten its promise to the Committee to at all costs avoid triples. Where is the justifiable wrath of the Committee? Where is the Committee?

Restoration

Last spring the Legislature of the Commonwealth, acting on the recommendation of Governor Sargent, cut several million dollars from the University budget. This prompted the Provost to offer his resignation. Simultaneously, the majority of the students contributed time, money and signatures, circulated petitions, and ran ads in state newspapers. Apparently in vain - the money was not restored to the budget.

What I'm asking at this time, is what is being done to restore this much needed money to the budget?

Some facts, which I hope will alarm students concerning this budget cut is that part of what was cut was the "03" money, therefore there can be little or no student workers in these departments.

Another way the cut affects us - some departments - e.g. Geology - have increased their lab. fees as much as 4.75 to make students pay for field trip busses heretofore supplied by the University.

These are just two examples of how the budget cut is hurting us.

Now, what are we, the students going to do about it?

Junk Instead of Junk Mail

WASHINGTON - A lot of people are being shaken up these days by receiving unsolicited plastic credit cards. In the past the consumer had the option whether to ask for credit or not. But now in the great battle for the hearts and dollars of the American customer, the banks, oil companies and hotel chains are shoving their credit cards at you whether you want them or not.

It isn't just the spectre of a wife or teen-ager receiving a credit card and going berserk that bothers most American breadwinners. It's the principle of the thing, and where will it all end? What is to prevent a company that sends unsolicited credit cards to your home from sending merchandise instead?

I don't believe it is too farfetched to see this happening in a few years.

You come home, and there on your front lawn is a complete dining room set with table, 12 chairs and cabinet. Attached to a leg of the table is a note:

"Greetings. We are happy to inform you that we consider you an excellent credit risk and, to show our faith in you, we are leaving this dining room set on your lawn. Our credit reports on you indicate that you favor Colonial furniture, and we have chosen this particular mahogany wood which we know will go well with the rest of your furnishings. If for some reason this particular dining room set does not meet your requirements, you may return it to our warehouse within 10 days, and you will not be charged for it. If it is not returned, we will assume that we made the right choice, and we shall start billing you monthly."

Or you could wake up in the morning and find parked outside your door a new "Fire-eater" with the following letter taped to the windshield:

"Congratulations,

"You are now the owner of a new Fire-eater, the fastest, most comfortable, economical automobile on the road. Because of your high credit rating, we have taken the liberty of registering this car in your name with the State Vehicle Bureau.

"If for any reason you change your mind and decide you don't want to be one of the 'with it' people, please call this number and we will have the car taken away, at no cost to you except for the towing charges.

"Also, if you do not accept this exceptional buy, you must go down to the State Vehicle Bureau and inform them of this decision. Otherwise we will start charging you interest beginning next week."

The final indignity would be to receive a registered letter from a development company which read:

"Dear Sir,

"We're happy to inform you that you are now the proud owner of a new ranch house in Paradise Acres. This extraordinary home (the deed is enclosed) has three bedrooms, two and a half baths, a playroom and completely equipped kitchen and will be ready for you to move into within two weeks.

"A check on your credit rating shows that you can easily afford this remarkable buy, and we have taken the liberty of deducting from your bank account the small down payment.

"If we don't hear from you by registered mail within the next 36 hours, we will assume that you will be joining us at Paradise Acres. On the other hand, if you return the deed, then we ask you to contact our lawyers so some equitable arrangement can be worked out for our time and inconvenience.

"Cheers,"

Kennedy Scores Nixon On Vietnam Policy

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy said Thursday night, President Nixon has failed to change American policy in Vietnam, primarily because the United States remains shackled to a "corrupt and oppressive" Saigon government.

"The harsh fact of the matter is that despite the election of 1968, despite the promises of a new President and some new officials, despite the new rhetoric, the war in Vietnam is virtually unchanged," said the Massachusetts Democrat.

"When measured against what must be done for peace, we have made only token troop withdrawals on the battlefield," said Kennedy, "more an exercise in politics and improvisation, while the level of fighting and casualties continues."

Kennedy said American policy has remained unchanged because the United States has not shown enough willingness to compromise at the Paris peace talks.

"In Saigon a corrupt and repressive government has refused to allow the many non-Communist forces of South Vietnam that seek peace to share in power," he said.

"And no talk of concessions, no hints of compromise, can cover up the fact that we have not been willing to consider the continued control of the Thieu regime as a negotiable question; and that as long as we remain unmoved on this issue there can be no peaceful solution," he said.

Arlo Guthrie Appears at BU

Thousands of college students are expected to lunch with folk singer Arlo Guthrie at an unusual Sunday afternoon, September 28, concert on the Tufts University varsity football field in Medford.

The outdoor concert-lunch, arranged by the student-run Yellow Crayon Productions at Tufts, will begin at 1 p.m. Students will bring their own food, although concession stands will be open for those who, as one student put it, "want to eat out." In the event of rain, the concert-lunch will be held in Cousens Gymnasium on the campus.

Guthrie, popular narrative folk singer, is the star of the movie, "Alice's Restaurant."

Tickets, at $3.00, are available by calling 876-2400 or writing Yellow Crayon Entertainment Commission, P.O. Box 55, Tufts University, Medford, Mass. 02153.

Carlos Montoya Returns to UMass

The Philadelphia Woodwind Quintet is the second major ensemble on this year's Chamber Music Series. All first-chair Philadelphia Orchestra members, this distinguished group makes its debut on this campus on Sunday afternoon, November 9 at 3:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Carlos Montoya, one of the most popular figures on the concert stage will return to the University for two concerts in December as part of this season's Celebrity Series.

NewmanCenter Plans Retreat

Often the word retreat leads people to believe that those participating in the exercise are moving away from others and the world. A retreat is a time for reflection and insight into yourself and others.

Rev. Andrew Comeau, C.SS.R., will conduct this year's Open Retreat. Fr. Comeau was born in Weymouth, Mass. and ordained a Redemptorist priest in 1960. Since then, he has continued his studies and worked as a parish priest in the U.S. and Canada.

As a member of the Redemptorist Mission Band, he has preached extensively up and down the East Coast and has experience in the hospital apostolate and the Home Mass program. The Fr. has a talent for the guitar which he will use during the retreat.

Fr. Comeau will be introduced at all the Masses on Sunday and will speak at the daily Masses Monday through Wednesday at 8:00, 12:15 & 5 p.m. In the evening, at 7:30 the Fr. will have a program in the chapel followed by a discussion. An invitation is extended to all on campus to attend any or all of these sessions.

If waiting in line for a University Registration or parking stickers isn't enough, try this one on for size. A University sponsored movie, "The Fox," run for the enjoyment of the students caused this line at 6:30 last evening. The movie, for the "mature adult" might just have set the record for a pleasurable wait. Perhaps if registration were rated X, students would enjoy it?

Dartmouth Has Dorm Autonomy

Dartmouth College has initiated an open house policy similar to the proposal for dorm autonomy which the UMass Board of Trustees will vote on Monday.

The Dartmouth Trustees ruled Wednesday that students can set their own dorm social regulations, providing "they conduct themselves in a lawful and orderly way."

The Board said that the adoption of "home rule", however, will come up for review in several months.

On Monday, the UMass Board of Trustees will vote on a student initiated proposal to create "dorm autonomy". This would mean that each dorm would be able to create its own open house regulations, apart from any general University set of standards.

Presumably, this would result in 24 hour open house in many dorms.

Student Senate Secretary Pat Baharry has voice her belief that the plan has a reasonable chance to pass the board, and admits that she is pleased by the manner in which the Board has treated the issue thus far.

Early last week, the Board's student matters subcommittee recommended that the full Board pass the plan, and many student leaders, reasoning that the Board rarely overturns the decisions of its subcommittees, will OK the proposal.

O ther student initiated proposals which will come before the Board Monday include a new alcoholic beverages policy and a coed Greenough House, effective Spring semester.

MLK Plans Moratorium

On October 15, the Martin Luther King Council plans a War Moratorium in conjunction with the National movement to protest the war in Vietnam. The stress is being placed on this as being a mass movement rather then an ideological congrontation.

The King Council is requesting that the Administration cancel all classes for that day so that any student or faculty member who wishes may participate, In case of failure, the Council will contact each faculty member personally and urge them to cancel their classes. Students are encouraged to boycott all classes which are not cancelled. In addition, council members will contact all local high schools asking them to hold special assemblies pertaining to the war in Vietnam and to devote regular class time to discussion of the war.

One of the suggestions made at Wednesday night's meeting was planting a "Tree of Life" on the Amherst Common, one in October, two in November, three in December, with Gil Salk's added hope that "we don't create a forest."

Other suggestions brought up at the meeting were, a prospective march from Amherst to North Hampton carrying a casket of paper mache and candles, and ringing the church bells in Amherst every hour. The Council will staff a literature table starting next week through the 15th on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays in the Union.

KEPECHNE AUTOPSY HEARING NOW SET FOR SEPTEMBER 29

A hearing was ordered Thursday on a request for an autopsy on Mary Jo Kopechne's body after Dist. Atty. Edmund Dinis of Massachusetts said blood was in her mouth and nose when she was found dean in Sen. Edward M Kennedy's car.

Dinis , in a four-page amendment to his original autopsy petition, said the presence of blood "may or may not have been consistent with death by drowning."

He also disclosed that possible blood stains were found on the white shirt Miss Kopechne was wearing at the time of the accident July 19.

Common Pleas Judge Bernard C. Brominski, who had demanded more solid evidence from Dinis to show that an autopsy would resolve "the doubt and suspicion surrounding the death," set the hearing for Sept. 29 at 10 a.m.

Dinis said an autopsy should "be performed as soon as is practicable, time being of the essence."

The 28-year-old secretary was found dead after Kennedy's car plunged off a narrow wooden bridge into a pond on Chappaquiddick Island off the Massachusetts coast.

She was buried in a small Catholic cemetery in Larksville in the coal region of northeastern Pennsylvania.

Dr. Donald R. Mills, associate medical examiner of Dukes County, Mass., ruled death was caused by asphyxiation from immersion drowning. He had examined the body only externally, about eight hours after death.

Mills refused to comment on the disclosures of the blood. The undertaker who handled the case also refused comment.

District attorney Dinis said, "If the autopsy should disclose that her death resulted from some other cause than drowning, the Inquest may then proceed in the direction appropriate in the light of the information thus revealed."

The Massachusetts Supreme Court postponed the start of the inquest in order to review the procedural ground rules for the inquest. Attorneys for Kennedy argue that constitutional issues are involved regarding the right to cross-examine witnesses. This right had been refused them by District Court Judge James A. Boyle of Edgartowa, Mass., who will preside at the inquest.

Dinis told Brominski in his newest petition that Kennedy's report of the accident to police, and his televised broadcast to the nation a week later, "differed" and "are silent on many important details of the accident and the events immediately preceding the following it."

Union Chief Meany Testifies Against Judge Haynsworth

AFL-CIO chief George Meany testified Thursday that Judge Clement F. Haynsworth is unfit to serve on the Supreme Court.

Meany said the U. S. Circuit Court judge is antilabor, indifferent to the hopes of Negroes and has a lack of ethical standards.

Meany assailed President Nixon's nominee after Haynsworth was endorsed by attorney Leonard E. Walsh of New York chairman of the America n Bar Association's committee of federal judges.

Walsh said Haynsworth "is a man of impeccable integrity" and that his professional qualifications are "at the top."

The Senate Judiciary Committee heard this conflicting testimony on its third day of hearings into the nomination. With about 20 witnesses lined up, an early vote does not appear in sight.

The AFL-CIO leader spoke of Haynsworth's deciding vote in an appeals court decision that Deering Milliken could shut down a plant in Darlington, S.C., rather than deal with the textile workers union.

Meany said Haynsworth should have disqualified himself from the 1933 case because his former law firm had represented a Deering Milliken mill and the vending machine company he partly owned was doing business with the textile combine.

Redmen Trek to Maine for 1969 Curtain Raiser

By PETER PASCARELLI
Sports Editor

Saturday afternoon in the northern reaches of Maine, the UMass football team will unveil its 1969 product, a product that is radically different from the one that finished out last year's dismal 2-8 season.

Seven sophomores will dot the Redman starting lineup, the most first year men to start a UMass football season since 1962. And they will be going against a veteran Maine team, that boasts 28 returning lettermen, and a tradition that has UMass-Maine games being cliffhangers.

Coach Vic Fusia expects the same tomorrow. "Maine is going to be tough. They have a lot of veterans returning and they are always tough at home. With the exception of the last two years, every game with Maine since I have been coach has been decided by a few points. This year should be no different."

The seven Redmen who will be seeing their first varsity action will be tackle Bob Donlin and center Ron Marino on offense and cornerbacks Bill Bush and Bob Cabrelli, linebackers Dennis Collins and Joe Sabulis and end Curt Bristol on defense.

The rest of the lineup will be manned by familiar names to UMass football. Starting offensively will be a veteran backfield of Tim Adams at quarterback, Pat Scavone and Jerry Grasso at halfbacks and co-captain Ed Sarno at fullback. Fusia will probably also use a bunch of soph backs at times, with Mike Sawyer, Dick Cummings and Angelo DiNardo being the most likely.

Backup quarterbacks Mike Marchev and Ken Hughes also could see action. Fusia has confidence in both saying, "I have been impressed by the way both Hughes and Marchev have moved the team in practices. I wouldn't be afraid to use either."

The rest of the offense will include converted defensive back and kick return artist Steve Parnell at split end, with Jim Long also expected to see action. Big Nick McGarry will hold the tight end spot, while Pierre Marchando and Bruce Fulton will start at guard.

Dick Donlin will start at tackle, thus giving the Redmen a brother combination at the tackles. Mike Cooney is a doubtful participant due to injuries.

The defense will also feature a brother act. Paul and Mark Toner will be side by side on the left side of the line. Other defensive starters will include UMass record holding pass interceptor Steve Rogers, co-captain the Redmen's only returning Yankee Conference all-star Tom York, tackle Bill Sroka and linebacker John Maclean.

The defensive depth will be weakened by the loss of linebacker John Farrelly who will not make the trip due to a thigh injury.

A big plus on the UMass side may be the placekicking of sophomore Dennis Gagnon. The sophomore booter is a long range field goal artist and could be a factor in a close game. Rogers will do the punting.

Fusia, when asked about any worries he may have with so many sophomores starting replied, "It doesn't bother me too much. I think they're pretty darn good football players or I would not be using them."

The UMass coach, starting his ninth season, is wary of a potent Maine passing attack that includes quarterback Dave Wing and end Gene Benner. Benner holds most school receiving records and needs just 17 passes for 359 yards to set New England records in these departments. Fusia also has respect for a speedy Bear ground game that features the running of Bob Hamilton, Dan Sullivan and Steve Naccara.

However, Fusia believes his team has a little something to prove after the unmentionable season of a year ago. "This club has returned to redeem itself as a respectable football team. They have shown that willingness in practice.

"This is a conference game. We know it is a must game. We must play our game to win. I think we have a lot of boys who have come back with just one idea: to play more than respectable football and to win."

What?? Lonny Does It Again

BOSTON (AP) - Pitcher Jim Lonberg of the Boston Red Sox has suffered severe lacerations of his left foot in a freak accident outside his home and may be finished for the season, a team spokesman said Thursday. The accident occurred Wednesday night when Lonborg drove home after a game against the Baltimore Orioles was rained out. He slipped when he jumped out and started racing across the parking lot toward his apartment building.

The mishap was the latest in a long series of troubles which have plagued the tall right-hander since he won the Cy Young award in the pennant-winning year of 1967 with a 22-9 season.

An off-season skiing injury followed by other ailments hampered his effectiveness in 1968, when he compiled only a 6-10 record. He again has been plagued by a series of injuries this season, and has a 7-11 mark.

Can he come back? Does the sun shine? is the Pope Catholic? Is Siro Agnew wicked?

Unquestionably last week was poor. A 6-4 record is akin to complete failure. And the poems were the worst thing in print since the last dining commons menu.

Free University Grows and Develops

By MARK SILVERMAN
News Editor

The establishment of a Free University City moved into high gear this weekend, as three more geodesic domes were constructed, and plans for the group's first programs were formalized.

Boosted by a $2000 Student Senate appropriation and a $250 class of '72 contribution last week, the City put up three more domes and began construction on two more Saturday and Sunday.

South Coast, a Texas group of architects and students are slated to construct a large plastic tent to greatly increase the "indoor" space of the city. This group will also work on several sculpture projects which will use the environment as effective art.

Four programs are being organized to begin the "intellectual" function of the City. These programs include a drug discussion to be led by Health Services director Dr. Robert W. Gage, a class in sexuality, family planning and pregnancy conducted by Jane Zapka, a seminar for "conscientiously dissatisfied people" lead by Dr. Havans, and a three day workshop on liberation through sexuality conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Bill Wilkinson.

Also, Jon Gerard will conduct an experimental Yom Kipper service today, and the Learning Resources Center will send a team to the City to organize learning interviews in the near future.

Several faculty members have volunteered to conduct their classes at the Free University, and this, according to City spokesmen, is one of the best things that can happen "both for the City and UMass."

The UMass administration, while issuing no formal statement on the City, has indicated that, for at least the time being, they will do nothing to block the Free University.

Assistant Dean of Students Gerald Scanlon explains, "Up to this point there is no reason why they shouldn't be permitted to go ahead unless they interfere with the rights of other students, or the operation of the University, or present a health or safety hazard."

The University Health Service is reportedly willing to cooperate with residents of the City, and have made their staff available to aide 30 first aid volunteers.

But the State Board of Health is reportedly concerned with the City's sanitation facilities, and may act to break up the Free University in the future, if it feels the facilities there are substandard.

UMass Secretary Robert Mccartney said Friday, "If that happens there is nothing we can do."

Meanwhile, a group of rent strikers from Amherst are reportedly planning to construct a "tent city" near the Free University. Spokesmen for that group stress that they have similar goals, but City spokesman Tim Ney says, "There is a difference, they want confrontation - to be arrested."

Nixon's Policies Undercut Wallace Strenth in South

WASHINGTON (AP) - Republican leaders in the majority of Deep South states say President Nixon's policies are effectively undercutting a possible 1972 presidential bid by former Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama.

Elsewhere in the country, activity by Wallace's American Independent party is minimal, though some groups are planning 1970 state and congressional races.

In more than half the states, Wallace supporters will again have to resort to expensive time-consuming petition drives to win places on the ballots for 1970 and 1972.

Wallace was on all state ballots in the 1968 election.

Other findings of an Associated Press survey showed political leaders regard Wallace's current strength as well under his 1968 showing in almost every state except Alabama and Mississippi, which he carried by large margins in 1968 over Nixon and Democratic nominee Hubert H. Humphrey.

But Republican leaders in Georgia and Arkansas, both carried by Wallace last year feel the Nixon administration's policies are having the effect of diminishing the former governor's basic support.

"In areas such as fiscal responsibility, Vietnam war, law and order, I feel the Nixon administration is certainly undercutting the Wallace sentiment in the state," Arkansas state GOP Chairman Odell Pollard said.

But Pollard said the administration's school desegregation policies differ little from those of Democratic administrations, a view similar to that reported in Louisiana, also a Wallace state, where observers report the school question dominates all other political factors.

Republican leaders feel also that President Nixon is undercutting Wallace in Tennessee, the Carolinas and Virginia-carried by Nixon in the election-plus Texas-carried by Humphrey-and conservative states such as Nebraska, Arizona and Idaho.

Wallace is reported considering a bid for the Alabama governorship again in 1970 against Gov. Albert P. Brewer, who succeeded the late Mrs. Wallace last year.

Supporters of Wallace are planning or considering the running of candidates in state and local elections next year in South Carolina, Louisiana, Indiana, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Idaho, Connecticut, New Jersey and Minnesota.

The party's chances in South Carolina received a boost last month when 12 Republicans in Charleston announced they were joining the state's pro-Wallace American Party.

But only widely isolated defections of minor personages have occurred elsewhere.

In Illinois, however, the AIP appears to have defected from Wallace.

Mrs. John Nelson, AIP Midwest chairman, and state chairman Arthur Kelly announced after the election the Illinois party was "shedding Wallace" because "he is a segregationist and we want to build our party on a more substantial and meaningful candidate."

The published deadline for the last day for undergraduate students to add or drop a course without record is today. However, since a number of faculty and students will not be present on campus today, the deadline has been extended until tomorrow, September 23.

Student Leaders Divided on Trustees' Membership Issue

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

The recent legislative action by the Massachusetts lawmakers allowing a UMass student membership on the Board of Trustees has received divided opinion from student leaders on campus.

In separate interviews with the DAILY COLLEGIAN last week, Student Senate President Bruce Balboni and Vice President Cindy Olken expressed opposition to the August motion, while Senators Bill Perkins and Pat Beharry felt optimistic.

Speaking at the President's Convocation last Wednesday Balboni stated, "I hope the student body will reject this proposal and see it as the tokenism it is."

Balboni said he feels this way because, due to the way the Board is organized, one student's vote would be "meaningless." The Senate President pointed out that the Board functions by "hashing out all matters (in committees) till there is total agreement," so that one vote would be of little importance.

Balboni also stated that the only good to come from the State House move would be the allowing of a student to sit in on the closed, executive session of the board. Formerly student leaders had been allowed as regular members of the informal sessions.

The Senate leader said that the move might be good for other state universities, but not UMass-Amherst and Boston. What might have been done, Balboni feels, was to look at the whole question of whether or not a board of trustees is the right way to run a university. "Maybe we shouldn't have it at all," he said.

"I resent the political mileage he (Sargent) is trying to get from this," Balboni said. He added, though, that Sargent "thinks he is sincerely giving them (students) a voice, but he is not."

Though he felt the whole idea was "not a good thing" and "won't be a major breakthrough," who did he think should get the job when it is made available? "It should be a student government leader popularly elected by the student body," he concluded.

Vice-President Cindy Olken agrees with her fellow Senate officer. "It's just not realistic at all. One student can't be expected to represent three different campuses (Boston, Amherst, and Worcester Med School)," she declared.

Like Balboni, Miss Olken pointed out that most decision s are not reached at the general board level but at committees, stating "There should be students there."

"The Board likes to listen, but I just can't believe one student will have that much influence," she added.

Miss Olken was not sure whether the student who is to sit on the Board should be a popularly elected leader, but "somebody informed," anyway.

Senator Bill Perkins feels just the opposite saying, "I like it, and am behind it 100%."

Perkins feels that Balboni's criticism of the move as "tokenism" is inaccurate because, "anything short of a majority is tokenism."

The move makes one student a "permanent part of the board," and depending on the type of student elected, he could "use his membership to support student programs. This student could be in a good position to demand action on issues."

Perkins stated that he feels the student who finally gets the job should be a popularly elected student body president if there becomes one.

"The qualities of the individual elected must be different than a class president," he added. He must have "statesman character. This student must hold his own with the legislature and board and give his utmost to the students," Perkins concluded.

Senator Pat Beharry agreed with Perkins stating that her initial reaction was "extremely good. The Board is willing to listen to students as responsible

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

WASHINGTON (AP) - Job openings for Negroes in occupations controlled by labor unions are widening government estimates show, but not nearly fast enough to satisfy black militants.

Figures compiled by The Associated Press from Labor Department reports indicate the much-criticized AFL-CIO building trades unions are among those making the swiftest progress toward integration on the job.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield proposed yesterday an immediate ban on increases in U.S. personnel, military or civilian, in the nations of Southeast Asia.

DA NANG (AP) - The U.S. Air Force and the South Vietnamese government opened investigations yesterday into the collision of an Air Force jet fighter and an Air Vietnam passenger plane that claimed 77 lives.

The accident occurred Saturday about 500 feet above the DaNang airfield as both planes were making landing approaches.

WASHINGTON (AP) - A presidential task force study calling for disclosure of government test data on consumer products was released yesterday by consumer advocate Ralph Nader, who asserted it is being suppressed.

The report by the Task Force on Product Test Information calls for release to consumers of information gained by government testing of a wide variety of products.

SAIGON (AP) - Gen Creighton W. Abrams, U.S. commander in Vietnam, may be subpoenaed by the defense to testify in the case of six Green Berets charged with murdering a Vietnamese, military sources said yesterday. A decision concerning Abram's appearance has not been confirmed, the sources said, but they added that reports about his involvement in the explosive case make a subpoena "a strong possibility."

"The Only Way to Progress Is Through Disagreement"

By JILL WALLACH
Staff Reporter

In the inner sanctums of Fort Lederle, the keeper of the fort, Pres. John Lederle, even as he sat relaxed and friendly amid his paperwork, reiterated what he has stressed many times in recent weeks. "Students have to run their own lives. I am disappointed because some students fail to recognize that they are here to study. Others let themselves be pushed around by the extreme element. Students should stand up for their rights. They have to care enough to do something."

On other topics, Lederle had these comments to make.

Campus disorders in the coming year: "The only way to progress is through disagreement. This is the era of the demonstration. But I don't think there will be any significant decline or increase in disorders."

Retirement: "I hope not only to teach, but also to do some research in public administration and the problem of the organization of higher education."

Budgets: "Massachusetts has a great potential. But we are still 50th in the nation in aid to education. We have no where to go but up. We must have a positive attitude and continue to point out what we need. Where we are hurting is in admissions, financial aid, and housing. We are understaffed."

Current housing problems: "The fact that there are so many triples on campus bothers me. Last year there were many vacancies. The discrepancies can never be balanced out.

Poll on Vietnam Moratorium

During the next week a poll is to be taken of the student body and faculty members concerning the Vietnam moratorium to be held on October 15, 1969. The poll will be conducted by a group of students and faculty with the cooperation of the Martin Luther King Council. The distribution will take place in the student dorms and the department offices. The Student Senate and Faculty Senate will also be asked to vote on this issue.

Miss Beharry feels the move is a "building point, a way in which they (students) can legally express a vote."

This student will have "great potential," and must be one "deeply involved" in government added Miss Beharry.

"I don't think it should end here, however. The Board was already listening beforehand. The next step is to put students on committees," the female Senator concluded.

Orientation Program for New N.E.S. Tutors Begins Tonight

On September 16 a meeting was held to list the volunteers interested in tutoring in the economically deprived areas in Springfield. Approximately 300 students attended this meeting held by the Northern Education Service (N.E.S.) Coordinating Committee.

The meeting involved a brief description of the physical aspects of the program. These included the time involved, the transportation situation and a description of the differing tutoring centers in Springfield that tutors may be assigned.

In the program each volunteer will be required to tutor at least once a week, The N.E.S. bus leaves the university twice daily Monday thru Thursday at 2:30 and 6:30 p.m. Traveling to Springfield takes up most of the time, never the less a volunteer can usually manage to spend a hour with a tutee.

The N.E.S. program also involves Saturday activities. These Cultural Enrichment Programs involved field trips to the university and other interesting spots in the area last semester. The Saturday program is considered to be the most exciting of the whole program since it allows more time to bring both children and student together. Although the regular tutors usually went along on these field trips there is a need for volunteers specifically to work on and run the Cultural Enrichment program at UMass.

At the Tuesday meeting, a formal orientation program was announced. This will occur this week, 22 - 25, at the Student Union at 7:00 p.m. Volunteers are requested to attend this orientation to acclimate volunteers to the problems of tutoring. Students wishing to sign up are welcomed. The orientation is scheduled so a volunteer can attend the night of the day he plans to tutor.

The N.E.S. program is sponsored by the Martin Luther King Jr., Social Action Committee. The King Council also contributes to the cost of transportation. Anyone seeking information about the program can call the King Council Office (545-0648 or 545-0649) or go there in person. The office is located at 207 Hampshire House.

Faculty Committee To Prepare Long Range Plan

A committee of three faculty members who will prepare a long-range academic plan for UMass has been appointed by the Faculty Senate and approved by the University administration.

The committee members, who have been released from teaching responsibilities for the next year to complete the plan, are: Joseph S. Marcus, associate dean of the School of Engineering, chairman; Irving Howards, professor of government; and William J. Mellen, professor of veterinary and animal science.

In addition, the Faculty Senate announced that the present Ad Hoc Long-Range Planning Committee will be supplemented by additional members drawn from the administration, faculty and student body to act as an advisory body to assist the new committee and to provide liaison with like groups on the Boston and Worcester campuses.

Dean Marcus announced that the committee has an office on the sixth floor of Thompson Hall and may be reached by calling 545-0822. "The committee wants to maintain close contact with all segments of the University community--students, faculty, administration and alumni--to obtain suggestions that will be of significance to the long-range development of the University."

FROM OUR SIDE

An Unpopular Viewpoint

by TINA SWIFT

The rationale of having a free university while clearly stated, neglects a few points which bear mentioning. It is true that the university is mushrooming in size and that insensitivity seems to be directly proportional to size. What the proponents of a free university seem to ignore, however, is that sensitivity can be developed in almost any atmosphere.

One quote from the rationale states: "Learning and retention takes place only when the student is actively self-directing his education, not being force-fed." What is stopping a student from taking it upon his own initiative to actively ferret out those details of a subject which particularly interest him? No matter how constricting and horrifying course requirements seem, it still is possible to utilize a great deal of latitude through independent study and analysis. Furthermore, the student has the option of rejecting the force-feeding method, in which case he is then abliged to choose another means of educating himself. Perhaps the simplest alternative would be the free university, but what is to stop the student from educating himself as much as he can from text books and conversations with teachers? The only concession he would have to make to the force-feeding method would be to show up for exams.

Another point made in the rationale is that the shared experience (necessary to learning) is, 'something made difficult to impossible in a competitive environment.' Does that mean that because Jack is competing with Jill in trying to reach the same goal they cannot share the experiences they encounter along the way? It does not seem logical that the mere fact of competition causes a complete breakdown in communications between classmates.

Finally, the latter part of the rationale deals with the alienation of the student resulting from the university's increasing masses. What the rationale completely ignores is that each student has within himself the capacity to overcome his sense of alienation - either through introspection, or with the help of friends. It is not the university's job, however, to take the student by the hand and lead him to emotional security forever and ever, amen. In truth, the university does not have the means to cope with these problems. Nevertheless, students must not throw up their hands in disgust and leave. They must reevaluate the crisis of an insensitive university and work within the framework of that university to change that which needs changing and to eliminate the most glaring restrictions that currently hinder education, such as over enrolled courses.

It is true that the free university is a constructive move, but why have we despaired of constructively renovating the university? And can we afford to ignore the benefits of a framework of organization?

"This Should Keep Them Apart — Now, To Get Out!"

MY OWN TRIP

By JON GERARD

The original plan, conceived on the landing of a rusty fire escape last July, was to build a replica of Whitmore right next to the administration building. Any small, inexpensive, easy to erec and dissemble structure would do. Perhaps some cardboard cartons, a tent, or a more sophisticated geodesic dome. From this "domeitory" would come mock statements satirizing, challenging, attacking every memo and statement to come from Whitmore.

Almost as soon as the idea was stated it was realized to be a bad one. At best it was the product of the oppressive frustration felt by a small diverse group of concerned students who had curiously come together on that fire escape. At its worse it was a boring plan, designed with no goals, and destined to produce a negative reaction from the University community.

Why waste time mocking Whitmore? Why not build a replica of the entire University instead? By starting all over again we could initiate a University the way we feel it should be. We could create an institution containing a viable, flexible structure which FOSTERS learning and creativity rather than FRUSTRATING it as the present system so often does.

Free University City became a necessity when we recognized, according to Tim Ney, a founder and spokesman for the community, "the inability of existing structures to accommodate individual learning needs. Since learning needs are always changing, the educational environment must always be changing. UMass has failed to allow for these changes and has, therefore, become an obsolete and uncomfortable learning environment."

Dick Sleeper divided the project into three different phases, construction, internal process (what happens there), and follow up (what happens after it ends?). A physics major at RPI before coming to the University in search of a more meaningful education, Dick led phase one. He looked into the possibility of using tents, domes, and a variety of other inexpensive yet efficient structures. Everyone seemed to prefer his suggestion to stress geodesic domes, and a variety of other inexpensive yet efficient structures. Everyone seemed to prefer his suggestion to stress geodesic domes, first designed by architect-philosopher Buckmister Fuller.

At first the small cadre of involved students contributed money from their own depleted pockets to begin collecting materials for the initial dome. The biggest boost to date was the donation, by the Monsanto Chemical Company, of about 60% of the half-ton of plastic sheeting to be stapled to the thin wooden triangles making up th e sturdy structures. Other smaller contributions of tools and supplies left only the expensive matter of wood to be settled before large scale building could begin. This expense became prohibitive, however, and the summer ended with Tim Ney going to the NSA convention in Dallas hoping to find some grant money. When he returned in cowboy boots and fringed suede jacket, but with no money, the entire project seemed doomed (domed?).

But suddenly students began returning to the University for a new year. They found conditions totally intolerable in every area of activity and seemed willing to contribute to the venture. Enough money was obtained to complete a model dome behind Moore House. This attracted the press which sent reporters to Southwest who, finding no story available, created their own. They linked the City to the housing shortage, over crowded classrooms, and a number of oversimplified issues which, while certainly a part of the project, were by no means the total picture. But the media contributed to the momentum of the movement and more and more people became interested. With financial support from the Student Senate, the MLK Social Action Council, and the sophomore class, Dick began to make ends meet (something which later became difficulty when the huge triangles had to be fitted precisely together in the actual building). From a toothpick model of Sleeper's summer desk in Moore House to a small scale model behind Moore, Free University City moved across the street to begin large scale building. People from all areas of student activism joined in one of the most impressive efforts ever to build an almost spontaneous community at UMass.

Phase two of the project deals with what happens inside Free University City. At this writing, a variety of experiences is planned. South Coast, a community of architects and students from the University of Texas, will work on several sculpture projects utilizing the environment as effective aft. They also plan to inflate a large plastic structure to become a part of the City. Once FUC comes to life, people will begin talking about their environment and about manipulating it to fit their needs. Part of the actual process to occur may be reflected in the following planned events: Dr. Gage will do a drug thing for those wanting to get into some information in that area of recent concern. Jane Zapka will facilitate a class in sexuality, pregnancy, and family planning. Dr. Havens will lead a seminar for Consciously Dissatisfied People. There will be a workshop on chemical and biological warfare. Mr. and Mrs. Mark Cheren and Mr. and Mrs. Bill Wilkinson will conduct a three day workshop with perhaps twenty people on Liberation through Sexuality. The Learning Resources Center will send a team to organize learning interviews. The writer will conduct an experimental Yom Kippur service in a small group context. Overall it will be two weeks of peace and music - Free University City style.

Phase three, which will determine whether FUC will grow and change to keep meeting the needs of its students, or whether those students, having tasted a sample of a more acceptible educational environment, will return to the old institution with some ideas of how it might b e improved, will be left up to the student community that becomes Free University City. This is the phase which will determine the project's success.

Is $2000 a lot of money for an abbreviated bash? "Sure," answers Senator Steve Levy, "but it's nothing when compared to $40,000 spent on Winter Carni." The University may never be the same.

Tent City Amherst, Mass

This past Saturday evening a group of citizens constructed the phenomenon on the Amherst Common which has come to be called "Tent City." Since then, it has become the residence of approximately a half-dozen permanent, and ten to fifteen part-time inhabitants. There has been a great deal of confusion regarding the connection between Tent City and Free University City; actually, there is none.

The purpose of Tent City is to call attention to the presently outrageous housing situation in the Amherst area. Many people have no housing at all, and that housing which IS available is often inadequate and almost always overpriced. The fault lies with the town government, the landlors, and the University.

The four demands made by the people of Tent City include:

- 1. The calling of an "emergency Town Meeting for the formation of a Rent Control Board made up of tenants to eliminate the corruption of a seller's market."
- 2. "Housing for all the homeless in Amherst."
- 3. The building of "one hundred units of non-profit, low-rent housing within six months and two hundred additional units by August 1, 1970."
- 4. The building, by the University, of "another one hundred units of non-profit low rent housing within six months and two hundred additional units by August 1, 1970."

With a little cooperation and support from the students and administration these demands can be met and the needed changes implemented. The exploitation of tenants is needless - power to the people!

A Reply to the Acidhead

So you're down on acid, eh man? Had a few bad trips? Seen a bit too far into your head?

Well that's the way it is for a lot of people intent on kicks and getting there and making it, and all those other funny little games that small people are always playing. They pretty often get burned, that's all.

If you come to acid or mescaline or anything else with your head prepared a bit and relaxed, with the proper setting and perhaps a guide or fellow traveller you will almost certainly have the trip you want as gently and beautifully as you could want it. You must also watch your dealer, of course--acid cut with speed and mescaline is common and very bad news.

I have lost friends too, every tripper has. But they are the derelicts, the misconceived, those who fall by the wayside in any search, in any great endeavour. Of course, every one can't make it; in another age they would be opium smokers or absinthe drinkers and still be destroyed. If you can get there, you will; if you can't, forget it.

The thing is that acid is an inside trip--if you try walking around, you're so stunned you're sure to walk into an elevator shaft or into the path of a car. You just sit there and contemplate your body, your mind and the universe. You listen to your heart pumping, your lungs breathing, your aura pulsating--and you realize the truths of your body relative to the truths of the universe, you realize your oneness. You lose that desperate apartness that has haunted you since the day you were thrust from your mother's womb into a cold uncaring otherness.

You can sit out there and say - Ha! he's obviously insane, he's blown his mind out. It's so easy for you isn't it? You know where you are, you always have.

But do you dare? to travel a road so strewn with the insane, the crippled? to travel a way you cannot see into a place you can never know or understand? to be reviled as a freak, imprisoned with the insane in order to reach the saintliness of a Christ or Buddha?

The Problems Of Parking

How to get the parking assignment you want at the University of Massachusetts:

1. Stand in line (K-Z) for 30 minutes.
2. Be confronted by an aging policeman with the rules and regulations of parking.
3. Live in Butterfield and get stickers for "F" lot.
4. Complain loudly and get sent to Boss.
5. Stand in line for 15 minutes.
6. Confront a secretary who is sympathetic.
7. Confront the boss who is not.
8. Explain that "F" lot is a long way from Butterfield.
9. See step 7.
10. Explain that a lot in front of Butterfield has never been filled yet.
11. See step 7.
12. Take "F" lot stickers.
13. Buy Johnson's Foot Soap and cry a lot.

The Fraternity Scene

After reading "Desperate's" letter in the Sept. 18, 1969 Collegian, we are undertaking the obligation to respond.

As veterans of the fraternity scene, we can thoroughly appreciate and sympathize with your predicament. It is shocking the number of girls who put stock in the vicious and absolutely unfounded rumors of drunken brawls, rowdiness, profanity, and obscenity that supposedly run rampant in the houses on campus.

The sophisticated social mingling, stimulating intellectual conversation, wholesome party games and the general festive atmosphere that dominates fraternity parties are educational in themselves. Dates with fraternity men are ideal for polishing up one's manners, wearing one's best clothes, and for becoming a sophisticated young lady. If only those who are ignorant of the reality of these parties could see with what dignity and polish that the young men conduct themselves, they would be more than willing to be picked up by the men in the blue jackets.

GOOD LUCK!!!

"Student" Union?

Here I stand at the Hatch. It's very difficult to find a place to sit. Why? Some of the tables are occupied by construction workers. There they sit with their hardhats. Here I stand with my 25¢ hot dog.

Some of these guys make more than $4.00/hr. Yet they use our facilities and our relatively cheap prices for food. I pay a tax every year to help support this Union--do they? I always thought the student union was for students. Is it now open to the general public -- overcrowded even for those enrolled students.

They like the Hatch because:

1. It's convenient (For me too--I'm a student)
2. It's cheap (Why do I have to pay a tax and they don't)
3. Cute girls in minis they can look at intently and not feel guilty because they are not their daughters.
4. Look at the freaky hippies (I get to stand looking for a place to sit and can look at the freaky hardhats).

Students have never eaten where they work, never littered a bulldozer etc. Please "Hardhatted Construction Workers" it's a STUDENT Union. Split.

On Course Shortages

While I understood the students' dissatisfaction with the course shortages that confront them this semester, I wish to offer one additional explanation for the occurrence of some of these shortages. The enrollment statistics of the German Dept. support the belief that the problem was caused not only by lack of funds and the inadequate support received from the state, but also by the loosening of the foreign language requirement at the last minute. This change allowed many students to substitute for language courses others of their own choice - apparently largely in the area of social sciences.

If you consider the fact that the drop in enrollment in German alone was somewhere between 15% - 20% you will agree that this explains a good part of the unpleasant dilemma. The change in the language requirement came so late in the year that nobody was in a position to evaluate what it would do to the various departments in terms of enrollment and staff needs.

New England String Quartet to Open Concert Series

The University of Massachusetts Concert Association season will open Friday, Oct. 3, with a concert by the New England String Quartet, in residence at the University of Connecticut. The event will take place in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. and will be part of the Chamber Music Series.

The New England String Quartet was formed several years ago with the encouragement of UConn President Homer D. Babbidge. After two years of preliminary activity, the personnel of the quartet was completed in the fall of 1967 with the arrival on the Storrs campus of Bronislaw Gimpel, the noted violinist, who assumed the position of first violin in the ensemble. Tours have taken the New England String Quartet to Rome, Bergen and Washington in the past and this season the group will perform in Scandinavia, Great Britain, and Germany in addition to concerts on its own campus and throughout the east.

The program for the New England String Quartet's visit to the University of Massachusetts will include works by Haydn, Bartok and Beethoven. The event is part of a Chamber Music Series which will feature concerts by The Philadelphia Woodwind Quintet, Juilliard String Quartet, Guarneri String Quartet and Boston Symphony Chamber Players.

Series tickets are offered to U-Mass undergraduates at $3; UMass graduate students, faculty, staff and other students at $5 and to the general public at $7.50 (for five events). Full ticket information may be obtained from the University's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, Tel. 545-0202.

School of Nursing Receives Grant From Nat'l Institute Mental Health

Dean Mary Maher of the UMass School of Nursing has announced the receipt of a five-year grant from the National Institute of Mental Health for $134,785.

The first year's award of this five-year grant is $26,957. The grant was prepared by Dean Mary Maher and Dr. Alvin Winder of the School of Nursing. Dr. Winder will act jointly with Dean Maher as co-director of this project.

An outstandingly valuable contribution to the teaching of nursing, the grant introduces three new concepts of mental health to undergraduate nursing.

The first innovative concept is the idea of mental health as a community concern, with the Nursing School's psychiatric-mental health training directed not solely toward working with problem families and groups within the community itself.

To develop this program, the School of Nursing is prepared to assign its students to various areas of the community: the low socio-economic areas of Springfield, the schools, and a variety of social agencies concerned with family health.

The second concept that the grant emphasizes is the extension of the nurse's role to include that of gaining an extended knowledge in inter-personal relations. Thus in order to develop an understanding of how the patient feels about his illness and bout himself, it becomes necessary for the student of Nursing to develop her communicative abilites to a high level. Dr. Winder believes that this goal can be achieved only through the creation in the curriculum of affective education rather than (the more) traditional educational practices.

To provide for affective education, a third concept was introduced into the grant. Affective education differs from traditional education in that in the latter the student is more or less a passive recipient of information from a lecturer whereas affective education in this new approach centers around the use of the sensitivity group which facilitates involvement and participation of all students on a level in which the feelings expressed are more important than the vacts received.

This third concept, affective education, promotes the development of the student's capacity for a warm and understanding relationship with patients as well as the enhancement of their own personal and professional growth as human beings.

MDC Interview

Dean Field, Counselor Representative Discuss Committee Efforts Get Pay

The DAILY COLLEGIAN scheduled two interviews, one with Dean Field and the other with Michael Koch, concerning the attempt to establish a system of paid counselors acting as catalytic agent in the attempts to solve the problem. is the result of the interviews.

Collegian: How do things stand now with the DCRC?

Koch: We're 100% better organized than before. We have established some committees to deal with the problem.

Collegian: What are those committees?

Koch: One committee is finding out how much it would cost to send letters to the parents of all the freshmen to seek their support. There is also an arbitration committee to act as the appointed representatives for the group in discussions with the Dean (Field).

Collegian: Does the DCRC see their interests and Dean Field's at opposite ends of the spectrum?

Koch: No, we don't. We're

Collegian: At your meeting last Thursday, you asked the press to leave so the group could discuss plans for surprising the University in an attempt to win your fight. Are you ready to disclose any of those paths?

Koch: No. They're still left for a surprise.

Collegian: Apparently the Dean just doesn't have the money to pay you. How can you expect the money?

Koch: We think he has the money. If we can be assured that the Dean doesn't have any money we'll have to change our plans.

Interview with Dean Field

Collegian: What is the present state of the dormitory counselor's salaries right now?

Field: I've done a detailed review of my entire budget and I delivered the analysis to provost Tippo Saturday.

Collegian: Do you think the Provost will be able to find funds to make up the deficiency?

Field: I don't know.

Collegian: The DCRC has accused you of bad faith for not consulting with your staff or others before adjusting your budget. Do you have a reply?

Field: I consulted with anyone who was here. It was the consensus of those on campus. At the time, early in July, some of the Student Personnel Services Staff were on vacation.

Collegian: The DCRC has claimed you have the money or that by cutting back in different areas of your budget funds could have been found for the counselor's salaries.

Field: No, that's not true. Certain areas of the budget I had no option with. If I had eliminated every other budget item, I still couldn't meet the commitment to the counselors. I'm perfectly willing to go through the budget with the counselors. In fact, I'm waiting for them to contact me again.

80 Bobbies Attack Mansion Clear Hippy Fortress of 400

LONDON (AP) - London bobbies won a battle with a horde of hippies Sunday, ending their weeklong occupation of a 100-room mansion near Buckingham Palace.

Under a shower of roof tiles and heavy plastic balls, a force of 80 policemen stormed up a makeshift drawbridge into the hippy "fortress" where 400 squatters had moved in.

"Hell Angels" guards and other squatters battled with the cops in a short, sharp fight. Then a policeman signalled with his baton from the roof: The battle was over.

It took the police just three minutes to end the takeover of the building where hippy boys, girls and children had ruled in open defiance of the authorities for six days.

A hard core group of the squatters claimed they had occupied the huge house as a refuge for the homeless. It had been vacant.

The battle of No. 144 Piccadilly started Saturday night when gangs of anti-hippy short-haired youths called "Skinheads" descended on the area.

Running fights broke out between hippies and thugs and eight squatters were reported injured.

The police attack on the hippy stronghold began at 11:30 a.m. Two senior officers clambered onto the wooden drawbridge that the hippies had erected to the only open window at the front of the building and a whistle was blown.

Police said they arrested a number of hippies for possessing drugs and assaults on police. A number of aliens were being held and checked by police.

Sir John Waldron commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, inspected the house later and a Scotland Yard spokesman said: "The building is undoubtedly defaced and damaged to a considerable extent."

National Teachers Exams To Be Given on Four Dates

College Seniors preparing to teach school may take the National Teacher Examinations on any of the four different test dates announced recently by Educational Testing Service, a nonprofit, educational organization which prepares and administers this testing protram.

New dates for the testing of prospective teachers are: November 8, 1969, and January 31, April 4, and July 18, 1970. The tests will be given at nearly 500 locations throughout the United States.

Tests at UMass will be administered by the testing service at the Counseling Center, Whitmore Administration Building.

Results of the National Teacher Examinations are used by many large school districts as one of several factors in the selection of new teachers and by several states for certification of licensing of teachers.

Some colleges also require all seniors preparing to teach to take the examinations. The school systems and state departments of education which use the examination results are designated in the Bulletin of Information for Candidates.

On each full day of testing, prospective teachers may take the Common Examinations, which measure their professional preparation and general cultural background, and a Teaching Area Examination which measures mastery of the subject they expect to teach.

Prospective teachers should contact the school systems in which they seek employment, or their advisors, for specific advice on which examinations to take and on which dates they should be taken.

The Bulletin of Information for Candidates contains a list of test center, and information about the examinations, as well as a Registration Form. Copies may be obtained from the Counseling Center Room 243, Whitmore Administration Building.

Black Bear Boner

Typical of Black Bear woes on Saturday afternoon is this play which brought the game to a close. Maine had the ball for second down and nine on the UMass 17 with seven seconds left to go in the game, and were driving for a possible score. Reserve quarterback Joe Leone faded back and lofted a pass to Laurant Rioux (47) who is shown here making the catch.

Maine followers cheered, but to no avail for , alas, Rioux had caught the ball outside of the endzone and the two seconds shown on the clock ticked away and the final score remained as it is in this picture. Redmen in on the action are Dennis Collins (43), John O'Neil (18), Frank Schwartz (33) and Mark Leamy (55). See page 12 for stories and more pictures. (MDC Photo by Ken Stevens).

RedmenGo 1-0-2 in Soccer Jamboree

UMass soccer coach Peter Broaca's Redmen traveled to Western New England College Saturday to participate in a four team jamboree. UMass emerged with a 1-0-2 mark, defeating WNEC, 2-0, and tying AIC and Westfield State, both by 0-0 scores.

This was the jamboree's fourth year of existence, its purpose being to provide game experience for participating teams in an exhibition setting. Each squad plays 90 minutes of soccer, 30 against each of the three other teams.

For the Redmen, it was a case of excellent defense coupled with paltry offense. Augie Calheno and Duane Brown were the only scorers of the day.

"It was mostly the old question of our inability to put the ball in the net," said Broaca. "The offense was disappointing as it has been in practice sessions."

The defense however, was superb. "Goalie Tom Malone was removed early with what turned out to be a pinched nerve in his hip but soph Greg Hamilton came in to do a fine job." Broaca also had words of praise for his sophomore line of fullbacks.

The Redmen will spend this week in preparation for their first game at Maine on Saturday. The Black Bears, like UMass, are primarily a young team of sophs and juniors. They won their first game, defeating Jersey City State, 2-0.

Broaca expects Maine to be improved over last year's squad which lost to UMass , 2-0. He anticipates a tough game.

Key men for the Black Bears are halfback Ruben Hernandez and wing Jossy Byamah who had a goal and an assist against Jersey City. Maine's offense centers on these two men so the Redman defense should have a good test.

Mighty Chiefs Humble Pats, 31 to Zip

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) - The Kansas City Chiefs, a mighty machine powered by veteran Lennie Dawson and hard-working Mike Garrett, rolled to their second straight American Football League victory Sunday in humbling the Boston Patriots 31-0 and spoiling Clive Rush's home debut as head coach.

Dawson tossed for two touchdowns, including one to Garrett, who also scored on a sharp bucking run. The Chiefs, who have not lost to Boston since 1964, asserted their supremacy from the outset and breezed to their first shutout triumph in 24 regular season games since 1967.

The Patriots, bombed 35-0 by Denver in their season opener, could do little against Kansas City's hard-hitting defense. Boston managed only one first down until after the two minute warning in the first half and never posed a serious scoring threat.

NL Race Roundup

(AP) - Randy Hundley's two-run homer in the fifth inning helped Chicago to a 4-3 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals Sunday and helped the Cubs maintain their slim title hopes.

The result, coupled with New York's first-game 5-3 victory over Pittsburgh, eliminated the Cardinals from the title race after winning two straight pennants.

Willie McCovey lumbered home from third base with the winning run on a bases-loaded error by Maury Wills with two out in the 10th inning Sunday, giving the San Francisco Giants a 4-3 victory over Los Angeles and keeping them in first place in the National League West.

It was the Giants' forth consecutive triumph and kept them one-half game in front of Atlanta, which beat San Diego 8-2. The Dodgers lost their forth in a row and dropped 3-1/2 games back in third place.

Redmen Put the Pieces Together, Belt Maine 49-7

Adams Directs Air and Ground Show Against Black Bears

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Day Editor

ORONO, Me. - Asuperb rushing attack, fine passing, solid pass coverage and outstanding line play on both offense and defense were the individual pieces that the Redmen were able to tie tightly together as they marched to a 49-7 victory over the Maine Black Bears here on Saturday.

Directing the UMass offense was quarterback Tim Adams. The senior signal-caller, mixing his plays well, led his teammates to their first five scores while completing eight of ten passes for 154 yards.

The Redman ground game was outstanding. The starting backfield trio of seniors Ed Sarno and Jerry Grasso, and junior Pat Scavone established themselves early in the contest. Sophomore backupmen Dick Cummings and Mike Sawyer saw plenty of action and were extremely impressive.

Junior Dick Heavey, as a third string fullback behind Sarno and Cummings, was the game's leading ground gainer with 67 yards in seven carries, a striking indication of UMass dominance in this affair.

The offensive and defensive line play must not be overlooked for it contributed mightily to the final outcome. The pass receiving corps also came through with colors and the Redman secondary did a fine job, led by senior Steve Rogers who picked off two Maine aerials.

Maine won the opening toss, which turned out to be the only thing they did win. They took the kickoff to their own 30 yard line, but were forced to punt after three plays left them one yard shy of a first down. Gene Benner's boot rolled dead on the Redman 45.

UMass' first offensive play of the year was a neatly executed reverse which netted a first down as Grasso carried the ball to Maine's 45 yard line. After an illegal motion penalty on the next play, Scavone took the ball off tackle for 16 yards to the 34 yard stripe.

On the third Redman play from scrimmage, Grasso sliced off right tackle and then, cutting back behind good downfield blocks, was able to coast in for the first score with 11:24 left on the first period clock.

In their attempt for the extra point, UMass was penalized 15 yards for holding which forced sophomore Dennis Gagon to split the uprights from 35 yards out, which he did for the seventh Redman point. Many more were to follow.

The Black Bears were again stalled after the kickoff and had to give up the football via a punt.

UMass took over on its own 15 and five plays later recorded its second score.

It came on a second-andseven-to-go play from the Maine 24 as Adams rolled to his right and drilled a pass to junior end Nick McGarry on the five yard line. The 230-pound McGarry shook loose a defender and scored standing up. Gagnon's kick made it 14-0 with still seven minutes left in the first quarter.

The second period opened with another Maine punt which senior Steve Parnell returned 57 yards to the Black Bear 29. A Grasso fumble on the next play, however, momentarily crippled the Redman express, and Maine was able to embark upon its only scoring drive, which was capped when junior halfback Dan Sullivan took a 19 yard Dave Wing toss over the shoulder at the visitor's 35 and romped into paydirt with 12:15 to go in the half. Jim Fitzgerald's boot game Maine its seventh and final point.

On their first kickoff to UMass, the Black Bears were offside and had to kick again. The second kick was grabbed by Sarno who bulled his way for thirty yards to the home 45 yard mark.

A ten play drive, featuring two Adams to soph end John Hulecki passes for 15 and nine yards, was rewarded when Scavone crashed over from the one for the third Redman score at 6:47 of the second quarter. Gagnon's p.a.t. was good and UMass left the field at halftime leading 21-7.

With Sarno picking up 32 yards on three carries along the way, the Redmen opened the second half by driving from their own 27 on into the Maine endzone as Scavone went in for his second touchdown from two yards out. Gagnon was again on target and with only 2:55 gone in the third quarter, UMass was way out in front 28-7.

Backed by such a lead and comforted by the fact that his defense was in complete control of the home team offense, head coach Vic Fusia was able to substitute freely throughout the remainder of the game.

Adams made his last appearance in the fray when he scored on a quarterback option on a third-and-one foot situation from Maine's 23, with 6:09 left to go in the third period. Gagnon's kick made him five for five and upped the lead to 35-7.

Senior Ken Hughes was field general in charge of the visitor's last two scores, both in the fourth quarter. On a third-and-goal-to play from the six, Hughes hit senior John Decembrele in the endzone with 9:55 to go in the game. Gagnon proceeded to his his sixth p.a.t. in as many attempts.

Later, on a first down from 20 yards away, junior Art Corsaletti found his way through a weary Maine defense for UMass' final six-pointer. Gagnon's kick was automatic and, with 3:15 to go in the contest, the scoreboard displayed what would be the final score of Redmen 49, Black Bears 7.

It was a very rewarding triumph for coach Fusia as his team rushed for 341 yards and passed for an additional 198 in registering 27 first downs.

UMass' overwhelming complete game victory raises many curious eyebrows and fills with enthusiasm and optimism the hearts of those who hope for a Redman return to football prominance after last season's letdown.

Victory Eases Pain of Ridiculous Six-Hour Trip to Orono

By PETER PASCARELLI
Sports Editor

ORONO, Me. - It's just a damn good thing that UMass walloped Maine Saturday. If that ridiculous six hour drive was made for nothing, you might find some UMass fans wandering aimlessly in the Maine woods. The strongest argument for leaving the Yankee Conference has to be the ride that never ends from Amherst to Orono.

But, fortunately the Redmen performed with aplomb of someone playing the Patriots. And off a showing that awesome in its overall dominance, UMass must rank as a strong contender for the Yankee Conference title, and even more definitely, a hugely more effective team than last season's group.

UMass rolled up 539 total yards against a Maine team that was thought to be a real darkhorse for conference honors. It was the second largest one game total offense in UMass school history. The 49 points were the most ever scored in the Maine-UMass series, that dates back to 1909.

The defense, meanwhile, was bent at times to one play, a look in pass to Bear standout Gene Benner, but never was close to breaking, rising up to intercept three Maine passes and allowing only 70 yards rushing.

If it sounds like the travel-weary Redmen could do no wrong, in their debut, that's just about how it was. As Coach Vic Fusia, who was seen smiling on a sideline for the first time in two years, said afterwards, "We made fewer mistakes in a first game today than any team I have coached. This was the most encouraging thing about the day."

What must have made things even more encouraging for Fusia was that this mistake-free day was performed by a large group of sophomores who had never seen any previous action. And Fusia shuttling players in and out all day, even when the issue was relatively still in doubt. "We have a lot more depth this year," said the coach, "and I wanted to give as many boys experience for what will be a long schedule. Plus the fact that it was a little warm." Well 54 players made the trip and 54 played.

Fusia was, in addition, pleased with the takeoff that the offensive line had, a line that continually blasted out gaping holes in the Maine defenses. And as many of the Redman running backs were heard to say, "It was easy running behind that line." The coach also was pleased with the overall execution of the team, that employed several offensive setups, and a shifting four linebacker defense.

While sophomores had a big role in affairs, the veteran offensive backfield of quarterback Tim Adams, who completed eight of ten passes for 154 yards and a touchdown, plus running for a score, Jerry Grasso, who averaged around seven yards a carry and scored once, Pat Scavone who had 63 yards and two touchdowns, and fullback Ed Sarno who ripped off large chunks of yardage plus blocking with his usual violence, had a little to do with the final score.

And there was Steve Rogers, who intercepted for his 12th and 13th time in his career, a school record. And Nick McGarry who seems to be fitting the Morin mold of a great end.

And Tom Yrok, John MacLean, Bill Sroka, Mark and Paul Toner, who keyed the rough defense.

But really names shouldn't be mentioned, because 54 players played, and they all, for the most part performed well. When you win 49-7, there are a lot of people doing something right.

A beautiful, lovely way to start a football season. Right? Wrong, you had to drive six more damn hours through those damn Maine woods, in the middle of the damn night! Why doesn't Maine secede from the Union or at least the Yankee Conference?

REDMAN RANTINGS - New U-Mass uniforms made players look bigger. . . .Dennis Gagnon tied a school record with seven conversions, two of which were from field goal range due to penalties. . . A persistent black and white dog was Maine's best linebacker. . . Steve Parnell nearly broke one punt, while Sarno nearly went all the way with a short kickoff. . . McGarry liked being a wide receiver, saying, "I can get out on patterns easier and have a different blocking angle". . .Ken Hughes continues his string of having a touchdown pass in every game he has played in. . .Dick Heavey led all rushers with 67 yards. . .Gene Beaner does everything for Maine except trap bears. . .A Maine player tried to run with his own punt, causing eyebrows to rise among the scouting fraternity in the press box. . .Buffalo scout's comment: "Wow". . .Maine coach Walt Abbott's comment "What do you expect me to say". . .UMass had a 27-13 edge in first downs. . Bob Cabrelli intercepted in his first varsity game. . .The lovely sojourn to the woods was capped off by an inspection tour of the Valle restaurant chain in northern New England, . . .And a great driving job by the Fox who won the golden hot dog award. . .Buffalo defeated Xavier 17-0, while Connecticut dumped Vermont, 26-6. . .Rhode Island was edged 40-3 by Temple. . .Delaware eeked out a 52-0 victory over Lehigh. . . B.U. shutout Colgate 20-0.

TrusteesOKCo-edGreenough

Also Approve Dorm Self-Determination

By JOHN STAVROS
Asst. News Editor

BOSTON - In a specially scheduled meeting of the UMass Board of Trustees held yesterday in Boston, three proposals concerning student activities were reviewed. Two of the proposals concerning a Co-ed Greenough House and the open house policies on campus were passed, the third, dealing with alcoholic beverages for students over 21, was tabled pending legal study.

After a 2 1/2 hour closed door session of the board, the meeting was opened to the press with Trustee member Mrs. George R. Rowland reporting for the Student Activities Committee. Mrs. Rowland reported that after several weeks of careful study and close work with students, the committee was ready to make its recommendations.

Concerning the determination of open house policies at the University, Mrs. Rowland stated,"It is recommended that the Board of Trustees support a policy of self determination for each dorm regarding open houses, but does not give official approval until specific plans are presented to the Trustees.

The floor was then opened for discussion after the presentation and Dr. William F. Field, Dean of Students, was first to speak for the proposal. Field, stating that the University was now in its fifth year of a dorm modernization program, recommended that the measure be accepted. He stated that all indications demonstrated that a self determination policy would be the next step for the university.

Next, speaking in behalf of the University was Bruce R. Balboni, President of the Student Senate in Amherst. Balboni urged the Trustees to pass the motion, saying the measure was a "very important step" for the University.

At this point, it was recommended the issue be put to a vote. The proposal passed unanimously.

A progress report concerning the legalization of alcoholic beverages on campus for students over 21 was next on the agenda. Mrs. Rowland reported to the Trustees that the matter had been reviewed and it would now be presented outside committee, for legal consideration. It is believed this issue will then be presented to the Trustees at their next regular meeting on the 19th of October.

The last and perhaps most controversial issue on the agendum concerned permission from the Trustees for a Co-ed Greenough House at the University.

Provost Tippo

The floor was immediately opened to Provost Oswald Tippo who has a written report to present concerning the issue.

Provost Tippo stated that in the past weeks he had contacted Presidents, provosts and Deans at several of the leading Universities in the country to find out exactly how well co-ed dorms were functioning at these schools. Tippo mentioned schools all over the nation including Stanford University, the University of Rochester, the University of Connecticut, Rochester University, and Oregon State. He commented that many of these schools have had co-ed dorms from as early as 1963 and several stated their programs were "absolutely great". Studies at several of the institutions showed improved grades, reduced off-campus living, and better social development of students involved in the programs.

At this point, Provost Tippo mentioned that Oregon State reported some trouble with the townspeople complaining about the dorm, but this problem was cleared up when the townspeople were given tours of the co-ed building. Trustee George L. Pumphret of Dorchester, who later voted against the proposal asked lightly, "if the tours had been given at 2 in the morning?" This comment broke up the until now serious meeting and set the stage for Pam Pepper, spokeswoman for Greenough.

Miss Pepper stated the University and more directly her committee had met no opposition from parents students or townspeople.

Several members who later voted against the proposal questioned whether Greenough was the proper facility for the program. This issue was resolved when Provost Tippo stated most of the men he had spoken to said the co-ed dorms they now had were merely slightly converted mens or womens dormitories.

Last to comment on the issue was Cindi Olken, U.P. and Pat Buharry, secretary of the Student Senate. Miss Buharry stated the problem of the facility was not an issue since Greenough was perfectly acceptable to students concerned. She felt however, that the true issue was for the Trustees to think of the new dorm as an "experiment in communication of living", a natural step for a progressive university.

It was then recommended a vote be taken, and the proposal passed with three dissenting votes from the board. It is believed that the Co-ed dorm will become a reality second semester this year, as there are only several steps left before this becomes possible. The steps include, parental permission for students under 21, permission from all men presently in Greenough for the program, and a meeting with the parents of all students involved.

Before closing the meeting, Chairman Healy stated that, "Students have in the past two meetings prevented the board from Anyone wishing to help in the construction of the domes which have become a trademark of the city will be welcome. And members of South Coast, the Texas group which is helping the city will be available to discuss utilizing the environment as effective art.

Four programs have been tentively scheduled by the city, and a number of faculty members have pledged to teach courses at the Free University.

The programs already slated include a drug discussion to be led by Health Services director Dr. Robert W. N.E. Students Protest Dormatory Conditions

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Staff Reporter

Sitting on the floor in the naked basement room which serves as the headquarters of the N.E. Area Government in Thatcher House, the N.E. Area Congress was brought to order by President Sheldon Kline. Fifty dollars was voted out for the "Free University". Seventy dollars was allocated to aid the Counselors in their fight for wages.

Then the issue of area conditions and what can be done about them was brought to the floor.

The following statement was issued by the N.E. Area Congress: "We are through with our complacency of the past. We are no longer willing to live in the insidious conditions we have been subjected to for so many years. We are compiling a room by room list of the lacking furniture. We will present this list to the necessary channels in the Administration. And if it takes all fourteen hundred of us . . ."

The Area Government has been circulating a petition which will be presented to the Treasurer along with the list of missing and unusable furniture and facilities. Thus far approximately 1100 names have been gathered.

The petition reads: "We the undersigned of the Northeast Area petition the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, Massachusetts, to give to us immediately our basic living necessities such as are present in other University dormitories on campus. These include enough beds, desks, dressers, wastebaskets, lamps, curtains, and lounge furniture of good quality."

The Quad has been neglected and is in dire need of immediate refurbishing students say. Examples of "original" torn curtans and unusuable date room furniture in several of the dorms abound. Cases of "one shower for 50 girls" are common. The Area Co-ordinator, Mike West estimated that 90% of the double rooms have only one bureau and 50% of them have only one desk. There are shortages of phones. Crabtree only has two inter-university phones.

When asked whether this action could lead to demonstrations, President Kline replied, "Yes!" When asked when, "Within the next two weeks, 1400 students are pissed," he said.

Marine Recruit Death Linked to Camp Violence

PARRIS ISLAND, S.C. (AP) - Preliminary investigation into alleged maltreatment in the death of an 18-year-old Marine recruit at the Parris Island training base indicates the recruit may have been hit and pushed against the wall by fellow trainees.

A Marine spokesman said Monday that investigation so far shows that no drill instructor or supervisor physically abused Pvt. Stephen E. Melson, of Millsboro, Del., who died Sunday.

Doctors at the Medical University of South Carolina hospital said the cause of Melson's death was kidney failure. Melson was admitted to the U.S. Naval Hospital at Beaufort, Sept. 7, four days after he arrived at Parris Island. He was still undergoing processing and had not actually begun basic training.

House Pushing for More Cuts From Military Appropriations

WASHINGTON (AP) - House military spending critics said Monday they'll try to cut $3 billion from a $21.4-billion defense bill before it reaches the House floor next week. But they're not optimistic they'll succeed in cutting a dime.

Chairman L. Mendel Rivers, D-S.C. says he expects his House Armed Services Committee to have the spending authorization for the Safeguard anti-missile system, tanks, planes, ships and missiles out this week.

Rivers indicates the bill is basically the $20-billion authorization the Senate passed last week after 2 1/2 months of debate - but with $1.4 billion tacked on for modernization of the aging U.S. naval force.

Half dozen members of Rivers' 39-man committee say they'll offer proposals to cut nearly $3. billion. But they say their only hope for success is that Rivers and a committee policy group may already have made some of the cuts.

"We've told him what we want to take out," said Rep. Robert L. Leggett, D-Calif. "He may take the string out of our bow and make some of the cuts himself. That's fine. We have no pride of authorship."

Rep. Lucien N. Nedzi, D-Mich, another of the committee rebels, was asked how much they think they can take out of the bill in committee.

"I don't think we can take anything out of it over his, Rivers' objection," Nedzi replied. "I'm sure he has the votes." The critics also are doubtful they'll make any cuts on the House floor.

"The temper of the House is not to overturn the committee's work," Nedzi said - but his group expects to make a better showing than ever before.

Drivers Burn Over Border Busts

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS - Motorists and businessmen on both sides of the U.S. and Mexican border were fuming Monday over Operation Intercept, the U.S. government's crackdown on illegal drug traffic from Mexico.

But the government plans to continue intensive border inspections indefinitely, despite complaints over long delays to auto traffic.

After the program's first weekend, spokesmen Monday defended Operation Intercept from a flood of criticism from tourists and tourist-oriented business by saying it obviously had stemmed part of the contraband flow from south of the border. Mexican nationals with daily work permits in this country also were unhappy with the delays.

U.S. customs inspectors seized less narcotics than they used to under normal inspection procedures but this pleased rather than disappointed officials. They said it meant smugglers were getting the message. "A smuggler would have to be pretty stupid not to take a vacation," a spokesman for Operation Intercept said in Los Angeles.

Customs agents seized thousands of pounds of marijuana, including half a ton aboard a plane, and countless illegal pills.

But the close inspections of every returning vehicle and pedestrian created massive traffic jams Sunday at many points along the 2,500 mile border. The tie-ups let up only slightly Monday.

Cars and trucks stretched six miles into Mexico at the major California crossing at San Ysidro Sunday night. The line stretched three miles Monday for the start of the weekday flow of Mexicans on single-shift work visas.

As cars boiled and some ran out of gas, tempers exploded.

"This is ridiculous," said Mrs. Philip Rockwell of the San Diego suburb of Chula Vista. "We like Mexico, but we won't be back."

Sunday, at San Ysidro, an estimated 30,000 cars and trucks were returning about 90,000 persons from the bullfights and horse racing at Tijuana. All 16 gates were open but the delay grew to four hours. Motorists who tried an end-run were caught in a two-hour delay at Tecate, 35 miles to the east.

making some serious mistakes, and this is the type of communication we would like to continue with the students. It is hoped that our communications will continue to improve.

President of the Senate Balboni then replied to Healy's comment. "I have felt a strong sense of cooperation from the Trustees but want to express a sense of urgency regarding the proposal still left to the Trustees," Balboni hoped the Trustees wouldn't consider students at the University radical, but concerned, because the Trustees sometimes were not acting with the urgency they should regarding these proposals.

Understanding Urged At Amherst Convocation

In his address to freshmen at Amherst College's convocation, President Calvin H. Plimpton sought to set the tone for the coming academic year, and urged the College community to seek self-improvement through responsible introspection and honest attempts at understanding.

President Plimpton examined some of the elements which he felt had caused a three-day moratorium of classes at the College last spring, and found that Amherst had indeed faced many of these issues head-on. As an example, he cited the Summer Commission - a group of students and faculty - which devoted the entire summer vacation to meetings and study to propose new procedures for the governance and operation of the College. However, he warned that "one must get on with education" rather than spend time imagining new rules, new constitutions to cover every situation. Plimpton added that seeking to establish new rules implies that understanding and mutual respect have begun to fall away, and that "when understanding goes, an institution is in trouble."

Dr. Plimpton felt that student dissent should be taken seriously, and that legitimate measures should be taken to analyze its roots. "Today we can ponder the distance," he explained, "between the American dream and the American reality." He contended, however, that such dissension is "very healthy" for Amherst.

Looking toward the kind of education which might best prepare Amherst students to deal with such social injustices as ghettos and poverty, the President stressed the hope that the College would constantly seek to improve itself, and not be content merely to fit its graduates into existing structures and establishments. He noted that the concept of liberal education was best able to achieve this, but he cautioned against the "fashionable rush" to eliminate all academic requirements because, he believed, so many unexpected strengths are only discovered in times of stress."

Dr. Plimpton pointed out that both students and faculty need appropriate motivation to achieve improvements in Amherst, and, borrowing from the New Testament account of the Feeding of the Multitide in which Jesus told his disciples, "Gather up the fragments left over, that nothing be lost," he impressed upon his audience that every person has a value. Citing a specific example of how Amherst has already recognized this fact, Dr. Plimpton looked to the Amherst Summer Action Programs, a project designed to upgrade the education of disadvantaged youths and their teachers, which took place on the Amherst campus this past summer.

Amherst would have to overcome certain obstacles, the President felt, on the way to self-improvement. Lack of flexibility - the inability to stop the snowballing tendency of adding new courses and new faculty, then more students - and the financial problem of a possible slowdown in future private support were two obstacles mentioned.

Dr. Plimpton concluded his address by turning to another passage from the Bible, the Old Testament account of the Lord's instructions to Moses to send men to spy out the land of Canaan. In response to these instructions, Caleb said, "Let us go up at once and occupy it; for we are well able to overcome it." The President added that the Amherst community was likewise "well able" and he hoped that it would make ample use of its talents in a "crusade against ignorance and towards understanding and self-discovery.

FROM OUR SIDE

A Progressive Move

Free University City is misunderstood by a great many people. The idea is circulating that it is only a protest against the overcrowded dormitories. While this is a small facet of the protest, the reasons behind the City are infinitely more important.

The University of Massachusetts is perhaps no more guilty than any other institution of similar size. There are bound to be problems in trying to educate 18,000 individuals.

Still the people who run this University seem content with perpetuating the present system, and the people who control the purse strings seem to want to perpetuate the problem. Beacon Hill is beyond anyone's earshot. Whitmore should not be. People in education are calling for radical change. The present educational system merely creates cogs for the machinery of society. If we are to create machinery, fine. But if we want to develop individuals, worthwhile human beings, then it is time, if not past time, to move away from impersonal, insensitive, mass education.

The people who have organized the City are concerned with many of these problems which are currently facing this University. Much planning went into the City.

We suggest that UMass students find out about the City for themselves. We further suggest that all who can participate in the first week's activities. Demonstrate your belief in the need for change by helping with the construction of the geodesic domes. You'll probably find there's a lot more to Free University than some domes and a Senate donation.

The Administration seems to be waiting and watching. It's good that they're watching. Hopefully they will learn from Free University and arrive at some positive concluclusions.

Finally the State Board of Health has stated it will close FUC if it fails to meet the legal health and sanitation standards. Perhaps they will honestly judge the City impartially. If they do close down the City however, we ask that the law be applied impartially, and that Van Meter House be closed down at the same time for it is at present substandard.

We can maintain the status quo forever. It may take the most violent repressionary tactics possible, but progress could be arrested. Neverthe less, a more sane course would seem to be to recognize the failings of the status quo, and to move to change. A move is already underway. Let us not be so foolish as to stifle it.

Humane Communication

In his speech at last week's Convocation, President Lederle spoke of caring and complaining about the problems of the university. He said that complaining is a form of communication, and that communication is vital, if the university is to be "humane".

Unfortunately these words don't seem to have any meaning, either for Lederle, or his second in command, Tippo. As most people should know by now, after the convocation there was a long discussion centered around ways to solve the problems facing us all. What some may not know is that Tippo and Lederle weren't there, despite Student Senate President Bruce Balboni's request for them to stay. Perhaps they were too busy to listen to a bunch of noisy students complaining about our "inhumane" university. After all hadn't Lederle already cleared these issues up in his one man dialogue?

Just what can Lederle mean by communication? Evidently it is not discussion. As for caring, did he care enough to spare an hour of his time? In view of his actions, his claim that U. Mass. is "humane" becomes highly doubtful. Just what is a humane university?

In a humane university, overcrowding in dormitories should not exist; students can enroll in their desired courses; there is no such thing as a 500 student classroom; teachers don't have to compete with bulldozers; and student life is not regulated by an undemocratic non-representative board of trustees. If this university were humane, there would be no need for a tent city, or a Free University City. The list is endless.

But all these problems are just symptoms of a deeper, more basic problem. Though the official attitude of the administration is one of cooperation with students, in reality, it is hostile. It is easy for Lederle or Tippo to urge students to use rational discussion instead of protest marches and sitins. It is easy for them to say use the proper channels. But their idea of rational discussion is the handing down of final decrees. And the proper channels turn out to be well constructed road blocks. The only time students are listened to, is when they apply pressure. We all know the effect of unrest on the legislature and the taxpayers. It seems that is the only wedge students possess.

Thus instead of helping to solve our problems, President Lederle and Provost Tippo only add to them. There is no question that they are anti-student. That is one reason why our problems multiply instead of lessen.

It's Only A Game

WASHINGTON - "Coach Nixon, now that the professional football season has started, could you give me some idea of how your team looks?"

"I'd like to make one thing perfectly clear. I believe I've got a good team, a hard-working team and a team that could win another championship in 1972."

"You've got some tough opposition . How do you think you'll do against the Inflation Rockets?"

"No problem. It's just a question of everyone holding the line. If we tackle hard, we can lick them."

"What will your overall strategy be when you take on Inflation?"

"I don't believe it's the coach's job to get into things like strategy. Obviously, I don't want Inflation to run away with the game, but I don't think I should call the signals from the bench. I prefer to give David Kennedy the ball and let him run with it."

"What about your game with the Segregation Boosters? The scouting reports indicate they're tough this year."

"I naturally would like to beat Segregation as much as anybody. But I differ with the Monday-morning quarterbacks on how we can do it. I'm against rushing, and I don't believe we should try to score against them every time we've got the ball. I'm satisfied with a first down every once in a while in contrast to those who are always demanding touchdowns."

"There is some question as to who will be calling the signals against Segregation. Some say that so far Strom Thurmond has been calling them."

"Don't believe everything you read in the sports pages. Strom was on my team from the beginning and I have the highest respect for him, but that doesn't mean that I'm going to put him in the game. I've got two great backs in John Mitchell and Bob Finch and if they can't defeat the Segregation Boosters, nobody can."

"Are you planning to play Mel Laird against the Congressional Agitators?"

"I certainly am. He's the best defense man I've got. We beat the Agitators in the ABM Bowl and we'll beat them in the playoffs."

"You've been using Spiro Agnew sparingly so far. Is this because you don't want him to get hurt?"

"No, it isn't. Spiro had no experience when he came on the team, and he's just learning the plays. I'm very pleased with his progress. And it's a great comfort for me to know he's suited up and sitting on the bench."

"Now about the big game with the Hanoi Tigers. You said at the beginning of the season that you knew how to win this one. Some sports writers are beginning to doubt it."

"I didn't say I could win it. I said I'd be willing to settle for a tie. At this stage I'd even be willing to call the game off. But Hanoi wants to beat us. They play dirty and I have no choice but to use what I've got. We still have a better aerial game than they have, and their injuries are 10 to our one, yet they insist on breaking through our line."

"Some of the writers say that your two halfbacks, Thieu and Ky, are playing their own game, and refuse to be coached. Does this bother you?"

"I feel that Thieu and Ky are first-rate players. I inherited them from the former coach, and while there have been differences in the locker room, we still get along on the field. Besides, it's too late to drop them, even if I wanted to."

"Coach, one last thing. I notice you've done away with the cheer leaders."

"Yes. I've asked the crowds to lower their voices."

Hardin, Stone Soul Picnic Headline Homecoming '69

By HELEN RAFF
Staff Reporter

With Homecoming only a month away, plans have already been made by the Class of 1970 for one of the biggest and busiest weekends in the annual series.

The festivities will start with a float parade and football rally Friday night, Oct. 17. More bands are being invited than ever before. Ten o'clock will bring two top performers to the Cage for the first concert of the weekend. Laura Nyro, the singer-composer who was responsible for STONE SOUL PICNIC and SWEET BLINDNESS, has been named the girl who showed that New York could have a sound of its own. Tim Hardin, whose SIMPLE SONG OF FREEDOM was a hit this past summer, will also appear Friday night.

The Redman football team will meet Rhode Island Saturday afternoon. Sly and the Family Stone will join Tony Joe Wright, of POLK SALAD ANNIE FAME, in two big concerts Saturday night.

Sunday's program will present a change of pace with the play, A FUNNY THING HAPPENED ON THE WAY TO THE FORUM. This is being sponsored by the Homecoming Committee, the Distinguished Visitors program and the Program Committee.

Second Music Recital

The second music faculty recital of the season at the University of Massachusetts will be a marimba recital Wednesday Sept. 24 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium by Peter Tanner, assisted by pianist Dwight Paltzer.

Mr. Tanner recently joined the faculy at the University and this concert marks his first performance in Amherst. He received Bachelor and Master of Music degrees from the Eastman School of Music at the University of Rochester and a doctorate from Catholic University of America.

Campus Firearms Ban Now In Law at UMass

A new state law prohibiting guns on campus and new storage procedures for resident students who keep hunting guns is in effect, according to Associate Provost Jeremiah Allen.

The state law, signed June 20 and now in effect, says:

"AN ACT making the possession of any firearm in any building or on the grounds of any college or university a criminal offense.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same as follows:

"Section 10 of chapter 269 of the General Laws is hereby amended by adding the following paragraph:

'Whoever, not being a law enforcement officer, and notwithstanding any license obtained by him under the provisions of chapter one hundred and forty, carries on his person a firearm as hereinafter defined, loaded or unloaded, in any building or on the grounds of any college or university without the written authorization of the board or officer in charge of said college or university shall be punished by a fine of not more than one thousand dollars or by imprisonment for not more than one year or both. For the purpose of this paragraph 'firearm' shall mean any pistol, revolver, rifle or smoothbore arm from which a shot, bullet or pellet can be discharged by whatever means."

According to UMass Security Director Col. John C. Marchant, the law looks on carrying firearms in an auto as "carrying on the person." Therefore, he warned, anyone who drives on the University campus with a firearm of any type in the car is violating the law.

Students who live on campus and own firearms for hunting purposes may register and store them through the University Police Department. Firearms will be stored for resident students only, and only for those who have valid permits- a license to carry firearms in the case of handguns and a firearms identification card for long guns. Once stored, arms will not be returned unless a firearms ID or license to carry is presented.

The police department will establish days and hours of registration and days and hours for storing and withdrawal. Storage lockers will be at the Physical Plant Building. Those using them will be expected to provide their own padlocks. The lockers will be located in a secure, locked area. It is expected that storage procedures will go into effect Sept. 29.

Geography Major Established Here

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Staff Reporter

The University is offering a major in the field of Geography, becoming the 49th state University system in the nation to do so.

This new major, open to undergraduates, is the result of much course building since 1961 by Prof. Terrence Burke, now head of Dept. Burke, graduate of the University of Birmingham, England is assisted primarily by Prof. Wilkie, specializing in the Latin-American area and cartography, graduate of work at the University of Washington, Prof. Nostrand, specialist in Historical Geography, and Mr. Hafner, a specialist in the South East Asian area.

Prof. Burke explained the growing need for Geographical study in many fields. There is a "danger" of an ever increasing gap between the social and physical sciences. Geography acts as an intermediary. There is a need for geographers in industry and government as well as at all levels of teaching. Oportunities arise in everything from the C.I.A., B.F. Goodrich, and railway lines to the local Stop & Shop. Prof. Burke estimates that there are "Two openings for every man" in this field. The work includes such things as "fast growing" urban geography, retail locations and market research, all far from the realms of teaching.

Sororities Hold Programs Tonight

Tonight, each of the ten UMass sororities will sponsor a variety of speakers and programs of interest to all University women.

Chi Omega's presentation will center around the history of the town of Amherst. Alpha Chi Omega plans an evening featuring a noted astrologer from Boston. Iota Gamma Upsilon will demonstrate mixed media with slides, sound, and light by guest speaker Robert Mansfield. Food from various countries will make up an appetizing program, set up by Pi Beta Phi, titled, Gormet's Delight. Kappa Kappa Gamma will produce a modern dance demonstration and Kappa Alpha Theta plans a theatrical rendition from the play APPLE TREE. Sigma Kappa will present commentary and slides of Europe from a student's view of a summer abroad. Mr. Weed will speak on witchcraft at Lambda Delta Phi and Sigma Sigma Sigma will host Dean Allen discussing a unique religious cult, Bai Hai. Sigma Delta Tau will present Dario Politella who will speak on "Women and Mass Communication."

A desire to increase cultural awareness has lead to the selection of these highly varied topics offered for the enjoyment of all interested college women. Each sorority house will open to visitors from 7-8, and then from 8:15-9:15, so that each individual may attend two presentations, of their choice.

Apartment Complex Planned

Four-hundred units of low to moderate cost, one, two, and three-bedroom apartments have been proposed by the Amherst Interfaith Group and plans are in final stages of Federal financing in Washington.

Robert Gailey, chairman of the local corporation, said members met last week, and saw the site plans which will be presented in a month to the Zoning Board of Appeals for approval.

Gailey added that this is not a University of Massachusetts program.

Prof Hits Lack of Science Emphasis In NASA Long Range Planning

Only about a third of the total justification of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) projects is scientific, says Donald Wise, former chief scientist and deputy director of the Apollo Lunar Exploration of NASA's Washington headquarters.

Wise, now a visiting professor of extraterrestrial geology at the University of Massachusetts, and two other NASA scientists and a scientist-astronaut resigned their posts recently in protest of the lack of emphasis on lunar science in long range planning.

The space agency, he says, is hampered by inadequate manpower for keeping track of the scientific programs, the pitting of scientific goals and political and engineering interests against each other, and the lack of understanding of scientific goals by NASA management.

According to Wise, NASA is obsessed with technology at the expense of scientific knowledge and tax dollars. An expensive series of lunar missile projects is developed by NASA but not utilized fully in order to save money for more sophisticated technologies which promise better exploration techniques in the future.

The taxpayer loses, he says, because he is paying for development of hardware or equipment that isn't used to its fullest extent. Also, extra expense incurred because facts that could have been gathered by completing the earlier series are not known.

For instance, Wise said, the pads on the lunar landing module were made larger than proved necessary because the increased size would have been needed if the moon's surface had been softer. Wise said that many compensations of this kind were built into Apollo.

When it abandons the end of a series as it did with the rangers, surveyors and lunar orbiters, NASA also finds itself in the position of having to use more expensive hardware to obtain information that could have been gathered more cheaply if the series had been completed, he said.

There is a split at NASA between proponents of manned and unmanned space flights, according to Wise. As a rule, the manned flights attract more attention and receive the first priority but the unmanned flights are very economical because the equipment usually does not have to be returned to earth. Also, payloads tend to be smaller and the equipment does not have to have the same reliability as manned flights because the loss is not so great if a vital part fails to function.

"This is not to belittle the manned flights," he said. "I was in on the science debriefing and the astronauts did a first rate job of observing - at least as well as scientists who would have interpreted what they saw."

He added that the manner flights have an obvious political advantage - they attract attention and demonstrate the United States' accomplishments in an easily understandable way.

"When Sputnik went up 11 years ago, it was a shock to us," he said. "But think what a shock the moon landing was to the Russians that were led to think that the United States didn't have the capability to do such a thing."

He is sure that the Russians will not accelerate their space program as the United States did with the announcement of the first satellite.

One of the things that Wise thinks the Russians will try for in the near future is an orbiting space station which would be maintained economically by a shuttle with a reusable launch vehicle.

The space station would have military, scientific and propaganda uses. A massive orbiting space station, according to Wise, could readily be the third brightest body in the sky - after the sun and the moon.

The goals that NASA should shoot for, in Wise's opinion, are a manned space station with economical shuttles between it and the earth (essential, he says, if the United States is to remain a "space-faring nation"), a reasonable reconaissance of the moon - including carrying out all of the planned Apollo missions, and unmanned exploration of the planets.

He is fairly sure that NASA won't change its habits, however.

"I Do, I Do" Hit at Bowker

By SUSAN SCHMEHL
Fine Arts Staff

Last Thursday in Bowker Auditorium the musical comedy "I Do! I Do!" was presented starring Phil Ford and Mimi Hines. Based on "The Fourposter" by Jan de Hartog, the happy musical encompasses fifty years of a marriage.

Ford and Hines being the sole players in the performance romped and sang with a full score of mostly playful light-type melodies. They handled the comedy well but at times the mugging became a little too much. Nonetheless it was an entertaining bit of gay whimsy. Husband and wife progress from a struggling young couple to a financially successful one equipped with all the neat, nice little creature comforts and two respectable children.

The scenes were all handled with one set focusing on the marital bed. With clever handling of props one witnesses the years passing as the score continues without interruption. This clever use of incorporating set changes with the production added additional interest to the bouncy action.

Generally speaking, the smoothly run comedy would seem to appeal more to an older group than a college-age audience, more of the sort of thing your mother might like. It was the optimistic, superficial type of musical that has been seen so frequently in the past. Charming in its particular category, "I Do! I Do!" was a cheery piece of escape into the realm of happy times and bubbles that never burst but are only mildly punctured.

Game Films Show Redman Romp over Maine No Fluke

Fusia Praises Squad But Sights Weaknesses

Though UMass' 49-7 romp over Maine earned initial rave notices, after viewing of game films, Redman coach Vic Fusia was a little more restrained in his appraisal of the contest.

"I at first thought that this was the finest first game performance by any team I have ever coached. But the films showed, that there were numerous breakdowns in assignments, and several errors in overall performance.

"However, the films also showed that each time someone would make a mistake, someone else would come through with a big play."

Sophomore tight end John Hulecki was a source of pleasure for Fusia. Hulecki caught four passes and did a fine blocking job. He also played both offense and defense for the bulk of the second period. Said Fusia, "John didn't have much practice time on offense so that the job that he did was most encouraging."

Fusia was in addition pleased with the offensive blocking up front. He was particularily pleased with the blocking of the five guards, Pierre Marchando, Bruce Fulton, Bob Pena, Jon Borderrud and Dick Etna.

The running backs also served as welcome surprise for the coaching staff. While amassing 341 yards rushing, the aggregate of backs that included Jerry Grasso, Pat Scavone, Ed Sarno, Dick Cummings, Dick Heavey, Mike Sawyer, Angelo DiNardo and Art Corsalletti all scored incoaches ratings of blocking.

There was only one injury and it doesn't appear to be a serious one. Substitute quarterback Mike Marchev injured his shoulder but is expected to be ready Saturday.

Ted Green OK After Surgery

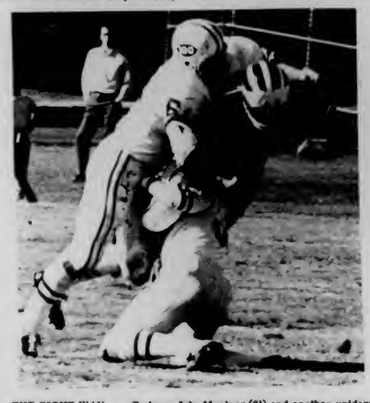
BOSTON (AP) - The Boston Bruins said Monday defenseman Ted Green suffered a brain laceration in the skull facture sustained Sunday, and has developed some muscle weakness.

A team spokesman said, however, there "is a reasonable chance he may be as good as ever" and may be able to play the last month or two of the season with a helmet.

Green underwent brain surgery at Ottawa General Hospital Sunday night as a result of a stick fight with St. Louis Blues forward Wayne Maki in an exhibition game which the Bruins lost 5-1.

Dr. Ashby Moncure, one of the Bruins team physicians, said the defenseman suffered a compounded, depressed skull facture with a dural laceration and a brain laceration.

The doctor said the player was mentally well oriented and his life was not in danger. He was expected to be hospitalized two weeks.



THE RIGHT WAY. . . .Redman John Maclean (61) and another unidentifiable player show the correct way for making a tackle. (MDC photo by Ken Stevens)

There is Rugby practice today at 4:30. Newcomers are still welcome. There is now a third team being formed.

AND THE WRONG WAY - UMass' sophomore tight end John Hulecki seems immovable as three Maine players struggle to bring him down. (MDC photo by Ken Stevens)

Ohio State Still No. 1

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
Associated Press Sports Writer

Ohio State still rates No. 1 in college football although the Buckeyes have yet to play a game. Houston has played one game, and, because of it, they already are gone from the Top 20.

The Cougars were upset 59-34 by Florida last Saturday and dropped from their No. 7 preseason ranking all the way out of the Top 20 in the Associated Press major college poll released Monday. Florida, not listed in the preseason Top 20, received two first-place votes and was listed 12th.

Ohio State, the defending national champion which opens its season at home against Texas Christian next Saturday, received 25 of 36 first-place votes, and 632 points, in the balloting by sports writers and sportscasters.

One other team dropped from the Top Ten - Missouri, which just edged the Air Force, dropped from 10th to 11th.

Two new-comers to the Top Ten were Notre Dame, which beat North western 35-10 and advanced from 11th to ninth, and Indiana, which outlasted Kentucky 58-30 and moved from 14th to 10th. Indiana just got in ahead of Missouri 167 points to 166.

Penn State, 45-22 winner over Navy, got five first-place votes and 548 points and moved from second to third, while Arkansas dropped to third despite trouncing Oklahoma State 39 - 0. The Razorbacks got one first-place ballot and 513 points.

Texas, two firsts and 440 points; Southern California, one first and 409, and Oklahoma, 352, remain fourth, fifth and sixth respectively.

Georgia moved up from eighth to seventh. Mississippi jumped from 10th to ninth.

Two new teams in the second 10 - are Arizona State, 18th, and Michigan, 20th. Arizona State whipped Minnesota, which had been No. 19, 48-26, and Michigan drubbed Vanderbilt 42-14.

Completing the rankings are Michigan State, 13th; UCLA, 14th; Alabama, 15th; Purdue, 16th; Auburn, 17th, and Tennessee 19th.

The Top 20, with first place votes in parentheses. Points awarded for first 15 picks on bases of 20-18-16-14-10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1:

Free University City Asks Faculty To Participate in Learning Process

Involvement Wanted Letter to Faculty

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

The "Dear Faculty" letter in today's DAILY COLLEGIAN is "one more step to further communications with students, faculty and administration," according to Free University City spokesman Tim Ney.

Drawn up as a "group thing", according to Ney, and representing the personnel of Free University, the letter's purpose is to "let the University community know what is happening down here." "We want to get full participation by everyone if possible," Ney added. He cited last night's appearance by University spokesman Terry Tirrell before a special committee of the School of Arts and Sciences, as an example.

New stated that he expects "good" results from the letter as "many people have shown interest already" in Free University activities.

Previously the Free University had moved in a formal manner to establish good relations with the mass media and inform the academic community of the University's existence. This has been "coming along pretty good," said Ney and thus the Free University City is now ready to extend "personal invitations to all interested."

Dear Faculty,

We at Free University City are attempting to make education a more personal and creative experience. The domes which we have built will serve as a gathering place for people who want to teach and learn in a flexible atmosphere. We hope to offer an alternative to the present university system in which organization and structure have become the ends rather than the means of facilitating learning processes.

If YOU feel that you have classes, discussions, or seminars which could gain from or add to Free University City's "living-learning environment", please contact teaching assistants, graduate students, and students who might be willing to participate. If it is not possible to bring classes down, experimental classes based on something of personal concern to you that you feel will be relevant and workable at Free University City are welcome.

Ideas and all offers of assistance are needed and will be appreciated by our community. Please call any of these people if you wish to set up a schedule or if you want to find out more about us. Thank you and please call:

Community Sense Grows in "City"

By MARK SILVERMAN
News Editor

Several hundred UMass students attended the "creation" of Free University City yesterday, and heard City founders call for all members of the University community to work at making UMass "a real tri-partite community."

The informal meeting was marked by a guerilla theatre troope presenting its version of the Univerdity, and by the inflation of a 40 foot tent by South Coast, a Texas Coast group which has been helping the City for the past week.

City spokesman Tim Ney invited all students to discuss their ideas for the Free University, and urged all interested to help construct the remaining 11 domes this weekend.

He announced that the City is presently compiling a list of faculty interested in teaching at the Free University, and that the list is expected to be made public next week.

Terry Tirrell explained that the City is designed only as a temporary alternative to present University institutions, and that its contribution will lie in suggesting alternatives which will be implimented "when either the weather or City desire brings about the Free University's closing."

The most important thing the City can do, Tirrell believes, is to make the tripartite community a working reality. More student participation in University decision making, especially in the role of hiring and firing faculty, is something which City members agree is an important immediate need.

The City hopes to affect the University in four areas, community, environment, finances and education.

"There is no real sense of community at UMass," Tirrell says. "But in the short time that the City has been organized, he continues, "a real sense of community has grown up. We hope that the closer involvement of faculty, students and administrators through the City experience will promote a greater sense of community for the University."

The City is attempting to use the "natural environment" as the basis for all City construction, and hopes that the University, in the future, will stay away from "sterile architecture" and lean more toward utilizing the environment, both aestically and practically.

Tirrell spoke of the cuts made in the University's budget by the State Government last spring, recognizing the fact that Massachusetts ranks lowest in per capita contribution to public higher education.

But Tirrell said he thinks that the money which was allotted has been misappropriated. "The harshest cuts have been made in those areas which most directly affect students," he explained.

"The allotment per student is down $18 from last year," he went on to say, "and the general overcrowding problems and room tripling have been cuased by fund shortages."

Working together, according to Tirrell, is the way in which this problem must be solved.

The educational organization, according to Tirrell, needs changing. More personal contact between students and faculty is needed, and, again, the best way to at-

Legislator Calls for End Of Free City

BOSTON - A Concord legislator called on the administration of the University of Massachusetts yesterday to "put an end" to a tent city built on the university's Amherst campus to protest an alleged housing shortage.

"The occupation of plastic and tent buildings today can only lead to the take-over of state-owned buildings tomorrow," Republican Rep. John McGlennon said.

McGlennon said health and sanitation problems would surely result from the tent city.

McGlennon said the protesting students should air their complaints through the proper channels and cited new legislation authorizing the election of students to boards of trustees of state schools as an example of the state's willingness to keep those channels open.

High School Riot Touched Off by SDS

PITTSBURGH (AP) - Black and white pupils fought each other with rocks, bottles and clubs at a racially-tense high school Tuesday and police said the incident was touched off by members of the militant Students for a Democratic Society.

Five persons were arrested and 13 people, including three police officers, were slightly injured at Oliver High School on the city's Northside.

Officials said the fight erupted after while pupils became angered by slogans sprayed in red paint on the outside of the building which read: "Black Power to Black People," "The VC Viet Cong Have Won," and "Turn the Power Over to the People."

James A. Cortese, city public safety director, said four girls, all members of SDS, were discovered painting the slogans on the building in the early morning before school opened and arrested.

He said they were part of a group of 30 women, identified as SDS members, arrested after invading South Hills High School two weeks ago. Police said the women, mostly from the New York and Chicago areas, have been prohibited from leaving the city until their case is heard in court.

Cortese said he felt Pittsburgh high schools have been selected as a target for disruption by SDS. The FBI has said the student group would attempt to create turmoil this fall at colleges, high schools and even junior high schools to promote their aims.

At a press conference held yesterday afternoon on the Free University site behind Southwest, it was stressed that the Free University seeks "constructive and creative" changes that will bring the University community together. (MDC photo by Pat Lempart).

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon announces the government will put up $622 million toward getting a supersonic air transport built and flying.

WASHINGTON (AP) - A House committee voted down President Nixon's plan for a postal corporation to operate the nation's mail service.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Democratic reform commission splits on proportional representation of minorities at the party's national convention, and postponed a vote on the question.

WASHINGTON (AP) - A former top Kennedy aide says a system of proportional representation affecting Democratic presidential primaries would lead to factionalism and divisiveness.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The new House Democratic printer, short on presses, is having to subcontract some work to his Republican counterpart.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The President has not held a formal news conference in more than three months and, under repeated questioning, his news secretary says only that he expects one soon.

BOSTON (AP) - Physicians in Massachusetts have launched a protest over new forms this state plans to begin using Oct. 1 for medicaid and welfare patients.

They said it would take too much time and paperwork to convert to the new system.

They said the cost of clerical help to handle the forms was prohibitive and that private patients might end up paying for services rendered to welfare patients.

SCAT Leases First House For Use in Co-op Project

SCAT (Student Co-operative Association Today) has announced the leasing of the former "Grad House" on N. Pleasant St. as a first step toward establishing a student co-operative housing project.

SCAT was organized by Richard Meier in response to a number of demonstrations against poor housing in Amherst this past summer. SCAT is a non-profit corporation in which the power of the co-op will lie directly with the members.

Membership fees are $10 and entitle the member to one vote in the co-operative with each person allowed by buy as many as ten memberships.

SCAT has been organized into two tiers. The first tier is composed of the members who actually run SCAT. The second tier is composed of the people who will live in the SCAT structures. These people will be responsible to the committee.

Booths will be set up in the Student Union on Thursday, Friday, and Monday to solicit money needed to start the co-op. A cleanin at the house is scheduled for this weekend.

The people living in the co-op will own it through the rentals they pay.

Only operating and maintenance and insurance costs will be paid out of the funds. Thus the co-operative will operate on a strictly non-profit basis.

SCAT hopes to set up other co-operative ventures such as a food co-op in the future.

tonight several members of SCAT plan to present a proposal at the Student Senate meeting.

Tent City Still There

Tent City is still on the Town Common.

Town Manager Allen Torrey said that he has had no formal written complaints about the quiet group, but has had "a few" verbal protests.

The small group on the Common is demanding immediate formation of a rent control board made up of tenants, housing for those now homeless in schools, churches, etc., and immediate construction of low-rent housing units by Amherst and the University of Massachusetts.

Free University . . .

tain these changes, he feels, is through the members of the University community working together.

"I'm not interested in totally directing my own education," Tirrell said, "I just want a voice."

The changes which the City urges are "constructive and creative," they claim, and will serve to bring the University community together. If their experiment is successful, they feel, more cooperation between the three community groups will have been initiated.

They say, however, that if the City and its "challenge to the existing system" is ignored, "another, less passive approach will be forced."

A Student Union, or a student power base, would then have to be established, Tim Ney explains.

While the UMass administration has issued no official statement on the Free University, Provost Oswald Tippo says, "It's an interesting experimeat, let's see what happens."

Crash Program On Illiteracy Announced

LOS ANGELES (AP) - The Nixon administration announced Tuesday it will direct a crash program to attack illiteracy in the United States.

By 1980 "no one shall be leaving our schools without the skill and desire necessary to read to the full limits of his capability," the U.S. Commissioner of Education, James E. Allen, Jr., said.

He termed the program a "national." Mrs. Pat Nixon will be honorary chairman.

The project will concentrate on improved reading instruction in elemeatary schools and will seek to guarantee every American "the right to read," Allen told delegates to the national Association of State Boards of Education.

He offered virtually no specifics, although at a news conference later he said he will meet soon with Nixon and his staff to develop plans and that a "nationwide committee of prestigious people" will be appointed to oversee the program.

History Majors' Handbook is Project Of Student-Faculty Liaison Committee

The Student-Faculty Liaison Committee, meeting periodically, offers history majors an opportunity to convey their views on the functioning of the Department and specifically to offer suggestions on its programs, courses, and future development. In April 1969, the Committee voted in favor of an undergraduate-graduate handbook for all history majors. The handbook, the main project for this year, will explain requirements, include course descriptions of both undergraduate and graduate courses, and discuss the opportunities for the history major after graduation.

The Committee currently consists of twelve history majors and seven faculty members. There are five representatives from the junior class, five from the Senior class, and two graduate students. Six of the faculty members are the chairmen of the Department's:

Library Committee, Chairman, Mr. Vincent Ilardi, Herter #602, 5-0628; Graduate Studies Committee, Chairman, Mr. Theodore Caldwell, Director of Graduate Studies, Herter #606, 5-0835; Curriculum Committee, Acting Chairman, Mr. Louis Greenbaum, Herter #636, 5-0634; Education Committee, Acting Chairman, Mr. Roland Sarti, Herter #739, 5-0693; Foreign Language Examination Committee, Chairman, Mr. George Kirk, Herter #715, 5-0674; Honors Committee, Chairman, Mr. Winfred Bernhard, Herter #635, 5-0647; Mr. Stephen Nissenbaum, Coordinator, History 150-151, Herter #721, 5-0676, joins the Committee this year.

The student representatives, available to all history students for "counseling," are:

Graduate Students: Marcia Synnott, Chairman, Herter #712, 5-0696, Home: 253-2760; Paul Foster, Pufton Apts. #7, 549-1027;

Seniors: Ellen Kaplan, Secretary, 36 Pierpont, 6-5172; Nancy Hopkins, 264 No. Pleasant; Raymond Hildonen, 504 Webster, 6-7152; Matt Novak, 408 Webster, 6-7128; Gerald Stadnicki, 208 JFK Tower, 6-7612.

Chicago Convention
Trial to Begin Over Conspiracy to Riot

CHICAGO (AP) - The trial of eight men charged with conspiring to incite mob action during the 1968 Democratic National Convention begins Wednesday in the first major test of the federal antiriot law.

The Conspiracy - an organization formed by the defendants and their supporters - maintains the antiriot provision of the Civil Rights Act of 1968 is unconstitutional.

One of the nine defense lawyers, Leonard I. Weinglass of Newark, N.J., said at a news conference that "every other federal law requires an overt act except this one. This is the first case where the federal government is trying to impose criminal penalties for a state of mind."

The eight defendants - some of them well known members of political activist groups - specifically are charged with conspiring to cross state lines with the intent of inciting a riot. If convicted, each could be sentenced to a maximum of 10 years in prison and fined $20,000.

Judge Julius J. Hoffman of U.S. District Court will preside at the trial and Thomas A. Foran, U.S. attorney for northern Illinois, will be the chief prosecutor.

Hoffman, 74, rejected in pretrial hearings all the defense motions including a continuance, a motion that he disqualify himself, that the antiriot statute be ruled unconstitutional and that a hearing on the use of government wiretapping be held before the trial.

The U.S. Supreme Court denied Tuesday a motion for a stay of the trial. Defense lawyers said they would open the trial by again asking Hoffman to disqualify himself and to move the trial from the Federal Building courtroom, which has a capacity of 175 spectators, to a larger courtroom.

The defendants are David Dellinger, 53, New York City; a former ambulance driver during the Spanish civil war, convicted of refusing to register for the draft during World War II; Rennard C. "Rennie" Davis, 23, Chicago, a founder of the Students for a Democratic Society; John R. Froines, 30, a chemistry professor at the University of Oregon, early member of SDS, Student Nonviolent Coordinating Command and Congress of Racial Equality; Thomas E. Hayden, 30, author of the Port Huron Statement, the founding manifesto of SDS; now working in Berkeley, Calif.; Abbott "Abbie" Hoffman, 31, New York City, a founder of the Yippies Youth International party with codefendant Jerry Rubin, 31, New York City, organizer of 1967 antiwar demonstrations at Berkeley; Bobby G. Seale, 32, Oakland, Calif.; a founder of the Black Panther party, and Lee Winer, 30, a teaching assistant at Northwestern University.

Rubin and Seale are being held in the Cook County Jail. Rubin has three weeks to serve on a 40-day sentence stemming from a 1966 demonstration in Berkeley, Calif.

When not attending court sessions, Seale will be in jail the length of the trial. He is charged in connection with a New Haven, Conn., slaying.

Hoffman and Davis announced Monday several demonstrations planned during the trial, which they expect to last several months.

Foran announced that an undisclosed number of Chicago police would be deputized as U.S. marshals to aid in providing federal building security.

Northampton Volunteers Aid In Resocializing Patients

The Northampton Volunteers are looking for the kind of person who is willing to spend two hours a week with patients in Northampton State Hospital. Resocialization of these patients is the goal of the Volunteer Program at UMass. Through activities such as talking and playing cards with the patients, the student volunteer gets to know the patients as people - people who need people to let them know "somebody cares about me."

Mr. George Button, one of the Hospital's supervisors for the Volunteers, attributes many changes in patients for the better directly to the influence of students.

In addition to the ward activity Wednesday evening program, there are three other weekday programs available. The case aide program requires more of a commitment of the volunteer, working with a single patient under supervision. Qualified students must have first participated in the ward activity program.

Participating in the Arts and Crafts program, students assist an Occupational Therapist with arts and crafts useful to patients in the development of manual skills and social responsibility. Students may also share musical talents with the patients by teaching music appreciation, an instrument or giving voice lessons.

Orientation for new members begins Wednesday, October 1.

UMass Trying To Fill Jobs With Blacks

UMass is making sincere efforts to recruit Negroes for job openings at the university, according to Business Manager Gerald J. Grady.

Grady told the Citizens Review Commission last night that the university's list of non-professional job openings goes to all agencies in the area concerned with placing members of minority groups, and that members of the university's staff of recruiters are working with such agencies to place minority group members.

Speaking as president of the Chamber of Commerce, Grady said that only three chamber members have as many as 15 employees and these small businesses lack the resources, know-how and energy necessary to recruit members of minority groups.

Dudley Woodall, personnel officer for Hampshire College, said that Hampshire has made efforts to hire members of minority groups but has so far been unsuccessful.

PETER TANNER will offer a marimba recital tonight as the second music faculty recital of the season. This event is open without charge and will take place in Bowker Auditorium (Stockbridge Hall) at 8:00 p.m.

A People's Protest

The Vietnam Moratorium, a series of national, escalating anti-war actions, will begin on October 15. Students at more than 500 colleges are already committed to spending the day in their communities with door-to-door campaigns, teach-ins, rallies and vigils.

Coordinated by a Washington office, the one-day October action would be expanded to two days in November, three in December, and escalating until the end of the war.

Many colleges and universities throughout the nation have already said that they will close down in conjunction with the moratorium. And with feelings concerning the war as they are now, more are bound to follow.

We believe that because the Vietnam war is totally unjust and because the present Nixon Administration has done literally nothing (as was promised) to put an end to this criminal action; there must evolve some movement by the masses to protest our criminal involvement in the war.

We urge that the administration seriously consider the reasons and the values of this movement, and then move to close the University on October 15, to free students and faculty to participate in the day's activities.

President Lederle in his convocation speech said that a communication gap does not exist at a humane university. Maybe by his action now, we will see just how much real communication exists at this SUPPOSEDLY HUMANE institution.

The Feared Group

This writer had the opportunity recently, of getting in touch with one of the most powerful men in America. I asked for an interview which he kindly agreed to and I sent out my top interviewer, Osgood Quirk, to obtain an interview. This man shall be referred to as Mr. X, as he refused to permit his name to be used.

Quirk - Mr. X. It has been estimated that you are worth about one billion dollars. Is that true?

Mr. X. No, it isn't. A billion and a half would be more accurate.

Quirk - What do you think is the most urgent problem facing America?

Mr. X. I really don't see any urgent problems. Everything seems to be going along fairly nicely.

Quirk - Well then, let's take something specific. Do you think poverty is a problem?

Mr. X. Actually, I don't. Every great country has had poverty, it's necessary for the economy to roll along smoothly. Besides, all these people screaming about poverty; it's only in relation to the rest of the country that they think they are poor. I'll bet if you compared these poor people in America to poor people in Latin America or Asia, the American poor would be considered rich by comparison.

Quirk - What do you think about the war in Vietnam?

Mr. X. Well, I think it's unfortunate that we've had so many boys killed over there. But on the other hand, look what it's done for the economy. Why do you know that in 1963, before the war really got going, I only had half a billion dollars. I've had a 200% increase in just six years. That's true for many people like me.

Mr. X. Don't make me laugh.

Quirk - Could you explain?

Mr. X. Look. They claim that they're disgusted with America and that revolution is the only solution. Now, I'd estimate that there are a million kids who have inclinations towards that line of thinking. You'd think that a man in my position would be worried by this, but I'm not.

Quirk - Why not?

Mr. X. Because for all their so-called intelligence they're acting like idiots. Taking drugs, listening to that psychedelic music, all of this is a lot of garbage. As for myself, I'm very happy that they're taking drugs and listening to that music. The reason is simple. There are a million young people in this country who, if they really wanted to, could change this country any way they felt like. Instead they are moving farther and farther away from reality, they're in their own little world. They're a threat to absolutely no one and I'm delighted.

Quirk - Suppose they started a revolution. Would you be worried then?

Mr. X. I'd like them to start a revolution. It would end this New Left movement completely. Let's be realistic. Aside from the million kids, who else would fight. The workers? Forget it. I'd like to see a long-haired hippie try to convince a truck driver to revolt. Workers today are more content than ever before. The Negroes? I doubt it seriously. Conditions are improving every day and all they want is equality of opportunity. Why should they risk what they've accomplished so far? So what your left with is the same million kids. Now, if they tried a revolution, Chicago would seem like a picnic.

Quirk - Then, I take it, the New Left does not worry you.

Mr. X. Of course not. What would worry me is if these kids took haircuts and showers and put on suits and then still retained their revolutionary ideas.

Quirk - I'm sorry but I don't understand.

Mr. X. It's simple. Can you imagine what would happen if these kids looked like everybody else, kept their revolutionary ideas, and then went into business and politics; why it's frightening. They could turn this country inside out.

Quirk - In other words, if these million kids looked like everybody else and were still revolutionary and then joined the Establishment in order to accomplish change; this would cause you concern?

Mr. X. Cause me concern? Why it would be disastrous. By the way, do any New Left people read this?

Quirk - Yes. But I wouldn't worry if I were you.

Hurricane Spiro

WASHINGTON - With all the excitement going on in Washington these days, hardly anyone noticed that President Nixon has come out against hurricanes. In one of the strongest statements he made since he took office, the President said that his Administration would do everything in its power to eradicate the threat of hurricanes in the United States.

A friend of Bebe Rebozo told me, "The President has always been against hurricanes, and he vowed during his campaign that if he were elected, he would make it the first order of the nation's business."

"But in spite of that," I said, "we still seem to have hurricanes, particularly in the South. Haven't the courts laid down certain guidelines for each state to follow in regard to the hurricane problem?"

"Yes. But the President and his attorney general and his secretary of health, education and welfare all feel that these guidelines are unrealistic, and that the South should be given more time to work out its antihurricane plans before the federal government steps in."

"Some people say the reason the President has gone easy on hurricanes since he's been in office is because he hopes to win the South to the Republican Party in 1972."

"That's nonsense. The president has always believed that local governments should solve their own weather problems.

"He prefers to implement federal storm legislation only after all other means of fighting hurricanes are exhausted."

"Then you feel he is not playing politics with the prohurricane lobby?"

"Absolutely not. He has told the Justice Department to make sure that all antihurricane laws are obeyed. And Attn. Gen. Mitchell has said that the American public should watch what he does and not what he says when it comes to prosecuting storm violators."

"I remember his saying it," I said.

"Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Robert Finch has predicted that this Administration will do more to wipe out storms than any administration in history. But both cabinet officers realize that you can't shove antihurricane legislation down the throats of the South, who have managed to live with hurricanes for so many years."

"Then a lot of this antihurricane talk is not just plain wind?"

"The President has devoted countless hours to this problem, and he is prepared to let his Administration's record speak for itself.

Rebuke

Two weeks ago (as careful readers may recall), the Collegian published a short editorial praising the editor of the 1969 INDEX, one Lowell H. Fitch, for his creation of a "controversial," "tell-it-like-it-was" yearbook. In reply to this article, I wish to offer some curiously-unmentioned truths for the information of the University community.

If students who (knowlingly or not) paid some $80,000 of their tax money to finance INDEX will turn to page 420 of their shiny new yearbooks, they may notice a blank space in the third row of "Senior Pictures" on that page. The blank space in question would originally have contained my own "Senior Picture," except for the fact that the eminent Mr. Fitch refused to permit my photograph to be published! I might add that the exalted Mr. Fitch never even bothered to inform me of his action, until I happened to encounter him (by pure accident, I assure everyone) in the Student Union Lobby one afternoon during the third week in June. When in great surprise I asked the controversial editor his reason for not publishing my photograph, he replied with a sneer that he felt my appearance in the photograph had not been sufficiently "neat" to warrant the photograph's inclusion in INDEX. This apostle of truth then proceeded to explain that the "total effect" of the photograph in question was such that (to use Mr. Fitch's own refined colloqualism) I appeared in the photograph "to be shitting on everyone else in the book."

In light of the fact that a dozen other "Senior Pictures" showed males not sporting their symbols of middle-class "neatness" - neckties, I mean - I do not count myself among those who should owe "a deep gratitude" to Lowell H. Fitch, as the DAILY COLLEGIAN editorial of two weeks ago suggests. I must admit, however, that never before have I realized so lucidly the accuracy of the yearbook's title: indeed the INDEX stands as an annual monument, a veritable glossy-rag index, of the University of Massachusetts - for its sterility; its artificiality; its public-relations phoniness; its pompous, expensive meaninglessness.

According to the abovementioned DAILY COLLEGIAN editorial, the new INDEX editor, one Alan Marcus, is fearful that "the quality of the 1970 yearbook will be diminished due to severe cuts in the current operating budget." The editorial concludes that the Student Senate should restore the funds as soon as possible "so as to guarantee a great 1970 INDEX." I question whether the INDEX should exist at all in its present form; I call upon the students of this university for their unequivocal - and vocal - support of a bill drafted by Senator Michael Macmillan demanding an investigation of INDEX editorial policies. The bill is scheduled for debate on the floor of the Student Senate this Wednesday evening.

KENNETH R. MOSAKOWSKI

Bust

As some of us plan to journey home for a week end of relief from Amherst, it might be wise to consider some highway statistics. I, along with some 200 others became one this past week end for the heineous crime of hitch hiking. In the past, the Turnpike Police did their best to give the hitch hiker a break by scaring him off to thumb on an entrance ramp. With this in mind (from past experiences) and in light of word about a new "crackdown" on penniless travellers, I followed my better senses and remained off the main roadway. I positioned myself on the ramp at Rt. 495 - Exit 11-A where two other guys were already seeking rides. Within five minutes of our arrival (due to speedy dispatch of alarm by the toll attendant) a shiney green and white chrysler cop cruiser appeared at the scene of the yet unknown to us crime. Stopping in the middle of traffic (a danger to all) a giant of a man appeared. Standing tall in the line of duty (and traffic - he was almost run over) officer McGlouplin of the Mass - mounties summoned the three of us together. Feeling reassured by his gestapo booth, pancho villa bullet sashes crossing his mighty chest and smokey the bear hat/with his trust Smith & Wesson 38 at his side, he drew a great breath and said, "You're under arrest." With the finesse of a star graduate of the Jack Webb School of Acting, he proceeded to advise us of our constitutional rights. We were then escorted across several lanes of speeding traffic to his shining steed. Off we sped to points unknown, comfortably staring a 16 guage shot gun in the face "should anything happen."

We arrived at the barracks for detention. A judge couldn't be located but as an alternate crowd pleaser, clerk of courts Loco Drisco was summoned to do us justice. Told that if we didn't have the money we would be locked up, Loco began to hear our pleas. Given a choice to pay now or accept an invitation to court on Monday ("We'd be glad to have you") we all chose the former. Following due process or some other questionable practice, I couldn't discern which, I was asked to sign two forms. After a cursory examination, I was astounded to find that only my name appeared on the form with several spaces left blank - one of particular note was for the "charge". I thought it wise before signing that the spaces be filled in. Loco asked me, "Are you crazy or sumpin'? I gotta come down heeya on a Saturday afternoon and put up wid you collage punks - sign it!" I asked if he was crazy. He mellowed and apoligized that he couldn't type. That seemed logical. I offered my services but he said I couldn't be trusted (being a criminal and such). My next suggestion was to fill the blanks with writin' or printin' or anything so there were no blanks. He agreed and filled several spaces. I thanked him and reluctantly, with great pain, handed over my life savings of $15. Ten of it he placed in an envelope marked "Official", the remainder went to his wallet. We were then told to beat it.

Therefore be aware that the fuzz is serious on the pike and the ramps. They're bustin' everybody 57 last Friday and 100 was the Saturday goal. The fine runs from 5 to 50 dollars and the maximum has already been used for people caught on the Boston extension. If you don't have the bread, you get bread and water. Don't sign anything until after you have read it and the form is complete. It's for your own protection and besides, any Loco Drisco that gets $15 for "court costs" for ten minutes work can well afford to learn to type.

W.P. BYRNES

Facism

By definition, economic fascism is private ownership of property under complete government control. Rent control is then, partially, if not totally, fascist.

The only moral way rents can be established is by competition on a free market. If a landlord or property owner charges too much, he will have no tenants and will consequently lower his rates. If tenants do not like their landlord's rates, they may seek housing elsewhere. The owner of property has the right to control or dispose of his property in any way he wishes by the virtue of the property being his. Any governmental system which denies this right is totalitarian.

Amherst College Group to Avoid Disorders

By ROBERT NATHAN
Managing Editor
Amherst Student

Amherst College remains free of campus disorder. With the efforts of students, administrators and faculty combined, the college community is working to meet the challenges which face not only the universities, but the society at large.

When, late last April, it seemed that the college might feel the shock of "revolutionary tactics" in the form of a building takeover, the faculty called a special meeting and voted to hold a two-day moratorium on classroom and sports activities in order to discuss the issues which were tensing the air.

Many members of the community still feel that the moratorium has only postponed an inevitable violent confrontation, as they did when the moratorium was called. But throughout the summer, a commission has worked on the proposals discussed in the various meetings held last year, and has planned and clarified the changes which might be made within the college; these changes will hopefully make the college more responsive to the members of its own community as well as the society, and its problems.

The commission was made up of Dean of the Faculty Prosser Gifford, the administration's representative, six student members and five members of the faculty. The faculty members on the commission are Professors N. Gordon Levin, William Hexter, Bruce Morgan, John W. Ward, and Robert Whitney.

The student members on the committee are Eric Bohman '70, Harold Dash '70, Bob Ellenport '71, John Kelly '70, Jon Weissman '69, and Leroy Howes '70, representing the Amherst Afro-American Society.

In large part the effect of the moratorium was to bring students into positions of greater authority concerning the governing of their college. Professor Whitney commented that "student concern and involvement has increased steadily since the late fifties. Now it has reached the point that existing structures can no longer contain it."

Eric Bohman said that the commission, and the effects of its planning, will be a "test of Amherst's ability to live up to its rhetoric."

But Steve Nagler '69, an influential spokesman for numerous proposals during the actual moratorium meetings was encouraged. "I don't think that we're playing games here," Nagler said. "I think that the faculty is, of course, hesitant to make rapid change, as is the administration, as is the whole institution. But I also feel that the moratorium produced real results and will continue to produce results. We have made suggestions and plans for change.

"Some of the changes we proposed," Nagler continued, "may not happen. If the college doesn't cop out, if it follows through on its commitment to listen to students and give them the chance to make Amherst more responsive to their needs, and the needs of the society at large, then we will have done something very worthwhile."

President Calvin Plimpton concurred with Nagler in an interview at the end of last year, when he pointed out that the universities of this country are as tradition-bound and slow to change as the society is. He saw the universities as providing hope because of their ability to set things in motion and cited student and university roles in the early days of the civil rights movement.

One of the prime reasons for the university's role in creating change is conflict, says Jon Weissman. "There is nothing wrong with getting angry, and working out the problems from there," Weissman said. "What would be worse is if everyone stopped talking."

Weissman, a member of SDS (Students for a Democratic Society) and the leader of the Radical Caucus during the moratorium, was hopeful about student power in community college governments and stressed its importance. "The parallel of the liberally educated man," he said, "is the active participant in government. New ideas of education should generate new ideas about government and the two should be closely connected."

But Weissman also feels that the moratorium may have only postponed violent confrontation: "Did Amherst avoid, to put it crudely, the taking of Converse Hall?" His pessimistic conclusion, "No, it only put it off until that time when the structure and the owners explicitly deny the needs of the students and faculty, as they are now emerging in a liberally and socially aware form."

The changes proposed during the moratorium, including a more equitable admissions policy, affirmation of the right of college employees to organize, co-education, and a five year B.A. program, do not change what Weissman calls the basically "racist and imperialist" nature of white power structure institutions like Amherst.

The College did respond quickly however to some of the proposed changes by establishing the five year B.A. program at the end of last year, and by opening up the main figures in the College budget to scrutiny.

One of the more memorable events of the moratorium was the letter sent to President Richard Nixon by Amherst College President Calvin Plimpton. Many other academic institutions, including Stamford, have since issued similar statements, citing the Amherst letter.

President Nixon did not issue an official answer to the letter, and has since spoken out strongly against campus disorders and referred to the problems of the universities in controlling their own students. However, his recently announced social welfare program spoke in part to President Plimpton's statement that campus disorder will continue "until you and the other political leaders of our country address more effectively, massively and persistently the major and foreign problems of our society."

Instead, the college community progresses on a somewhat different path, that of discussion. While some students feel that "the moratorium isn't over until certain effects are achieved," this is some dispute over what those effects should be.

What those effects are, what changes will be made, has yet to be seen. Students and faculty are reserving comment on the final outcome of last year's moratorium until all the returns are in, and this year will tell more clearly the story of what the moratorium did for Amherst College.

Texas Handbook Causes Problems

(ACP) - The Battalion, Texas A & M University. The University of Houston Student Congress remains deadlocked in the controversy over publication of the UH student handbook.

The Cougar Paw, held up because the Student Association president felt that the content is "not representative of the student body," may be taken to Student Court by the other Summer Senators, who feel that SA president Ulmer has made himself self-appointed censor for the publication.

Ulmer's reply was that he was "following administrative policy established two years ago in that no one person should decide on content matters."

SDS Factions Result in Bitter Dispute

By TED PRATO
Staff Reporter

The Students for a Democratic Society, up to now a major national leftist organization committed to the radical change of most or all existing American institutions, has been split up since their June convention as a result of ideological disputes.

The factions consist of Progressive Labor Party (PLP) and its ally--the Student Worker Alliance caucus, Revolutionary Youth Movement I (RYM I, also called "Weatherman"), and RYM II, which branched from RYM I for further ideological and tactical reasons.

The reason for the split is different analyses as to how the revolution should be handled. PLP-WSA believes in a revolution of the proletariat -- a student initiated mass worker revolt against the ruling class and its repressive tools. A big point of dispute between PL-SDS and RYM-SDS is the question of nationalism.

Believing the struggle to be oriented towards class struggle and that alone, PL opposes all nationalist liberation groups, including the Black Panther Party, on grounds of cultural alienation. PLP is known as hard line marxists, taking their model of revolution from 19th century proletarian revolutions.

RYM I's political platform is more oriented towards students. The claim also that the working class is the basis of the revolution, but see students in a working class category. Their intent is induce revolution through education and unification of students. They support all Nationalist liberation groups including the most separatist and militant with the justification that the pride involved is very necessary. They claim the right to existance and agitation.

RYM II's platform consists of agreement with many of Progressive Labor's points, but stresses the importance of student involvement and black revolutionary vanguard, especially black worker.

They stand more conservative than RYM I but their politics are still looser than PL's. They see a necessity for a broad-based front against the corrupt ruling interests of the country.

The factualism has resulted in bitter dispute. PL, recognizing the need for work and action relating directly to the problems of workers (and students with the same problems), never wanted the split to occur.

The Weatherman faction of SDS is becoming more isolated each day both because of their treatment on those who disagree with them (ranging from karate to disruption and breaking up of opposition meetings) and because of its promotion of a violent anti-war demonstration to take place in Chicago on Oct. 11 coinciding with the trial of the "Chicago Conspiracy," eight people indicted for "inciting" last August's Democratic Convention police riot.

Many believe this segment of SDS has abandoned its goals and is pursuing militancy for its own sake. PLP doesn't support the Chicago action. RYM II does to a limited extent, believing like many that there is a legitimate need for large-scale demonstration - opposition to the government and its policies.

The question of which SDS faction to throw support behind, if any of the present factions, is still a problem with a great many SDS chapters, including the local one. The UMass SDS chapter has merely been composed of people with no rigid ideology, but rather a concern towards local radical change and awareness.

The hardest task for an SDS chapter is to figure out what the local, national and international problems and priorities are and to get down to work on them.

There is no doubt that massive, radical change must take place in this country if we are to survive, but we must be organized to even start to change things.

On Tuesday, Sept. 30 at 8:30 p.m., there will be a panel discussion of the SDS split to be given by members of the splinter groups involved and former SDS members.

'70 Index Budget Cut, Quality Will Deteriorate

The quality of the 1970 Index, the UMass yearbook, faces serious deterioration due to a 10 per cent cut in their budget by the Student Senate Executive Committee Editor Alan Marcus says. The Exec. Committee consists of the Student Senate officers and committee chairmen.

The vote to cut some $10,000 from the Index budget took place late last May when the Senate adjourned for the year. With the Senate in adjournment, the Exec. Committee acted in behalf of the entire governing body.

The entire Senate will act this Wednesday on replacement of the funds. A cut of $10,000 will "seriously impair the quality of the 1970 book", stated Marcus. "It was quite obvious that the Executive Committee was not aware of the consequences of the cut."

A bill to remove the $10,000 had been considered by the entire Student Senate early in May and had been defeated. The Executive Committee reversed the decision on a constitutional technicality.

"As it stands now", emphasized Marcus, "the Student Senate has bought for their constituents a basic book, far inferior to the yearbook they are used to receiving.

There will be much less color, fewer pages, a cheaper cover, and poorer paper in the 1970 book unless the funds are restored". "Actually", the editor added, "since paper costs alone have gone up some 10 per cent, we are forced to ask for $4,000 more than had been cut for the same services".

"Genesis II" Features 16 Experimental Films

"Genesis II", a two hour program of award-winning short films will be shown Thursday, September 25 at 7:00 and 9:30 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium.

This collection of 16 new films made by student and independent filmmakers from across the country will be presented by the Southwest Assembly Social Committee.

In addition to some wildly experimental techniques used in making several of the films, social documentaries, dramatic screenplays, and comedic styles of expression are represented. The program as a whole is a representative cross-section of what is happening in motion picture production and in avant-garde filmmaking.

Among these 16 films are a number of film festival prize winners: "Demonstration Movie 1", "Project 1", "The Tempest", and "Campus Christi". The entire "Genesis II" program will be featured in the San Francisco Film Festival in October as a special premiere attraction. Proceeds from nationwide screenings of the program will aid participating film makers in gaining exposure and financing for development of new projects.

Long Haired Student Wins Court Case

BOSTON (AP) - Chief Judge Charles E. Wyzanski of U. S. district Court Tuesday ruled in favor of a Marlboro High School student suspended because of his long hair.

In a seven-page decision, Wyzanski ruled that Robert Richards Jr. be reinstated as a student in good standing and that his suspension be wiped from his record.

"There is no evidence that a formal written regulation of any school authority sets the maximum length or other aspects of a student's hairdress," Wyanski said in his decision.

He said there was no reason for the suspension of Richards "except possibly the principal's personal prejudice."

Low Income Housing

UMass Considers Const. Of Student Trailer Park

The Graduate Senate disclosed at its recent Monday night meeting that UMass is considering possible construction of a student trailer park.

Pending approval of the Board of Trustees and the town of Amherst, the park could become a reality by June of 1970. The site of the proposed trailer park is a 31 acre abondoned corn field located between the Presidential Apartments and Pufton Village.

The student trailer park comes from the efforts of a special Senage committee formed to discover solutions to the housing problem, particularly in relation to married students. The committee was led by the acting dean of the graduate school.

Senate VP Al Teixeira has said that a school the size of UMass should be able to provide housing for 800 married students. At present it houses 104 such families.

On Sept. 15 the committee achieved its first results when the Master Planning Committee of the UMass Faculty Senate approved a site for a proposed university trailer park for married students. Further action to alleviate this housing problem was discussed by members of the Amherst Housing Authority at a meeting Sept. 16 at which participation in a state-funded rent supplement program was proposed.

According to Teixeira such a program would provide housing assistance for low-income families - a category that includes many married students.

This plan, if instigated, would require families to pay no more than 25 per cent of their income for rent. Landlords would be fully compensated by the state for differences resulting from rent received and rent charged. Up to $10,000 in state funds are available for this program in Amherst.

Housing authority members are slated to decide whether or not such a program will be enacted at next week's meeting.

The Senate also discussed the upcoming war moratorium on Oct. 15 by the Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council. Graduate students will be voting within the next few weeks as to whether or not they are in favor of this moratorium. Their vote will help to determine whether the council will put pressure on the university to cancel classes for that day.

Senate President David Yelton also delineated those areas in which the senate is interested in securing favorable action by state legislators. Among such issues are the addition of a cost-of-living clause to the teaching assistants salary schedules and research support by the state for graduate education. Senate officials have advocated change in the state building code which they felt hinders the construction of low-cost housing at UMass.

Nat'l. Teach-In On Environmental Crisis Proposed

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- A national teach-in on the Crisis of the Environment to be held on every university campus across the country was proposed last Saturday by Senator Gaylord Nelson.

Speaking at the annual symposium of the Washington Environmental Council in Seattle, the Wisconsin Democrat said he would be leading a movement to set aside the same day this Spring for scientists, public leaders, students and faculty to discuss the threat to the ecology of the world.

Senator Nelson, who has been one of the leading voices in the Senate for conservation and protection of the enviornment, said it may be too late to convice the current established leadership how serious the environmental crisis is.

"This generation of youth is vitally concerned about the environment, because it will inherit the disaster of deadly waste and destruction. If something isn't done soon, there may be nothing left for their children," he added.

"I am convinced that the same concern the youth of this nation took in changing this nation's priorities on the war in Vietnam and on Civil Rights can be shown for the problems of the environment," Nelson explained. "That is why I plan to see to it that a national teach-in is held."

He said the teach-in could take whatever form the students at a particular university decided -- symposiums, convocations, or panel discussions.

Nelson, who is beginning a national speaking tour discussing the quality of the environment, said the range of teach-in topics that could be examined is virtually endless.

He pointed out that "responsible scientists are predicting that, unless something is done immediately, the environment may be beyond saving. One scientist has predicted that the vast oceans could be virtually lifeless within 10 years."

The former Wisconsin governor argued that the youth of this nation offer the hope of taking leadership away from the present "indifferent, venal men who are concerned with progress and profit for the sake of progress and profit alone and consider the environment the problem of the birdwatchers and butterfly chasers."

Hopefully the youth of this nation can climax the teach-in by creating support for quality of life in the final third of the 20th century that gives the same priority and money to the crisis facing the environment as has been given to national defense," he continued.

Sox Fire Williams; Popowski Interim Skipper

BOSTON (AP) - Controversial Dick Williams, who led the Boston Red Sox to their Impossible Dream pennant as a rookie manager in 1967 but feuded off and on with players throughout his tenure, was fired yesterday.

The terse announcement by the club said only that Williams would not be back in 1970, and that coach Eddie Popowski would manage the team for the rest of this season.

Several hours after the first announcement, General Manager Dick O'Connell told a news conference the firing was a "culmination of a number of things," with the main reason "a falling down of communications between the managerial staff and the players."

O'Connell said the buying up of Williams' $50,000 a year contract was "something we don't like to do and didn't want to do."

The general manager added: "He did a great job in 1967. It's very difficult to look at the attendance figures before, and then, and now, and not feel remorse."

O'Connell said the club is considering "three or four men including two in our own organization" for the new manager, but said no one will be named until the end of the season. He had no further comment on a published report that Eddie Kasko, manager of the club's Louisville farm team in the International League, would be the new pilot.

Asked if Williams had been offered another job in the Red Sox organization, O'Connell said: We didn't discuss that. I would think from talking with him that he'd want to see what's available elsewhere."

Coach Eddie Popowski, a 30-year veteran in the Red Sox organization, will return as a coach next year. Beyond that, O'Connell said, the new manager will have free rein in choosing his staff.

O'Connell said the team's disappointing showing this year, when it fell out of contention early, was a factor in the firing.

"The ball club could have done better this season," he said of the team which appears destined for a third place finish in the American League's Eastern Division. "We hope it does better next season."

The general manager conceded that there were cliques on the ball club but said he didn't know of any cases of players going to owner Tom Yawkey to voice complaints about the manager.

O'Connell agreed with a questioner that there also were reports of lack of communication in 1967.

"I understand that," he said, "But it's one thing when you're attaining success and another when you have attained it. It's one thing to be a crown prince, another to be a king."

Williams, at his home in Peabody, also said he was told lack of communication cost him his job.

"I am disappointed," Williams said. "I enjoyed the job. I had a ball. I enjoyed the ups and suffered with the downs.

Williams said he knew for two days that he was through and had been asked to finish out the season. He said he stayed until Monday night's victory over the Yankees assured him of a third straight winning year.

"I cannot say this came out of the blue. There has been too much in the papers. I was even making other plans for next year," he said.

Williams said he "enjoyed.... the finest relationship" with O'Connell.

Asked if he had any regrets, Williams said: "I was too lenient this year."

Questioned why he had not kept up with the strict discipline which brought success in 1967, Williams said: "I felt that the team had matured during the heat of the pennant race....but I was going back to the 1967 regime next season."

Williams, 40, played the last two seasons of a 13-year major league career with the Red Sox in 1963 and 1964, then managed their Toronto team to International League playoff championships in 1965 and 1966 while developing such potential stars as Reggie Smith and Mike Andrews.

Moving up to the parent club, he took a 100-1 shot which had finished ninth the year before and led it to the pennant, gaining overwhelming acclamation as the American League's Manager of the Year.

Williams began his major league managerial career as a strict disciplinarian who ran his club with an iron hand. Even in the pennant year he had troubles with some players, but they were overshadowed by the hectic drive for the flag, which went down to the final day of the season.

Pitcher John Wyatt, later traded, criticized Williams in print after the season was over, and so did pitching coach Sal Maglie, whom Williams let go.

Third baseman Joe Foy cut loose with a bitter blast at his ex-manager after the 1968 season when he was lost in the expansion draft.

This season there were other indications of dissension, climaxed by the celebrated incident involving Carl Yastremski in Seattle last month. The slugging outfielder, who also had run-ins with Williams' predecessors Mike Higgins, Johnny Pesky and Billy Herman, was pulled out of a game and fined $500 for allegedly not hustling.

Meanwhile owner Tom Yawkey who rewarded Williams with his three-year contract after the pennant year, made no secret of the fact that he was not as pleased with his manager as he once had been. Yawkey even was quoted in one published report as saying Williams was not managing the same way he had in 1967.

Toner Duo Named to Weekly All Star Teams

By DANNY KAMAL
Staff Reporter

Soccer coach Peter Broaca is more than pleased with the selection of juniors Dick Meyer and Rick Matusczak as co-captains for this year's squad. He feels, despite the fact that they are only juniors, they both have sufficient leadership abilities.

BROTHER PAUL

Meyer is a physical education major and played high school soccer and basketball in his home town of Granby. A second team All-Yankee Conference pick last year, he had particularly outstanding games against Springfield and Vermont.

BROTHER MARK

According to Broaca, "Rick Matusczak is one of the hardest working, most dedicated kids I've worked with in ten years of coaching basketball and soccer both here at UMass and previously in New Jersey." The second-year coach also added, "He leads by example and I wish I had more kids like him."

Matusczak, who also plays at the halfback position, played his high school soccer in Chicopee and also for Cushing Academy. Last summer he played in Holland, France, Germany, and Belgium as part of a European tour. Rick is a physical education major and, like Meyer, was a second team All-Yankee Conference selection last season.

However, Meyer, a halfback, underwent knee surgery last summer and there is some doubt whether he will see any extensive action this season.

Coach Broaca says it is a wait-and-see type situation. He will see how Meyer's knee holds up in practice this week before determining whether to use him in game conditions.

Booters Pick Captains

Connecticut halfback Mike Zito UMass end Paul Toner and Vermont halfback Bob Rodger have been chosen as the top offensive, defensive and sophomore players in the Yankee Conference for their performances last Saturday.

Zito, a 5'6 165-lb. sophomore, gained 218 yards on 16 carries to lead UConn to a 26-6 Conference win over Vermont. Zito raced 57 yards for a touchdown and also broke loose for gains of 39, 38, 26, 15 and 13 yards.

Rodger, a 6' 190-lb. power-runner, netted 92 yards on 18 carries in his varsity debut against U-Conn.

Other nominations were: offense - end Gene Benner (Maine), end Gene Monahan (Vermont) and fullback Ed Sarno (Massachusetts) defense - halfback John Collins (Maine), tackle Warren Negri (Rhode Island), middle guard Larry Kull (Vermont) and end Ralph Tiner (Connecticut); sophomores - fullback Bob Marchildon (Maine), linebacker Jim Sproul (Connecticut) and tight end John Hulecki (Massachusetts).

The other half of the Toner brother act on the UMass defense also got a piece of the action. Brother Mark, a senior, was named to the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (ECAC) weekly all star team.

How Mark could make the ECAC without being named also to the Yankee Conference team is a mystery but nevetheless, it is quite a feat for the two brothers.

Guess What! Bosox, 8-3

BOSTON (AP) - Home runs by Carl Yastrzemski and Tony Conigliaro powered a 13 hit attack last night as the Boston Red Sox trounced the New York Yankees 8-3 and spoiled Mel Stottlemyre's bid for his 20th victory.

Vincente Romo scattered eight hits to hike his own record to 8-10 and make interim Manager Eddie Popowski a winner in his first game at the post following the firing of Dick Williams by the Red Sox earlier in the day.

Romo scattered nine hits and had a shutout until the eighth, when Horace Clarke's single, Roy White's double, a passed ball and an error gave the Yankees two unearned runs.

Communities and Campuses Join In Vietnam Peace Moratorium

Community groups in more than 65 Massachusetts cities and towns have declared their intent to observe the Vietnam Moratorium on October 15, and to devote the day to working for peace.

Community action will vary from cleaning the beaches and holding vigils to mourning the dead. All activities will signify the participants' moral outrage that the war continues. In Amherst, the Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council is coordinating plans for the day, and welcomes suggestions from any area residents.

Among the supporters of the action are Nobel Prize winners Dr. George Wald, Dr. Albert Stygyropie, William Shirer, author of the "Rise and Fall of the Third Reich", and many clergymen and doctors.

Vietnam Peace Action, the Massachusetts ad hoc committee for the October 15 moratorium for community group actions, will work closely with the national moratorium effort on the campuses. Announcing that the objectives and strategies will be essentially the same, Vietnam Peace Action has declared that unless a total commitment to end the war is made by President Nixon before October 15, people in their communities and places of work have no alternative to make their voces heard but to refrain from business as usual.

However, October 15 actions will not be intended as a strike against local businesses and industries. Many communities will make the October 15 a work for peace day passing out leaflets to their neighbors, putting on petition drives to present to their city officials urging them to pass resolutions to stop the Vietnam war, and engaging in constructive projects in their town which point up priorities at home neglected because of the war.

The two efforts, on the campuses and in the communities, are independent but will work closely together using the same constructive grassroots action in the best American political tradition.

Students plan to assist and support those community groups with projects which require door to door canvassing, leafleting in public places and collection signatures for petition drives which proved so successful in the New Hampshire primary campaign of Senator McCarthy in 1958.

Organizing the groups in cities and towns has in many cases been initiated by many who were active in the McCarthy and Kennedy campaigns of 1968, as well as independents and Republicans. Massachusetts coordinators for the student campus activity are Harvard students Ken Hurwitz and Jeff Rosen. Mr. Sam Brown, who headed the Youth for McCarthy in the senator's presidential bid, is chairman of the National Moratorium Committee in Washington. Mr. Sam Brown is with the Kennedy Institute of Politics at Harvard.

Massachusetts Vietnam Peace Action coordinator for the community based effort is Ray Dougan, with headquarters at 44 Brattle Street. The Moratorium on October 15 is expected to be the first broadly based effort since Nixon took office, indicating the widespread concern the majority of Americans feel that the number one problem facing the country is ending the war in Vietnam.

Students Seek Funds For Letter Campaign

On October 15 students and professors will unite in a concerted effort to end the war in Vietnam. In order to obtain some outside adult response, a group of students have organized a campaign to send letters to parents of all male UMass students, informing the parents of the purpose of the Moratorium.

Seeking adult support, these letters will ask parents to write their own letters to President Nixon expressing desire to see the war's end and aiming at the President's vulnerability to publicity. The students have typed the form letters to besent to the parents but, being independent of any organization, they still need $500 for postage.

Contributions will be gratefully accepted today, at the table in the Student Union lobby.

Support For "City" Mounts

By MARK SILVERMAN News Editor

The Free University's drive toward a "constructive confrontation" gained momentum yesterday, as two top administrators praised the project, faculty support mounted, and a schedule for weekend events was finalized.

Seymour Shapiro, acting dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, yesterday circulated a memo to all faculty members urging them to participate in the City, and a large number of faculty have already volunteered to teach at the City.

Shapiro said the Free University is an "exciting project", and hailed it as a positive route to academic and University reform.

Dean of Students, William F. Field, yesterday pledged his support for the project, saying, "The students involved are really dedicated, and I am in sympathy with them."

Field continued, "Any time students are concerned with education and put together a project of this magnitude, it's a very good thing."

He added, "We need all the help we can get."

Eight programs are scheduled for the weekend, in addition to the continuing construction of the geodesic domes. All programs are open to the entire University community.

The Thursday events include, at 10:30 a.m. in dome 2 a discussion of women's liberation led by Anna Singletary. At 3:30 p.m. a seminar for consciencously dissatisfied people will be led by the Mental Health Services, in dome 1. At 7:00, in dome 2, a seminar on the suburban disadvantaged will be conducted. And at 7:30, the French Revolution, 1968 will be discussed by Bob Weiner in dome 1.

On Friday, Professor Arthur Kinney will discuss William Falkner in dome 2 at 3:00 p.m. At 3:30 p.m. in dome 3 John Hunt will discuss Shakespeare, and at 3:30 the Revolutionary Jesus, a rap session on religion, will be held in dome 4 with John Fitz.

An encounter group will be held Saturday at noon in dome 2 with Gene Sherman.

In the midst of all of these plans and progress, the City met one roadblock yesterday. The electric fan which had been used to support the 40 foot clear plastic tent was stolen Wednesday night, and city spokesmen have asked anyone knowing where the fan is to help get it back.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

SAIGON (AP) - North Vietnam's National Assembly has named Ton Duc Thang, 81, to succeed the late Ho Chi Minh as president. The real successor to Ho has yet to be chosen and a struggle still cannot be ruled out.

The selection of Vice President Ton Duc Thang was a technicality. The North Vietnamese constitution required the selection. Thang obviously is a figurehead. The real power, as in any Communist state, is in the hands of the ruling party, in this case the Lao Dong Workers.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania was elected leader of Senate Republicans Wednesday, and Sen. Robert P. Griffin of Michigan was chosen as GOP Whip.

President Nixon telephoned congratulations to the party's new Senate leadership team.

Scott told the President he hopes his new job will one day lead to a Senate majority, instead of the 43-vote minority the GOP new commands.

Outbursts Plague Nation's High Schools

In nearly a score of states since the fall semester began, high schools and grade schools have become arenas of racial tension and student revolt, abetted in a few instances by white and Negro adult militants and organized young radicals.

In a Pittsburgh high school, a bare-breasted girl ran through a hall, urging pupils to leave classes. Negroes protested the playing of "Dixie" in South Carolina and Florida schools. Regulations on long hair and clothing sparked unrest in Dallas. Run-down facilities aroused a group of Boston high school students.

In Columbia, S.C., parents of Indian ancestry invaded an elementary school in an effort to force increased enrollment of their children. They were supported by civil rights groups, including the black Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

A group of about 30 female demonstrators invaded Pittsburgh's South Hill high and distributed literature of the radical Students for a Democratic Society. The bare-breasted girl acted in their support. Police arrested 26 girls in a scuffle and said all but one were from outside Pennsylvania.

In New Jersey, New Brunswick high was closed after a boycott staged by 175 white students, who demanded more protection against Negro students. Meanwhile all 11 city schools were closed because the district's liability insurance expired. School officials said they were caught by surprise, although break-ins and disorders in city schools during the past year caused an estimated $21,000 in damage.

Five girl organizers in Students for a Democratic Society invaded a Boston girls' high school and held a teacher captive briefly while handing out radical literature. At an elementary school in a Boston slum, white and black mothers fought with fists on opening day in front of first-grade pupils.

At East Boston high, 150 students stayed away from classes for two days in a dispute over a strict dress code and unheated and run-down facilities.

Harvard Sponsors Housing Program

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - A new program of housing for low and middle income families in Cambridge is ready for execution, Harvard University announced Wednesday.

The first phase of the Harvard-sponsored program will comprise about 389 dwelling units exclusively for Cambridge residents not directly associated with Harvard.

Harvard will lease to the Cambridge Corporation a parcel of land on Mt. Auburn St. for construction of a 64 unit apartment house for the elderly.

In West Cambridge, land will be made available to Starrett Bros. and Eken, a housing development construction company, for development of 325 units for families as well as the elderly.

The President and Fellows of Harvard, making the announcement, said they expect to announce additional projects in both Cambridge and Boston in the near future.

The alleged lack of low and middle income housing in the Cambridge area was one of the complaints of the Students for a Democratic Society during their takeover of University Hall at Harvard last April.

Commuter Club Accepts Amended Constitution

The UMass Commuter Club met yesterday in the Council Chambers to discuss the proposed constitution drawn up last week. Bill Perkins went through each section of the Constitution explaining controversial clauses.

The basic structure of the proposed constitution is as follows:

An Executive Council will be composed of eight members elected at large, and three ex-officio members. Ex-officio members will be those candidates receiving the highest number of votes in the Student Senate elections. Ex-Officio members will have full voting priviliges, but will not be counted in a quorum. Candidates for Senate should be aware of their responsibilities to the Commuter Club. From these members elected in the Fall elections, a chairman, secretary, treasurer, and information officer shall be elected.

Executive Council meetings shall be held regularly and will be open to the entire Commuter assembly. As amended yesterday, the Executive Council meetings shall require one day's notice in the Collegian. There shall be at least one general meeting of the Commuter's Assembly each semester. Assembly meetings require seven days' notice.

The Executive Council may spend Club funds in three ways. By majority vote of the Council, the Executive Council is authorized to expend an amount specified by the Assembly, for any single purpose, without obtaining direct consent from the entire Assembly. The Assembly may establish a fixed contingency fund for use by the Executive Council for actions supported in principle by the Assembly but for which specific funds have not been allocated. The Assembly shall authorize expenditures of general benefit of the membership.

An officer of the Executive Council may be removed if a petition bearing the signatures of one hundred members of the Assembly is presented. Amendments can be made at any assembly meeting. Passage will result from a two-thirds favorable vote. Ratification of the constitution shall require the approval of three-fourths of those voting on referendum in the Student Senate elections, Oct. 9.

Members present yesterday also made the following suggestions as to the use of funds allocated to the Commuter Club: Make funds available to those members for legal costs against individual landlords or hire a lawyer to handle all gripes against landlords. Hire a consultant firm to deal with long range plans of parking and the relationship of the commuter to the University. Start a newsletter to inform commuters of events of special interest to them. Offer limited funds available as "seed money" to help commuters obtain the needed finances for low-cost housing from the University, state government or federal government.

Nixon Announces Farm Program

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Nixon administration presented its farm program Wednesday but Chairman W. R. Poage, D-Tex., of the House Agriculture Committee said he wants "to try and put some meat on the skeleton" of the proposal.

Poage called for more informal meetings with Agriculture Department officials to accomplish this. About 10 such sessions already have been held.

"I feel they have helped," he said, "and are about the only way we can get anywhere," Poage said.

Secretary of Agriculture Clifford M. Hardin drew the outlines of the long-awaited plan for the unit in the form of alternatives to be considered by Congress. But he gave no specific cost figures, preferences and few details.

The program is designed to possibly make about 400,000 low-income farm families eligible for federal payments averaging $1,000 a year while more successful producers would compete in the free market without some of the federal benefits now available.

In a repeat performance of last year's spectacular feature show, the University of Massachusetts Marching Band this Saturday will present "Simon and Garfunkel: The Sounds of Silence." The Band will open the season with an unusual arrangement of the title song. During "59th Street Bridge Song," feature twirlers Darragh Mullarkey, Carolyn Nightengale, and head twirler Andy Fahey will make their trio debut. A Queen Anne Salute introduces the 21 member cornet section coached by Mr. Walter Chestnut in "Fakin' It."

The Band involves itself in social commentary in a unique game of tic tac tie to the tune of "Mrs. Robinson." The show closes with the spotlight on the percussion section in an exciting and imaginative arrangement of "Scarborough Fair."

This season promises to produce one of the best Marching Bands UMass has ever seen. Solid instrumentation backed by the Band's own special drive and spirit will combine on Saturday to produce a sound you will not soon forget.

An impressive sight is this year's full rank of sousaphones. Band manager Clif Banner is rank leader.

DVP Committee Seeks Members Plans Greater Communication

By JILL WALLACH
Staff Reporter

D.V.P.---these three letters stand for a 14-15 member committee of students who bring distinguished visitors to speak to the campus community every year.

"The Distinguished Visitors Program Committee is made up of sophomores, juniors and seniors who are interested and knowledgeable in current and cultural affairs," said Mike McKenna, chairman of DVP, in a recent interview.

Selection of new members, according to McKenna, will be made in November. "This year only seven or eight members will be chosen. They will be either sophomores or juniors. We usually get 80-100 applications for the eight spots."

"New members are chosen on the basis of several criterion," McKenna stated. "It is desirable they have some knowledge of RSO, because we do much work with them. They must have a willingness to make DVP their prime extra-curricular activity. They should be able to contribute some imaginative ideas."

McKenna explained the activities of the committee: "Three people are assigned to each of the areas from which we try to get speakers (social sciences, humanities, natural sciences, and the performing arts). They handle all the aspects of contacting prospective speakers, etc. Some people handle dinners, publicity and the other details that are necessary. We also have representatives on the Five College Student Co-ordinating Committee and the Martin Luther King Social Action Council."

"The expenses of the committee, said McKenna, "are paid for by the student tax. Each undergrad pays $1.50 a year--75¢ per semester. This tax is included in your semester bill. The tax itself is determined by the student senate. As the student enrollment increases, the budget increases. The budget now is between $22,000 and $23,000."

McKenna continued: "We are really trying to open DVP to the students. We want to create communication between faculty, students and the committee so that incidents like the one with Strom Thurmond will be avoided."

"This year the DVP are also instituting a video tape collection of all the programs that we have from now on. These will be located in the archives of the library."

"We are also trying to set up a clearing house for all lectures on campus in an attempt to eliminate conflicts between various organizations and various courses trying to get the same man. But this is only in its infant stages. We hope to have it going by next September."

Committee Openings

Positions are still open for a number of joint student-faculty and student-administrative committees. Applications for these committee positions may be obtained in the Student Senate office, top floor, Student Union.

Meet GSS Sorority Serves Campus

The sisters of Gamma Sigma Sigma, the national service sorority on campus, would like to identify themselves. Although they have been in existence for six years, and have been active in many phases of campus and community life, the sisters would be willing to bet that 80% of the university community has never even heard of them.

On the other hand, probably 99% of the community has come in contact with them and the services they perform. Maybe you've noticed them but weren't aware of who they are? Maybe one of them has helped you at the Book Exchange they ran this fall with their APO brothers? Maybe one of them ushered you to your seat at a university production? Or, maybe they held your hand when you gave blood last semester at the Bloodmobile?

Maybe you saw them boarding a bus with the Belchertown volunteers or the NES? Or directing back-to-campus traffic this fall? Or maybe you noticed a group of girls just sitting around the Hatch some afternoon talking? Well, if you did it's a good chance these girls were Gamma Sigs. Next time stop and say hi!

Cemetary Desecration Charged

QUINCY, Mass. (AP) - The trial of producer-director Otto Preminger and film star Lisa Minnelli on charges of desecrating a cemetery was continued to Oct. 9 in district court Wednesday by Judge James A. Mulhall.

William J. Disher of Braintree who owns a lot in the Blue Hills Cemetery asked Sept. 10 that damages be assessed against Preminger and Miss Minnelli.

Disher asserted a nude scene featuring Miss Minnelli, filmed in the cemetery July 31 for the movie "Tell Me You Love Me, Junie Moon" amounts to a nuisance.

Disher has also asked Suffolk Superior Court Judge John W. Coddaire Jr. to prohibit the showing of the scene. Judge Coddaire has taken the matter under advisement.

Horsewhipping

In the wake of protests against the Vietnam war and the military-industrial complex have come polemics against "big government". Accordingly, the Nixon Administration has announced its desire to return government to the people and has introduced the "New Federalism."

However, the president's main course of action has been to let local areas decide issues such as school integration. This is most pleasing to the South, for the administration is thus allowing Southern whites to rule as they please in this area. As one Southerner in the Administration has said, the government has stopped horsewhipping a section of the country. Thus, in the name of limited government, the rights of Black individuals are being denied.

Certainly the federal government should be small, or limited, in its power over private persons. It should refrain from prosecuting individuals for their opinions, appearance, or personal conduct so long as no one is actually injured by these personal matters.

However, there are instances where big government is needed. As the supreme power in the United States, the federal government has responsibility to act when local governments trample or adulterate the rights of citizens. If a local government is failing in its duty to protect citizens, the federal government must step in.

The federal government has no right to stop segregationists from speaking or thinking as they wish. It does have an obligation to protect Blacks from being denied full use of public schools, for public is an INCLUSIVE term. Those whites who wish to send their children to a segregated school must look outside the public school system for educational facilities.

The government must not allow de jure or de facto segregation. There are times when a section of the country, such as the south or Massachusetts because of its "Chastity Laws, is deserving of a horsewhipping. It is the Federal government, as the highest repository of the people's sovereignty, which must act. It is the agent which must be willing and able, if local governments are not, to protect the rights of the individual citizen.

The federal government must act, must be "big," in such cases, because individual rights are what America is all about.

Fair Play

I am strongly opposed to the views of Student Senate President Bruce Balboni in regard to the Trustee Membership for students.

Senator Balboni declared that one vote in the board would be of little importance. May I call to the attention of the faculty and students that we don't claim to take over the Board by asking for as many seats as to enforce the students point of view. We are only asking for a member or members who can explain and strongly recommend what we need. The idea of having a representative whether or not the decision appeals to us is better than being forced to follow that decision in a dictorial manner.

There is no doubt that this single vote will affect the decision making, and further more; it might be the deciding vote in a tie. It is true that many decisions are made by communities on which students serve. But if we fail to reach a post on the Board of Trustees is a guarantee for all of us in order to take part in all activities. It should be made possible.

Excuses..

No Miss Swift, the Housing committee has not died. First to set the facts straight, I am not a member of the University Housing Committee, As Chairman of the Student Senate Services Committee last spring, I attended a meeting with Dean Noffsinger, Jack Wells, and Mr. Kittle to eliminate the planned Fifty Dollar Deposit System. In the process it was agreed that students should take an active part in planning housing facilities - this resulted in the creation of the Housing Committee. I attended its first meeting in order to help establish what the preview of responsibility for the committee would be - it was the only meeting I attended.

At the end of the spring semester, I left U.Mass. and the Housing Committee with the understanding that there would be at most two triples to a floor on campus (these could quickly be disbanded by utilizing the empty beds of no-shows). This brings up point number two - Triples were not to be avoided at all costs. They were to be used to insure some sort of a reasonably full dormitory system on campus. The triple had been partially successful in past years for this purpose. There was no reason to think that it would not work again. I can still hear Jack Wells, former Head of Housing, saying, "Only two", "At most two", "only two....."

What happened? Over the summer Jack Wells left Housing and Margaret Ford took over as Head of the department. She still does not understand how Mr. Wells believed that triples would exist at a ratio of no more than two to a floor this semester. Now knowing that the administration planned on accepting 10,720 undergrads as far back as last October (this is more than we could ever hope to accommodate with present dorm space) - neither do I.

In short Tina, the present Housing Committee student members (as well as every other student on campus) were misled by (what I consider) a misrepresentation of facts (snow job) by the administration. The student committee members left U.Mass. feeling that the housing situation was in fair shape. As for myself, I was never notified to the contrary.

The Housing Committee will be meeting within the week. Chairman Dennis Klayton is presently notifying the proper administrators in order to find the best time and place (tonight if at all possible). Your ideas are neither unrealistic nor impossible to initiate Tina - I'm sure they'll be considered along with many questions pertinent to the present Housing crisis.

Free University City is going up this week (it can use all the help students will give it) - let's see if we can manage to lift the rest of our anatomy.

The Suit That Looked Like an Edsel

WASHINGTON - I have been looking at the new men's fashions with interest; but no matter what they tell me, I'm not going to be sucked in again. You see, I happen to be one of those unfortunate souls who was persuaded a few years back that the Nehru suit was the wave of the future.

Little did I realize that the Nehru would become to men's tailoring what the Edsel became to automobiles.

Nobody knows how many Nehru suits were actually sold during that period, mainly because very few men will admit now to having bought one. But in wardrobes all over America, attracting moths and gathering dust, hangs the stark evidence of an era that most Americans would just as soon forget.

Most of the Nehru suits were worn only once. The laughter, wisecracks and snickering that greeted the wearer when he appeared in public drove him back to the dark depths of his closet, where he hit until the ridicule had subsided.

The world record for wearing a Nehru suit is held by Robert Yoakum of Lakeville, Conn. Yoakum wore his suit three times - once to a college reunion, once to dinner with his in-laws and once to a Jets football game.

He was cited for bravery by the men's clothing industry and his suit was given to the Smithsonian Institution where it now hangs next to Lindbergh's "Spirit of St. Louis."

Not all Nehru suit owners were as lucky. The real problem they have had is getting rid of their suits. Since most of them are new, wives have hesitated to throw them out. In cases where they have been thrown out, the trash men have refused to take them.

Another man confessed, "It wasn't a complete waste of money. My dog sleeps on it at night."

One of the problems of Nehru suit owners is that they're stuck with dozens of turtleneck sweaters and chained medallions that had to be worn with the suit.

I personally bought a dozen turtlenecks at the time I purchased my Nehru, because the salesman assured me I'd never have to wear a dress shirt again.

A friend of mine, who had three Nehru suits made to order for him at $200 each, tried to hang himself with one of the medallions after he realized what he'd done. But the chain on it broke, and he's now being sued by his tailor.

The question people are still asking is, why did the Nehru fail? You can get as many answers as there are Nehru suits.

Goodwill Industries doesn't want them, and the Salvation Army says, "Our people may be hard up for clothes, but they have their pride."

One friend offered his Nehru suit to a hippie who told him, "You must be crazy, man. You want people to think I'm a freak?"

A sociologist said, "The black nehrus for formal evening wear made men look like priests, and I think many of them became tired of always being asked to give the benediction."

And a psychiatrist said, "I think anything in America will fail that keeps a man from putting his hands in his pants pockets."

State Education Board Considers Certification and Curriculum Standards

The state Board of Education announced Tuesday it will submit a budget request for $8.1 million for 1971, nearly double the $4.1 million the Legislature appropriated for the current operating year.

The board also will ask legislation which would grant a cost of living pay increase to Comm. Neil V. Sullivan. Increases for the education commissioner and the chancellor of the Board of Higher Education were not included when the Legislature voted a 12 per cent pay raise for state employees.

The board at its meeting also considered preparation of legislation for teacher certification and the establishment of minimum curriculum standards.

In the last session of the Legislature, a bill, supported by the Mass. Teachers' Association and the Mass. Advisory Council on Education, which would have set teacher certification standards, was defeated after strong protests by several teacher groups, most notably the Quincy Teachers' Association.

Commr. Sullivan was sharply critical of the budget processes on Beacon Hill by which the state's education budget was cut last year without any consultation with officials of the agency affected.

"We want to be at the table," he said, "when they take a red pencil to our budget."

Associate Commr. Douglas Chandler called the $8.1 million budget a realistic one.

He said that the board is responsible for more than a billion dollars in public money spent in the cities and towns throughout the state.

A working draft of the new standards was presented to the board yesterday with recommendations that it be submitted to critical review by personnel from the colleges of education and by members of Sullivan's Youth Advisory Council, 21 high school students from across the state.

Lawrence Bongiovanni, director of elementary education, was unable to supply an estimate of the cost of the proposed minimum standards because there is now no information about what the separage systems are teaching in these subjects, ranging from art to social studies.

UMass Professors Say Poetry Is Means of Understanding Life

By MONICA McCARTHY
Staff Reporter

According to two UMass professors who are also published poets, poetry is a means of understanding life.

Dr. G. Stanley Koehler, who writes what he calls "personal poetry", believes the practical purpose behind poetry is to "try to extract meaning from even the most trivial events." Poetry makes life more significant and meaningful, he said.

Joseph Langland thinks of poetry as "one of the finest ways to emotionally express yourself". He said the "practical value of poetry is pleasure." Pleasure, he explained, is the primary goal of life and poetry, by helping the reader enjoy life, keeps readers "alert and alive". Mr. Langland continued: "Language is the most powerful invention of man" and through refined use of language poetry keeps it alive.

These veteran English Dept. members gave their comments in interviews in which they were asked: "What in life does poetry prepare you for?"

Both said appreciation of poetry merely for the form or work arrangement is inadequate for a true love of this writing form. The language, Dr. Koehler said, is merely a means to an end and the end of poetry is meaning.

Mr. Langland compared it to one's attending a football game without understanding football: it is pleasurable to be outdoors in the cool Fall air, in a large cheering crowd, but it would be more enjoyable if one understood what was happening.

Both professors say they write for personal satisfaction and would continue to write even if no one read their works. Said Dr. Koehler, "I write not so much to communicate as to explore personal feeling and meanings." He hopes his writing may benefit others, but called this a "side effect".

Poetry is a way of finding out what the writer thinks about something, what Dr. Koehler calls "recovery of meaning." To Mr. Langland, the "meaning is resonance - emotional things radiate out from the central meaning." Added Koehler: "There is a meaning and you want to find out what it is. You feel easier when you understand the meaning." As Langland said, poetry prepares one to enjoy life.

Senate Adds Campus Busses

By Pat Chimiel
Staff Reporter

Recently the Student Senate appropriated money and purchased two buses at a cost of $8,000. The buses will be used in addition to the two from last year to transport students around the campus.

The vehicles are now in maintenance. After a thorough overhaul and paint job, they will be easily identified by their UMass lettering across the sides. The buses are registered in the name of the Student Senate.

The problem right now is a need for drivers. Mr. Burke and Mr. Devlin from the physical plant have volunteered to train the applicants. Five persons have applied and hopefully will soon receive their licenses.

Bus drivers are required by state law to have a special class two chauffeur's license. This is what the prospective drivers are being trained for. The undergraduate students will be paid for their work.

The buses will operate much like last year.

A Grandfather Yet, Young Can Teach Old Honesty. Writes J. D. Rockefeller, III

NEW YORK - America's grown-ups can learn from the nation's switched-on young people about absolute honesty and depth of feeling in matters of love, marriage and sex, grandfather John D. Rockefeller III commented today.

In a signed article appearing in the current issue of Look Magazine, the oldest of the five Rockefeller brothers said that a new perspective on modern life is emerging from the behavior and beliefs held by many of today's young people.

"I greatly respect them for taking a fresh look at boy-girl and man-woman relationship in our society," said Rockefeller. "Much of what they are thinking, saying and doing makes sense to me."

In the article, Rockefeller said that his conclusions about the young generation were formed after a period of intense study for a speech he delivered last October. The subject of that speech was the youth revolution and he came away convinced of the great potential in the energy and ferment of young people, he said.

"I do not mean to ascribe magical powers to the young. They do not have all the answers. But I believe undeniably many young people in many ways are the advance guard into new behavioral territory in this complex and changing world and that we all would do well to observe carefully what they do and say," wrote Rockefeller.

The nation's young, he said, are forcing a change in the old 'Victorian inhibitions" about sex. While youth has its problems, he added, "puritanism certainly is not one of them."

The true significance about the sex revolution is not whether there is more or less sex, but the emergence of a healthier attitude about sex, said Rockefeller, commenting that this revolution has brought out into the open "what used to be needlessly hushed up and saddled with guilt."

Rockefeller wrote in his Look article that marriage remains the cornerstone of society and "remains as important as ever with the young." Despite their freedom from convention and inhibition, he said, "their relations are not superficial: rather there is genuine striving for depth and meaning."

Faculty Leaders OK Evaluation

(ACP) - Approval of the University of Florida's Student Government plans to evaluate professors at the school has come from a number of faculty leaders.

Dr. Raymond Fahien, president of the UF chapter of the American Association of University Professors, said "I think student opinion should be given a considerable amount of weight in whether a teacher should be given tenure or not."

TV Shows Less Violence

By JOSEPH E. MOHBAT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The National Commission on Violence said Wednesday television programs contribute to violence in America but are showing signs of improvement.

With its "constant portrayal of violence," the commission said, television is "pandering to a public preoccupation with violence that television itself has helped to create."

Executives of the three major television networks said the commission report relied too heavily on past performance and took insufficient notice of substantial changes in program content in the current season.

"Violence on television," the commission said in its fourth report on violence in the United States, "encourages violent forms of behavior and fosters moral and social values about violence in daily life which are unacceptable in a civilized society."

A Case of Embarrased Bandits Or, Who Stole Our Getaway Car?

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) - While three bandits were robbing a bar in nearby Waterford Township, a passer-by stole their getaway car.

State police, reconstructing the Sunday robbery, said the three rushed out of the bar with about $1,000 and found that their car, left outside with motor running, was gone. They re-entered the bar, took car keys from a customer and drove away in his car.

Both cars were recovered later, and the thief of the bandits' car turned himself in. The robbers were still at large Wednesday.

A Solid Buffalo Team Preps for Clash with Redmen

Bull's Experience Will Test UMass

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Staff Reporter

Coming off a 17-0 victory over Xavier after an opening game 10-7 upset loss to Ball State, the University of Buffalo brings its solid offense and veteran defense to Alumni Stadium for Saturday's football contest against UMass. Game time is 1:30.

Eight of the starters on offense are lettermen as new head coach Bob Deming will unveil his "motion 'I' formations with a split end," the Bulls' brand new offense for the '69 campaign, inventively referred to by Buffalo pressmen as the Bulls "I".

The backfield quartet of halfbacks Scott Herlan and Barney Woodward, fullback Joe Zelmanski and quarterback Mick Murtha is the main attraction of the new attack.

Herlan, a 6'2-198 lb. junior, is a transfer from Syracuse and is coming off his year of ineligibility. The 5'9-189 lb. Woodward, a junior, is starting in the absence of Pat Patterson. He is a power runner and he can catch the ball should the situation demand it.

Patterson will be missed. The 5'11-189 lb. senior has rushed for 1,027 yards in his two varsity years and is in pursuit of the Bull career mark of 1,570, held by Lee Jones.

Scoring points is Zelmanski's pride as is evidenced by the fact that the 6'1-200 lb. junior led Buffalo last season with ten touchdowns.

Running the offensive show is the 5'11-176 lb. Murtha, a senior who holds five passing records in his two previous seasons with the Bulls. Last year he was inactive because of a summer shoulder operation. He was injured early against Xavier but should be ready for Saturday. In Murtha, Redman fans will be watching one of the best quarterbacks in the East.

Backup strength at quarterback is provided by 6'3-203 lb. junior Ed Perry and 6'2-181 lb. sophomore Kirk Barton, who led Buffalo to their win over Xavier.

At tight end for Buffalo is Paul Lang at 6'-210 lbs. The senior co-captain is considered to be the team's best all-around performer. In '68 he set a receiving record for most yards as his 31 catches netted him 523. Backing up Lang is capable two-year letterman Terry Endress, a 6'200 lb. senior.

On the other side of the line at split end is Bruce Fraser, a 6'1-185 lb. sophomore who is filling in for the injured veteran Dick Horn.

Atkinson is the only green player, but he has drawn impressive raves for his work thus far. Walgate, whose height, weight and ability make him a definite pro prospect, has lettered the past two seasons; Vigneau and Henley each have earned a letter. Rovell Jones, a junior at 6'1-222 lbs., and junior Tom Elliot, 5'11-183 lbs., at safety. They all earned letters as sophomores last year. Depth here is considerable, provided by 5'9-173 lb. senior Gary Grubbs and 6'-180 lb. Karl Zalar.

In their first two contests thus far, the Bulls have scored only 27 points, which is slightly more than half of what UMass scored in its opening game romp over Maine. On paper, it appears that their offense is a lot more capable.

On defense Buffalo has allowed but ten points and is coming off a shutoff effort versus Xavier. Holding the high-powered offense to ten points or under seems unlikely, especially on UMass' home turf, all of which points toward an interesting contest at Alumni Stadium on Saturday.

Quarterback MICK MURTHA and defensive end PRENTIS HANLEY will play important roles for Buffalo in Saturday's clash with the Redmen at Alumni Stadium. Kickoff is slated for 1:30 p.m.

Clark has two years experience while Kershaw and Luzny have each lettered once. The latter, however, was an All-East selection as a sophomore, but injuries kept him out of action in '68. Buffalo regards Luzny as having All-America potential. Seniors Jim Misher, 6'1-212 lbs., and Gary Chapp, 5'8-200 lbs., add depth to the linebacking corps.

Buffalo's defensive secondary is solid with juniors Len Nixon, 5'11-182 lbs. and Joel Jacobs, 5'10-176 lbs. at the cornerback slots is a capable reserve at tackle. The Bulls employ four linebackers. They are senior co-captain Scott Clark, 6'-210 lbs., sophomore Larry Madden, 6'-197 lbs., senior Mike Luzny, 5'9-209 lbs. and junior Ed Kershaw, 6'2-198 lbs.

Varsity 'M' Club Honors Sarno, Toner; Fusia Commends Excellent Attitude

Vic Fusia usually doesn't like to praise or criticize his team, but rather talk in generalities about his squad's performances. But the UMass head coach, at this week's Varsity 'M' Club meeting was moved to say, while viewing filmed highlights of that academy award performance at Orono, "I'm not saying we are a great team. But I will say that this is a good team, a team that will be hard to beat."

Coupled with Fusia's burst of confidence was the presentation of outstanding player awards for the Maine game to fullback Ed Sarno and end Paul Toner.

Sarno, a senior co-captain from Waltham, was given the offense award for his excellent blocking job that led to huge Redman ground gains, and his own demonstration of power running.

Toner a senior from Swampscott who, in addition was chosen Yankee Conference defensive player of the week, was the main cog of a defensive line that thwarted the Black Bears on only 51 rushing yards.

Fusia, in addition to giving his squad some well-earned praise singled out his captains Sarno and end Tom York as being "two of the finest captains we have had here in the last few years."

It wasn't all head coach and awards at the luncheon. Assistant Coach Milt Piepul made no bones about expressing worry at the talented Buffalo team treking into Amherst this weekend. Piepul remarked, "This is a physically strong team with a lot of talent. Their defense is their strong suit, with virtually all veterans returning, and at least three All-American candidates on the unit."

"They will present a stern test to our offense while their attack will be tough for our offense. Buffalo is a fine football team."

Fusia, in addition, added, "We will be facing, in Buffalo, a very strong team, of the caliber of a Boston College or Holy Cross. However, we can defeat them with execution of what we do well, and with the continuance of our excellent attitude. In other words, this should be one heck of a ballgame."

ED SARNO, senior fullback for the Redmen, was presented the offense award at this week's Varsity 'M' Club meeting. His blocking and running was of major importance in UMass' stunning victory over Maine.

UMass No. 4

(AP) - There's nothing resembling agreement among the selectors in this year's first Associated Press weekly New England College football poll, with five different teams receiving votes for first place and nobody emerging as a standout top choice.

Harvard, B.C., and Dartmouth received five first place votes, with Harvard gaining the No. 1 rating with 169 total points on the basis of stronger second place support. The crimson shared the top spot with Yale in last season's final poll.

BC edged Dartmouth for the second spot, 148-147 partly because one selector left the Indians off his ballot altogether while the Eagles were at least somewhere on all 18 ballots.

Massachusetts, a 49-7 conqueror of Maine in its opener, garnered the other two first place votes and took fourth place with a total of 116.

Recreational Running Attracts All Ages

By TOM J. DERDERIAN
Staff Reporter

Sunday evening saw the first in a continuing series of recreational cross country meets. Thirty-six undergraduates, graduates and faculty ran, not including four girls who arrived three minutes late, started and promptly got lost. Some of the entrants raced and some jogged; Joe Martino and Bob Williams raced only to finish way in front tied for first, with the rest of the field finishing in rapid succession.

The course was 2.3 miles long through the hills behind the women's physical building, incorporating grass, woods and road. Members of the freshmen and varsity cross country team officiated.

The minutes after the run found the runners sitting about under trees munching on apples and talking eagerly about training programs, high school days, excess fat and next week's run. Fifty years young Associate Professor Howard Jaffe of the geology department also talked.

As a former track man, Professor Jaffe has returned to running with much delight and an inward feeling of satisfaction. A year and a half ago, he watched his son Andy (now a freshman at the University) running for Amherst High School and was moved to try on some sweats and a pair of shoes and jog the track after a local high school meet. Only one half mile later, with heavy leg, and lungs that were burning, he decided he was not in the same condition that he fondly remembered.

It was then he decided to run regularly with the goal of increasing his level of condition and to relive the enjoyable feelings of running. Now he has worked himself gradually up to the point where his distance runs can take him 5 miles or more if he has the time, and he can feel fresh after a hard run of 2.3 miles over rough terrain.

Professor Jaffe said, "I have never given formal competition much thought until today. However by running daily you do compete against yourself and the times you have run over a course in the past."

Enjoyment and satisfaction were his two biggest reasons. "I enjoy the feelings that are associated with being in fine physical condition. I can sleep very well at night. I never have to worry about my weight so that I can enjoy any food that I want to, and there is a great inner personal satisfaction knowing that by running, I am doing, and am prepared to do much more than the average man of my age."

Professor Jaffe's comments were typical of the attachment that runners, serious and recreational, have for their sport. Slowly the runners began to disperse, walking and jogging away to return again next Sunday at 5:30 to the field beside WOPE and the hills beyond the tennis courts.

Campus in Worcester Proposed Senate Kills Bill This Year

President John W. Lederle yesterday refused to comment on a proposal to build a new branch of the University in Worcester.

State Senate President Maurice A. Donahue of Holyoke had proposed the building of the branch in Worcester earlier in the week, but admitted that the plan is not linked to the Medical School about to be built in Worcester, and that the Med School would have to come first.

A bill to study the feasibility of the Worcester campus, submitted by Sen. John J. Conte, D-Worcester, died this year when it was tabled in the Senate and not considered before the legislature prorogued.

Conte agreed with Donahue that the main concern right now should be "to get the medical school off the ground."

"This (a Worcester campus) is something that's definitely going to happen; the only question is when it will happen," Conte said. He added that the feasibility of building a "university complex" in conjunction with the private colleges and universities in Worcester should also be considered carefully.

Donahue told newsmen that the Worcester campus "in the heart of the commonwealth" would take the strain off the university. He said that the burden is expected to be lessened when the Boston campus of the university is completed. A legislation providing for construction of that campus in the Columbia Point section of Boston was signed into law last month.

Fac-Sen Hedges on War Moratorium Bid

By ALAN SIROTA
Faculty Affairs Reporter

After lengthy discussion the Faculty Senate passed a motion on Thursday lending minimal support to the October 15th Vietnam Moratorium. Following is the text of the resolution:

"The Faculty Senate notes that many students and faculty plan to participate in the National Vietnam Moratorium, OCTOBER 15, 1969. While we cannot commit a University community representing a multiplicity of views to one position on the Vietnam War, we do recognize that this issue is of paramount concern to many members of the academic community and that many may wish to demonstrate their opposition to the War by participating in the Moratorium. In view of these circumstances, we believe that the decision to attend class on that day should be left to the discretion of individual students. We urge that no member of the University take any action which could be construed as a significant constraint against individuals observing the Moratorium."

Debate centered around the issue of whether endorsing such a statement would politicize the University, a possibility that many senators feared strongly. The view was expressed that a dangerous precedent would be set in light of the fact that further moratoria are planned for coming months and that other political issues might also have to be considered by the Senate. This opinion was labeled an invalid "domino theory" by other senators who felt that the issue at hand was the specific October Moratorium which should be considered on its own merits. Student Senate President, Bruce Balboni remarked to the Faculty Senate that the resolution said very little and urged it to make a stronger statement of their beliefs.

A motion was made that the "Senate urge the President of the University to seriously consider the cancellation of all classes on October 15th in order that both faculty and students be free to participate, if they wish, in Vietnam Peace Day discusstons and activities." This motion was defeated by a vote of 44 to 18.

The Senate was next presented with a questionnaire which is being distributed by the King Council, to the entire University community, and after finally voting that they should vote on it, responded negatively to the question, "Are you in favor of the cancellation of classes on October 15th in observance of the Moratorium?" Cancellation of classes was defeated by a vote of 41 to 7. It was understood that although this vote meant the Senate as a body did not wish to endorse such a statement, their feelings as individuals might be different.

In other business Provost Tippo informed the Senate that the University is considering the construction of 232 pre-fab housing units to be located between Presidential apartments and Puffton Village, hopefully to be completed for next fall.

Seymour Shapiro, acting Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, informed the Senate of a not yet competed proposal being worked on by a faculty committee relating to the establishment of an Afro-American Studies Dept. at the University.

PEACE MAIL

Campus support for Moratorium Peace Mail has sprung up rapidly, according to leaders of the movement, to extend the impact of the October fifteenth moratorium.

Several R.S.O. organizations and campus groups have pledged financial assistance for the mail campaign. Others have made their services available for canvassing the campus, garnering support from the student body.

Moratorium Peace Mail is now seeking funds to cover the expense of letters to the parents of all UMass students, asking them to express solidarity with the October fifteenth Moratorium. The letters will also ask parents to write to President Nixon, expressing their desire to see the war ended.

Representatives of Moratorium Peace Mail will be manning a table in the Student Union during the next week, explaining the letter campaign and accepting contributions to defray the costs of the movement.

N. Y. Senator Says:

Troop Withdrawal by December 1970

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Charles E. Goodell of New York, signaling growing Republican efforts in Congress to hasten the pace of withdrawal in Vietnam, called yesterday for a total U.S. troop pullout by December 1970.

"The prosecution of the war with American troops must be ended, not merely reduced," Goodell told a news conference. "I see no signs that the approach we are now taking will work in any reasonable way acceptable to the American people."

The New York Republican said he will introduce legislation to bar funds for maintenance of U.S. military personnel in Vietnam after Dec. 1, 1970, and that specific authorization would be required for use of noncombat U.S. personnel after that date. Aid in the form of supplies and military equipment to South Vietnam could continue, he added.

Goodell said that, in addition to his bill which would be sent to the generally antiwar Foreign Relations Committee, he may seek to amend the defense money bill later this year. Meanwhile, a group of House Republicans hopes to send a letter to all house GOP members later this week appealing for support for a proposal to put a Dec. 31, 1970, termination date on authority in the 1964 Gulf of Tonkin resolution, used by the Johnson administration to justify its dispatch of half a million U.S. troops to Vietnam.

Sponsors of the move are Rep. Donald W. Riegle Jr. of Michigan and Paul N. McCloskey of California, both second-termers.

Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott, declining direct comment on Goodell's proposal, hinted at further moves by President Nixon to scale down the war.

"I know that he has in mind further de-escalation as conditions permit," the Pennsylvanian told reporters.

After Goodell repeated his proposal in a Senate speech, Scott's new assistant, Sen. Robert P. Griffin of Michigan, said "the President does have a policy. He has spelled it out very clearly. He wants to get the American troops out of Vietnam as quickly as possible.

"I wonder how wise it is to tell the enemy," he said to Goodell, "as of a particular date all American troops will be withdrawn."

Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., praised Goodell's proposal and said "we must develop a positive Vietnam program now." He urged faster U.S. withdrawals.

Sen. Richard B. Russell, D-Ga., chairman of the Appropriations Committee, said when told of Goodell's proposal: "I just think we might be able to get out before that." He declined to elaborate.

Learning Resourses Center Founded at UMass

The Learning Resources Center is a new name and a new organization. Founded this fall by several UMass students acting on a graduate student's idea, the center is designed to be an education clearinghouse. "But," says Maureen Kilroy, a spokesman for the Center, "it is an informational resource center and not an authority agent."

For example, five students are working for credit by living on a commune this fall. "That such opportunities are available should be made known to all students," say the sponsors. And the L.R.C. is one way to do it. The Learning Resources Center is an independent organization established to make available to all University students information about the many educational opportunities that do and can exist on this campus.

"There are many projects, such as Innistree and Contemporary University that relatively few students know about, and even fewer are taking advantage of," the sponsors said. There are also many groups interested in initiating new projects, courses, degree programs, and living/learning communities who need student support before they can be realized. The Learning Resources Center can be a focus for these groups, as well as a place for them to find out the likelihood of departmental and university cooperation, possibilities of being funded, and results of similar attempts on other college campuses. In addition, the Center is attempting to bring together students with complementary learning needs, in the hope that they will find alternatives to suit these needs, through a computerized matching service called the Facilitator.

The Center staff is still in the organizational stages and needs help from any interested students.

Harvard Starts Housing Plan Of Low Income

Harvard University has announced that it is ready to begin the first phase of a program sponsoring low and middle income housing in Cambridge.

The announcement signals a partial response by the school to one of the complaints which were brought against the University last spring, when several hundred students took over a campus administration building.

The first phase involves building 389 dwelling units at two sites exclusively for residents not directly connected with Harvard. one 64-unit tract, at Mount Auburn street and Pleasant Avenue will be for the elderly, while an eight-acre site in West Cambridge will be developed for 325 families, including the elderly.

The university said land will be leased to the Cambridge Corporation, a joint Harvard-MIT corporation set up for the development of community programs, "at a nominal rental" for the Mount Auburn-Pleasant development. The West Cambridge development will be undertaken by Starrett Brothers and Eken, the university said.

News Analysis

Lack of City Interest Sad

By MARK SILVERMAN
News Editor

Dating back to the days of the Young Independents, "student activists" on this campus have always lamented the apathy of UMass students, and there is good reason to believe that the recently headlined growth of student involvement has totally missed the University.

There is no better example of this than the pitiful turnout of a couple hundred students at the creation of Free University City this week.

Here was an issue, an event which should have attracted the interest of a majority of UMass students, yet only the few Southwest residents who live within walking distance have bothered to find out what's underneath the black and white domes.

While Tim Ney and Terry Tirrell were talking about course cancellations, housing problems, a larger student voice in University policy making, and a more personal concept of education, the same students who swear at the University for doing nothing to help them were drinking coffee in the Hatch.

The great irony of Tuesday afternoon was that the administrators whose names have become catchwords for student dissent - Field, Tippo, Allen - came to the creation, while the students who complain stayed away.

A large number of faculty members have volunteered to teach at the City, and the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences has come out in full support of the Project, yet student participation has stayed at a low figure.

It is almost as though the wrong people are getting enthused over Free University City.

The Free Univerrity's rationale, as articulated by Ney and Tirrell, is valid.

Students have a right to more of a say in the hiring and firing of faculty; it is the students who, after all, are the ones who allegedly benefit from a teacher's existence.

In its classical sense, a university is designed primarily for its students, and students have a right to claim more power in university decision making.

Clearly, learning in the super large lecture factory is distasteful, and little real contact exists between students and faculty.

No real sense of community exists at UMass, and students are justified in believing that if the above grievances are at least partially corrected, a greater sense of community may develop.

All this considered, the small amount of campus interest in the City is quite disturbing. This is an ideal opportunity for students to gain a larger role in the shaping of the education they receive, and to experiment with possible alternatives to the present university system.

But judging from this week's reaction, UMass students are only interested in paying lip service to the desirability of a better University. This is very sad.

SCAT Announces "Fix Up Day"

Student Cooperative Association, Today (SCAT) is in the process of organizing its headquarters at the old Grad house, and of laying plans for its future programs.

Leaders of the program have invited both graduates and undergraduates to participate in helping the organization get off its feet, and urge anyone with knowledge of cooperative establishment, or people with useful contacts to join the movement.

SCAT will hold a "fix up day' tomorrow at the Grad house, refurbishing the structure, and needs students. SCAT has established an information table in the Union, and spokesmen for the group report that interest is increasing steadily.

SCAT was founded in the summer by students dissatisfied with Amherst housing facilities, and the group is dedicated to the creation of alternate housing possibilities for the University area.

"Tent City" Relocates

Police say a group of UMass student protestors have left their tent city on Amherst town common.

Officers said the students pulled up stakes Wednesday night when it began to rain and reportedly plan to join another group of students who say they want to create a "free university city."

The tenters had been protesting what they called lack of adequate student housing.

The free university group, has built several 15-foot diameter geodesic domes of wood and plastic in a field near a group of dormitories and has started holding seminars for interested students.

Irish Catholics v.s. Ulster Police

Ireland (AP) - British troops went into action to separate Ulster police from angry Catholic crowds Thursday night following the death of a Protestant in a street fight.

Forty soldiers threw a barbed-wire cordon between the police and 200 unruly youths.

"Ulster Catholics oppose the provincial police, contending they are biased against Catholics."

Militant Protestant leaders angrily blamed the army for the incident early Thursday in which the Protestant died.

Washington Free Press Uncovers Pot Arrest of Agnew's Daughter

The thirteen year old daughter of Vice-President Spiro Agnew has been charged with possession of marijuana, but then released without penalty, according to underground press sources.

This story has been hushed up by the White House but uncovered by The Washington Free Press, a member of the Underground Press Syndicate.

When the story first appeared in The Washington Free Press, Kim was mistakenly identified as Pamela Lee, her older sister.

Elinor Kimberly Agnew, known as Kim to her friends and family, participated in a marijuana party at the fashionable National Cathedral School in Washington D.C. early in June. She was caught along with nine school mates. One of the girls was expelled, four suspended, but no penalties were imposed on Kim and four other girls.

A later story corrected the false information.

Reporters from the major Washington newspapers and wire services descended upon The Washing Free Press when the story broke in the small underground newspaper, checked the story out at the National Cathedral School but not a single line on the matter has appeared anyplace but the underground press.

Timothy Leary, upon hearing of this latest in a chain of famous people's children to be busted for possession of grass, has prepared a questionnaire addressed to all United States legislators.

"Do your kids smoke, and are they in favor of harsher penalties for this habit?" Leary concluded his questionnaire by saying, "And if you haven't asked them about this subject, what gives you the right to pass legislation sending other people's kids to jail?"

SDS Invades Harvard Center And Injure Two Occupants

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - A band of about 20 youthful Viet Cong sympathizers invaded Harvard's Center for International Affairs yesterday, terrorized researchers, and fled after 10 minutes.

The university said "fifteen or more men and women" were in the group, which injured two persons, broke windows, scrawled obscenities on the front wall, and forced some occupants from the three-story brick building.

A witness quoted a demonstrator as saying the invaders were from Students for a Democratic Society. A university spokesman said the school has three separate SDS groups, and could not even say for sure if the invaders were Harvard students.

Police arrived too late to intercept any of the group, which shouted down research fellows who attempted to reason with them.

Shouting "We are going to close this place down," the group rushed from floor to floor, breaking into offices, tipping over baskets, and roughing up the building's occupants.

A seminar on "Political Participation" conducted by research fellow Ronald Brunner was interrupted. When he argued with the intruders, he was assulted. The school quoted a witness as saying Brunner was "pushed, and kicked in the groin. He fell to the floor, where he was kicked and hit again."

Miss Sally Cox, secretary for the center's director, Prof. Robert Bowie, who was not present, was grabbed by the arms when she refused an order to leave his office.

One of the youthful invaders shouted on departing that the group disrupted the building "Because thousands of people are dying," a reference to the Vietnam war.

The invaders ordered 30 students and others to leave the building. Two men locked themselves in a room, but the others were forced out.

One witness who was in the building when the group came barging in said one of the youths shouted, "We are SDS and we are liberating this building - everybody out."

Some of the invaders chanted: "Ho, Ho, Ho Chi Minh, the NLF IS GOING TO WIN."

NAS Faced with Debts, Opts Toward New Trends

EL PASO, Tex. -(CPS) - The National Student Association, faced with threatening financial indebtedness, has opted to follow the latest trends in student government independence - towards service corporation and self-sustaining programs.

Potentially controversial projects have affected NSA's ability to get federal government and foundation grants this past year. Anti-racism work, drug studies and student legal rights are among the programs now sought by members of the association, but a NSA National Supervisory Board report states, "These foundations, cautious in the past, are even more so today as a result of investigations and pending legislation by congressional committees."

The office of Economic Opportunity, also a major source of program funds, tightened its belt in 1968-69 with an eye to avoiding subsidies to "radical forces." This past year, these forces have included NSA staff members in a Tutorial Assistance Center and the Pennsylvania Project, an attempt to organize students to become involved in the war on poverty.

Deficit spending has been approved within NSA since large amounts of secret monies received from the CIA were cut off by the association in 1967. According to last year's NSA President Bob Powell, this now puts the association somewhere near $120,000 in debt for its activities over the past several years.

Though the situation appears desperate to some members, others feel that a newly-formed corporation, to be called the Academic Services Corporation, will turn over enough money to NSA each year to clear up past debts and support new programs. This corporation will have the exclusive right to market NSA services and must turn over a minimum of $200,000 plus a percentage of the profits each year to the association.

The newly-elected Executive Vice-President of the association, Jim Sutton hopes to clean-up the administrative waste of money prevalent in the last year. He also wants to add a consultation service which would provide local student governments with help in developing cooperative students projects on their campuses, with a low, percentage kickback to NSA.

In the end, it will all depend on the resources, financial and human, the association is able to come up with in the very near future. One NSA member said that if $25,000 isn't raised within the next few weeks, then NSA could go bankrupt.

But new NSA officers feel bankruptcy is not in sight for NSA at least for a while.

Democratic Party Comm. Approves Proposal Series

WASHINGTON (AP) - A Democratic party reform commission approved Wednesday a series of proposals designed to encourage rank-and-file participation in selection of delegates to the 1972 presidential nominating convention.

But it deferred for at least a month the two most controversial proposals before it, proportional representation of minority viewpoints and apportionment of delegates to reflect actual Democratic party members.

In all, the commission reached agreement on 10 of the 19 criteria developed by its staff, but time prevented action on seven others that had been approved by its executive committee.

All of the proposals will be sent to party officials around the country for reaction and recommendations before the commission headed by Sen. George S. Mc Govern of South Dakota meets again to make final decisions.

The 1968 convention directed creation of the McGovern commission and another group headed by Rep. James G,O'Hara, D-Mich., which is studying party and convention rules. The McGovern group needs to act promptly sc states will have time to make efforts to enact the new requirements, many of which will require changes in either state or party laws.

Although the commission's proposals would make sweeping changes if all were adopted, many merely require that state groups "make all feasible efforts" to effect them.

The series of relatively non-controversial proposals okayed Wednesday included:

A call for state parties to permit 18-year olds to participate in all party activities.

A recommendation for removal of restrictive state voter registration laws.

A proposal for elimination of high fees for participation in party activities such as excessive filing fees.

Adoption by state groups of written rules and uniform dates for conduct of party business.

Nursery for Special Moves to Campus

A pre-school nursery for retarded children has been moved this year from the People's Institute in Northampton to the campus of the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

The program will be housed in Skinner Hall, the University's School of Home Economics building. All physical facilities and teachers will be supplied by the Region I Department of Mental Health. The facilities of the school will be made available to UMass students who desire training in working with mentally retarded children, and for mental retardation research.

The nursery was started by the Hampshire County Association for Retarded Children in 1961 as the Eunice Mannheim Nursery School, and for several years has operated in cooperation with the Massachusetts Department of Mental Health as one of 85 community clinical pre-school nurseries for retarded children throughout the Commonwealth.

Mrs. John H. Dittfach, president of the Hampshire County Association, invited all parents of retarded children aged three to seven years in Hampshire County to take advantage of the opportunity for their children to have all the schooling available to any child of that age, as well as adjustment and training advantages needed by the mentally handicapped child.

SMILE Program Clarify SDS Split

During the June national Convention, the Students for a Democratic Society broke into two major factions. The Worker-Student Alliance (WSA) and the Revolutionary Youth Movement I (RYMI), have each established headquarters, each claiming to be the true SDS.

On Sept. 30, at 8:00 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium, SMILE will present Sidney Finehirsh, Bart Kaplan, Julian Katz, and Steve Moore in an attempt to clarify the cases of the split and the present situation of SDS.

The program is aimed at SDS supporters and the campus and town population. SMILE, the sponsor of the program, felt the need for a clarification handled by an ourside group.

Finehlesh is a graduate student in math at UMass and Former New England Traveller for SDS (History and Traditional Politics will be his topic).

Bart Kaplan, a graduate teaching assistant in English, is not a member of SDS nor of RYMI, but supports RYM'.

Julian Katz is a graduate student in Labor Relations and supports WSA. Katz will discuss the split in SDS and its causes.

Steve Moore, of Greenborough, S.C., will give a radical black analysis of the split in SDS.

FROM THEIR SIDE

' Freedom'

(The following are editorials run by several newspapers in Western Massachusetts. We thought their views to be narrow enough if not important enough to dedicate the entire editorial page to them so that the University community might get a chance to see them. It is indeed interesting to note just how uptight the people of this state can get over the construction of a few plastic tents on less than an acre of unused land.)

Reprinted from the Springfield Union of September 24, 1969.

The geodesic-dome community on the University of Massachusetts campus is not really the answer to the problems of its members. It does qualify as a symbol of the conflict between what many American students want out of college and what they are getting. This is a modern phenomenon, widespread among big universities and not really restricted to the groups that are active in protest.

The "insensitivity" of bigness in higher education to the needs and problems of individual students is growing year by year. As each college class comes along so do new forms of reaction. There are activities and organizations, official and nonofficial , that can help fill the gap between the "freedom" that many students seek and what they regard as a cold and rigid administration. Perhaps these organizations are being ignored, or perhaps they themselves are often too large to fulfill special needs among the student body.

In any case, the 'Free University City' at Amherst was established as a place for seminars on such subjects as sexuality, drug abuse, family planning and pregnancy. Some university faculty are taking part.

Less understandable is the rationale of the group, which asks for a student voice in university policy. This comes on the heels of legislation that permits student representation on the university's board of trustees. Perhaps it will be noted also that the trustees, in session Monday, approved a coeducational dormitory for the Amherst campus, among other changes allowing greater student freedom.

Anyway, the value of student representation at trustee meetings will be weakened to the extent that unity is lacking in the student body. Whatever role the students are to have in the shaping of university policy will be impaired, not helped, by splinter groups that overlook avenues already open to such participation.

For all the changes that have taken place in the big-campus atmosphere, the competition is sharper every year among young people for the chance to get a college education. Those fortunate enough to make the grade can help themselves best by putting the emphasis on learning - while working, if they wish, to eliminate the problems of university life in ways that are truly constructive.

NO, I DON'T LIKE TO SEE MEN DYING IN VIETNAM.
AND I DON'T LIKE TO SEE RIOTS IN THE GHETTOS.
BUT THINK OF ALL THE MONEY I'D LOSE IF THE WAR WERE STOPPED AND THE BLACKS WERE FREED.
WHAT THIS COUNTRY REALLY NEEDS IS MORE LAW AND ORDER!
WE'VE GOT TO ENFORCE THE RULES OF SOCIETY, OR WE'LL FALL!!
AND WE CANNOT AFFORD TO WORRY ABOUT A FEW PEOPLE GETTING KILLED...

'Free City'

The University of Massachusetts has thus far avoided the type of campus disturbances that have plagued many colleges and universities in the past couple of years.

The comparative harmony at an institution that has nearly quadrupled in 15 years has been a credit to the students, the administration and the faculty. The state university hasn't been dormant. Problems, disagreements, misunderstandings have cropped up among the three segments of campus life. But thoughtfulness and dialogue have served to ease differences.

Because of the harmony, campus regulations have been greatly relaxed. Visiting hours by persons of the opposite sex have been largely left up to the student governments in the dormitories, with the approval of the student senate.

At present, the trustees have approved a coed dormitory.

There is a move toward relaxing rules concerning alcoholic beverages in dormitories for persons 21 years or older.

It has been decided that a student will sit on the 24-member board of trustees. There has been attention directed toward increasing influence and participation by students in the academic phase of life at the university.

No one can reasonably accuse the administration of hardheadedness, lack of reason, poor communications.

Yet there are signs of trouble at Amherst. The student president, Bruce Balboni of Arlington, has rejected as "tokenism" the appointment of a student trustee. The student senate has voted $1,600 for construction of geodesic domes to be built on campus. Student activists are proposing that the domes, 30 feet in diameter and of wooden frames with plastic walls, be used as classrooms. They are trying to enlist faculty members to teach in them. They plan to build a tent city around the domes for living quarters. Dean of Students William Field has talked with the leaders and urged the utmost care in this situation - particularly concerning sanitary requirements, which would be the concern of the state Department of Public Health.

The planned break from normal classroom and living practices is supposed to convey protest against lack of student involvement in the hiring of faculty, what the dissenters describe as antiquated academic requirements, too much competitiveness, and overcrowded housing conditions.

Overcrowded conditions, particularly in the fall, have been part and parcel of UMass growth for a decade and a half. There is nothing more involved here than minor inconvenience. Otherwise, quarters are comfortable and pleasant.

As to the competitive angle, the entire School of Education is now on a pass-fail basis and there are other pass-fail aspects being advanced. Clearly the administration is cooperating with students in ventures that give full consideration to their suggestions.

With such a background, the efforts of some students to expropriate sections of campus for a free university city are clearly contrary to the best interests of the other students, the university and the state.

' Free'

One good thing about a 'free university" is that it is free to everyone but the taxpayer.

A group of University of Massachusetts students, unhappy with housing facilities at the university, set up several plastic geodesic domes on a part of the UMass campus.

The domes will be available to students as part of the 'free university" which was established with the domes. Too, the student body of the "free university" will be able to attend classes at the site of the domes.

It's all wonderful, and free to boot. Except for the tax payer.

The university is free because the domes have been erected on land bought and paid for by the Commonwealth as part of the overall University of Massachusetts complex. So since the students have taken over land that belongs not to them but to all the residents of the Commonwealth they have eliminated one major cost for establishing a university.

Now people living in these domes will be trampling the grass, probably damaging it and possibly killing it. Someone will have to repair and replant it.

To enable the "free university" to be free, one has to assume that the damage will be repaired by maintenance crews at the University of Massachusetts, who are paid by the taxpayer. Another saving for this new educational complex.

But the biggest plus for the school is that a number of UMass faculty members have agreed to hold classes for free at the "free university". This is no small item.

As anyone connected with education can tell you, salaries of teachers are a major, if not THE major educational cost. And the "free university" is going to get teachers for free.

Naturally the fact that the taxpayers are already paying these faculty members, that the State recruited for the faculty of the University, and that they could not afford to teach for nothing if they weren't already being paid for teaching at the University has no bearing on the fact that the "Free university" is indeed

We won't even bother commenting on "free" police protection being offered nor "free" medical service that the University will be providing.

"Free," what a wonderful word!

We suppose it is still all right for us to be "free" to be a little fed up with all this inanity and wonder why all these hard-working students wouldn't just get down to the business of getting their education and going out into the world to help make it a better place.. or is that too radical an idea to even be considered.

Three Steps to 'F'

STEP ONE - Take a long, exhausting walk to F lot after dark. (This is aptly named because that's the first word you think of when you find out that's where you have to park your car.)

STEP TWO - Stroll along the isles of U.Mass' largest used car and parts' lot.

STEP THREE - You will be able to select the color, make, and model of your favorite car without any difficulty.

Don't hesitate; don't be afraid; don't try to be coy or unobvious. There are no lights, policemen, or security guards in this area.

So Strip Those Damn Cars Blind!

The university charges students a registration fee to park on its grounds. This fee entitles the student to have his car towed by Andersons and to be ticketed by police. Would it be too much to ask for some of this money to be appropriated for one security guard to be stationed on each remote parking lot?

P.S. Dedicated to the one who now owns our battery.

You Can't Rape the Willing .... But What If You're Not Really Willing?

The trim coed finds herself on a darkened street. She hears a rustling of a bush and footsteps behind her. But she dares not turn around. She has no way of contending with the danger so she leaves herself in the most susceptible position.

What few women realize is that they can learn to defend themselves with no greater strength than they use to do their daily chores.

Attacks on women are usually made by persons not expecting any skilled defense. Among the most common, as well as least effective, methods of defense are hair pulling and pounding of fists against the attacker's chest. But anything is better than nothing.

Many women who live in dark neighborhoods make it a habit to carry an umbrella whether or not rain is forecast. Most have steel tips that can be effective weapons. A spray can containing a chemical gas is also being marketed commercially and can be used to temporarily blind a mugger.

For that matter, any small aerosol spray can of starch, paint, insect repellent or hair spray may be of great aid if applied to the attacker's eyes.

There are many reported instances when the woman has not time to reach into her purse for a weapon. Biting hard into anyone's flesh will cause the person to grimace. It may give the victim just the time she needs for escape.

If the attacker comes at the woman from the front, she can relax long enough in his embrace to surprise him momentarily of her "willingness." They with a hard, fast upward thrust of the knee into the assailant's groin, she will probably have time for escape.

A woman wearing high heel shoes can stamp her heel forcefully onto her pursuer's instep. She can also use the heel of her shoe as a hand weapon.

In addition to the groin area, the most susceptible areas are the molester's windpipe and eyes. However gruesome -sounding it may be, a man forced with the reality of losing an eye or swallowing his tongue will not pursue thoughts of rape.

Pure fright made visible to the attacker is a distinct disadvantage. If the potential assailant thinks he has been spotted or if he sees the woman reaching into her purse, he may think she is carrying a weapon and give up altogether.

A woman's purse can contain as deadly an arsenal as the U.S. Air Force. Although it is illegal to carry concealed deadly weapons, there are many common articles that can be put to good use if need be.

The usual lipstick tubes, compacts and bombs are good in a pinch. But every woman should make certain to have better "weapons" at her disposal than that. A metal fingernail file, large ballpoint and fountain pens, hat-pins and steel letter openers are most effective.

If an attacker grabs a woman from behind, she can avoid a choke hold by lowering her chin firmly against her throat. A hard, sharp chop with the knuckles on the back of the attacker's hand can temporarily numb it and decrease his mobility.

Brandeis Theatre Convention To Award Playwright Miller

The relevancy of today's theatre will be explored in this year's 18th annual Convention of The New England Theatre Conference, which will be held October 17 and 18 at Brandeis University, Waltham, Mass.

The theme, "Theatre and Social Crisis", will be set in motion on Friday evening with the premiere performance of a multimedia production created especially for the Convention by playwright Stan Thomas. A discussion of this exciting new form of theater, which incorporates lights, music, sound, film and performers, will follow.

On Saturday morning, a panel discussion on the Convention theme will be held, moderated by Samuel Hirsch, Drama Editor and critic for the Boston Herald-Traveler. Panelists include Henry Hewes, Drama Editor and Critic for The Saturday Review; Erika Munk, Editor of the Drama Review; James Spruill, host of WGBH-TV's "Say, Brother" program and director of The New African Company; playwright Megan Terry of New York; and Stan Edelson, co-director of the Caravan Theatre of Cambridge, Mass.

Following a luncheon on Saturday, the Conference will confer its major annual award "for outstanding creative achievement in the American Theatre" to playwright Arthur Miller, who will address the Convention. Mr. Miller joins a host of outstanding theatre personalities who were previous recipients of this award, including David Merrick, Rodgers & Hammerstein, Moss Hart, Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse, Morris Carnovsky and William Gibson.

At this session, the Conference will also present its annual "Special Awards" and "Regional Citations" to individuals and groups for special achievements, contributions or services to theatre.

Highlighting the afternoon session will be a multi-ethnic production entitled "It's About Now.", performed by students of the Roosevelt Junior-Senior High School of long Island, New York. This full-dress musical, produced and directed by Broadway actor Harold Scott, combines dance, drama live music and slides, and is a very contemporary examination of the American crisis, a show that reflects the tremendous amount of conflict and uncertainty that young people face.

The New England Theatre Conference was founded in 1952 to develop, expand and assist theatre activity on the community, educational and professional levels in New England. Membership is open to individuals and theatre-producing groups in New England who are active or interested in children's, secondary school, college, community and professional theatre. President of the Conference is Prof. Mort Kaplan of Northeastern University, Boston.

Additional information on the Convention is available from Caldwell Titcomb, Chairman of the School of Creative Arts, Brandeis University, who is serving as Convention Chairman.

Midnight Cowboy Finds NYC Reality a Bummer

By SUSAN SCHMEHL
Fine Arts Staff

A small-town psuedo-cowboy, haunted by his gramma's doting coos and changing bed-partners goes east to make it big as a "super-stud" in New York City. Under the illusion that there are hoards of middle-aged sexually undernourished women waiting for his great potential, Joe Buck believes he can make it big and escape the drudgery of a dishwasher and slop cleaner.

Flashing neon glares, herds shoving, hollow cheap hotel rooms with pay TV all meet Joe in a single swoop. He tries to score and misses. Apparently the market is not all that he had hoped. "super stud" remains too emotionally tied and sensitive under all his cowboy bangles not to be softened by a feeble whimper or an indignant cry.

The city manages to quickly squelch Joe Buck, and his cowboy gloss rapidly begins to tarnish. Innocence brings him misfortune. He is duped. He is dying. His ventures have been pushed out into the grim realities of a moving dynamic city where people are no more, only tucked away in a few obscure corners.

A small warped cripple becomes the cowboy's only friend of sorts and together they try to survive within the city's grim aspect. Hoffman, as Rizzo, the cripple, manages to escape his "Graduate" image and plays the stringy, rotting survivor beautifully.

If you have ever sat in a near-deserted, echoing subway station in the grimy hours between days, you'll have felt something of this film. It's nowhere. Nothing is there for you; nothing but cold and empty aloneness. Sunshine and coconut milk won't keep you alive forever when the sun can't find where you're crouching.

"Midnight Cowboy" is definitely a film worth seeing. Very real, very sad - but isn't it all in our neon off and on world?

Hillel to Present Folk Singing Rabbi Carlebach

If hippies and the ultra pious Jewish Hasidim can ever be said to have a common meeting ground it must be in the person of Shlomo Carlebach, a guitar-playing ordained rabbi who left the pulpit to bring his message in music to audiences of all age groups and types throughout the world.

Carlebach is billed as a singer of Hasidic songs, but his performances take on the character of a fervent religious celebration whose participants are hippies and straights, Jews and gentiles, young and old. The unique quality that enables Carlebach to "turn his audience on", to appeal not only to hippies, but to many straights, to Jew and Christian, both religious and secular, is his Hasidic appeal which calls to abandon the banal, the every-day, the often dry moral and religious formulae, the separateness of the individual and to transform the self, if only for a short while, into a creature of joy, of compassion and peace, of song and dance with one's fellow man.

The Hillel Foundation of UMass is happy to invite al l the University Community to come to Bowker Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. on Monday, October 6 to share an exciting experience. There will be no charge for this unique event.

Wilkins, Rauh Blast Haynsworth Both Call Him Segregationist

WASHINGTON (AP) - Civil rights spokesmen described Supreme Court nominee Clement F. Haynsworth Jr. yesterday as a pro-segregation judge who would grant the constitutional rights of Negroes "with an eyedropper."

The Haynsworth nomination, Roy Wilkins said in a statement to the Senate Judiciary Committee, threatens to convert the Supreme Court from a rock on which the faith of Negroes has rested "into a swamp of delay and technicalities."

"Judge Haynsworth is for the status quo or for inching along," said the chairman of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights. "He would not have society move until forced to do so by inescapable requirements of the law . . ."

Joseph L. Rauh Jr., general counsel of the conference, was even harsher in his criticism of Haynsworth, a federal appeals court judge whose nomination has been the target of a vigorous attack by labor and civil rights forces.

"For the first time since the Supreme Court outlawed segregation," said Rauh, "we have the appointment of a man whose belief in integration is in question."

Rauh said Haynsworth's record on the U.S. Circuit Court in Richmond, Va., demonstrates that he seeks to slow down implementation of the 1954 high court ruling that outlawed segregated schools.

Haynsworth, the civil rights lawyer asserted has tried "to hold on to segregation as long as he can."

Rauh outlined seven opinions by Haynsworth since 1962 in support of the allegation. He said the judge is "a laundered segregationist" and defined the term as a man who may not speak in favor of segregation but strives for "the least forward progress possible."

Wilkins' statement was read by Clarence Mitchell, legislative chairman of the conference.

Supremes Concert Slated For Cage on Saturday

Diana Ross and The Supremes will perform in concert Saturday, Sept. 27, in Curry Hicks Cage at the University of Massachusetts. Because of the group's popularity, two shows will be presented--at 7 p.m. and 10 p.m.

The group has made seven gold records in a period of less than two years, including such hits as "Where Did Our Love Go" "Baby Love", "Come See About Me", "Stop In The Name of Love", "Back In My Arms Again", "I Hear a Symphony", and "You Can't Hurry Love", all of which sold a million or more records and soared to the top of the pop record charts.

The Supremes performed the unique feat of having five consecutive records reach the top spot on the best selling charts, an achievement unmatched by any other American group.

Many popular vocalists are limited to the recording field, but the Supremes have the visual excitement to match their 'Motown Sound"--youthful beauty and effervescence, a rare star quality that grabs an audience like a magnet.

The girls have roamed the globe, entertaining in virtually every nation in the world. Success for these three--each in her early twenties-- has covered a broad spectrum of the country's finest nightclubs, the capitals of Europe, the top television programs, and the vast concert halls and college auditoriums.

This Saturday night will be the first time UMass has been included on Diana Ross and The Supremes' tours. And it will be the last, since this is the group's last tour before each of the three girls goes her own way next month. Tickets for both concerts are available at all Del Padre's Music Stores, the Student Union Ticket Office, and at the door.

Homecoming Set With Traditional Events

Homecoming '69 sponsored by the student senate, will Kickoff on Friday, October 17, with the traditional Floate Parade. Scheduled to begin at 7:15, the parade will start at Massachusetts Avenue, go up Lincoln Ave. and Amnity and should pass the judging stand at about 7:45. About 50 floates are expected to enter the competition. There will also be antique cars and the University Marching Band. Beside the usual plaques for first, second and third place in the catagories of Men's, Women's, Fraternities, Sororities and Combination, this year, for the first time, large overall Men's and Women's will be offered. A ralley will follow the parade.

All who plan to enter the competition must attend a meeting Wednesday, October 1, at 7 p.m., in the Commonwealth room of the Student Union. Houses interested in entering the parade, but who don't have enough funds, come anyway to try to find another house to team up with.

Chemistry Symposium Set

A symposium on chemical safety for high school chemistry teachers and students will be held at the University of Massachusetts tomorrow Sept. 27, 1969.

The program is sponsored by the Connecticut Valley Section of the American Chemical Society and the New England Association of Chemistry Teachers. Each teacher who attends may bring two students with him to the symposium, which will take place in Peters Auditorium of Goessmann Laboratory.

Topics to be discussed include "Chemical First Aid," by Dr. James G. Cotanche, Jr. of the UMass Health Service; "Toxicity" by William LaRocque of the Liberty Metal Research Center; and "Eye Protection," by Robert Herron from the American Optical Co.

There will also be a film on eye care, a talk on "Teacher Liability" by Springfield attorney James P. Rooney and a talk and demonstration on glass-working safety for students by Gordon Good University glassblower.

The program will begin at 9:30 a.m. and end at 3:30 p.m.

The University Library has just published a 1969/70 edition of the LIBRARY HANDBOOK FOR UNDERGRADUATES. Copies are available at the Reference Desk in Goodell Library. All new students, both graduate and undergraduate will want to have copies of this HANDBOOK to assist them in using the collections in Goodell and the branch libraries. Students who are not new to the campus may want to pick up a copy also since this new edition contains current information about library services.

CLEVELAND (AP) - Dave Johnson's two-run homer broke a sixth inning deadlock and carried left-hander Dave McNally to his 20th victory of the season as the Baltimore Orioles defeated the Cleveland Indians 4-1 Thursday night.

McNally, who has lost six, limited the Indians to six hits in besting Luis Tiant, a 21-game winner last year but 9-19 this season. Johnson's homer, after a walk to Frank Robinson, was the 37th given up the Cleveland right-hander.

The Indians tied the game 1-1 in the third on Jose Cardenal's run-scoring single.

BOSTON (AP) - Sen. Edmund S. Muskie flies here Friday to make a campaign appearance with state Rep. Michael J. Harrington, who is running for Congress.

Both Harrington and his opponent, state Sen. William L. Saltonstall, R-Manchester, will hold large rallies Friday night in Lynn.

Shortly after Muskie, the Democratic vice presidential candidate of last fall, and Harrington, D-Salem, appear at the City Hall in Lynn, Saltonstall will appear across the street with Sen. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass.

The special election Tuesday is to fill the 6th Congressional District seat left vacant by the death of U.S. Rep. William H. Bates, R-Mass.

Former Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey is scheduled to arrive Monday morning in Boston to endorse Harrington at an airport news conference.

Booters Off to Maine Sophs are Key to Debut

By BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

The 1969 version of the UMass varsity soccer team premiers tomorrow morning against the University of Maine at Orono. Coach Peter Broaca, in his first full season at the soccer helm, will send an inexperienced team to meet the Black Bears. Six of the Redmen starters will be sophomores from the undefeated freshmen team of a year ago.

Halfbacks Lindo Alves and Augie Calheno, fullbacks Gary Hart, Paul Slack and Joe Cerniawski, and goalie Greg Hamilton will be making their varsity debut. Other starters include junior co-captains Dick Meyer and Dick Matuszcak, Duane Brown, who was the leading scorer last year, and Marc Cantor. The lone senior starter will be fullback John Mercury.

Maine is rebounding from a 2-10 season in 1968 and is also expected to have several sophomores in the lineup. The Black Bears won their thrist game 2-0 over Jersey State College. Wing Jossy Byamah and halfback Ruben Hernandez are their top players and Broaca is expecting a tight game.

"Last year we struggled to win a 2-0 game and since both teams are playing a lot of Sophomores the game should be close," explained Broaca. "Maine also has the advantage of having played one game already and playing on their own field."

The coach views the Yankee Conference race as a battle between Vermont and Rhode Island with Connecticut close behind. As for his own team, he adds, "right now the best we can be considered is a dark horse.

VIOLENCE is the name of the game when the UMass rugby team opens its season Sunday at the field behind the stadium.

Ruggers Open at Home

Who said violence at UMass can't be organized? It returns to campus Sunday at 1:30 when the 1969 rugby season opens against the Mystic River Rugby Football Club of Boston. Scheduled later in the season are such opponents as Tufts, Colgate, Boston Rugby and Football Club, and Boston College.

The first game will be a trial of fire for the Redmen's new coach Bob Laurence and the squad's 25 new members, as well as the veterans who will be seeking their first winning season.

Since the beginning of practice, Laurence has taught basics of rugby, in hopes of molding the large group of newcomers with the veterans. It would appear that this effort has resulted in one of UMass' stronger squads.

The UMass 'A' team will consist of largely returnees. The running of backs Dick Pulsifer and Frank Desiata, along with the field play of Jim Vilkites, Don Chamberlayne and Dave Schlatka, will be featured.

The Redmen were not able to field a third team due to lack of players and there are still openings left for anyone interested in playing rugby. Practices are held every Tuesday and Thursday at 4:30 on the rugby field.

Redmen Seek Continued Glory vs. Bulls

Buffalo Tough Test for UMass in Home Opener

By PETER PASCARELLI
Sports Editor

A UMass football team, with hopes of recapturing its past glories, will face one of its biggest hurdles tomorrow when the Redmen meet a tough University of Buffalo team at Alumni Stadium. Kick-off time for the clash, which is expected to draw one of the largest home crowds in recent years, will be 1:30.

The annual Adelphi - Maroon Key sponsored rally at the Student Union, which is an annual bomb, will blast off at 7:15. It will be the beginning of an action weekend that includes Diana Ross, Orpheus and Vic Fusia.

Yes, the UMass coach will have a big part of this weekend, and he sees his team having big trouble with the rugged Bulls.

"Buffalo is as good a team personnel-wise on our schedule. They haven't played their good game yet this season. But if they are hot, they will be a lot of trouble.."

Fusia expects a lot of trouble from the experienced big and talented Buffalo defense. Included in this is a pair of 260 pound tackles and an All-American candidate at linebacker. Says the coach,"There is a defense that has a minimum of weak spots to attack. They use a position defense and they are usually in the right spot."

The Redmen also will have to look out for a good offense that features quarterback Mick Murtha who is respected as potentially one of the finer signal callers in the east. Murtha was slightly injured a week ago but is expected to be ready for the Redmen tomorrow.

UMass meanwhile will make no changes in the units that took them to the 49-7 romp of a week ago. That means that again a big bunch of sophomores will be starting. That also means that the veteran backfield of Tim Adams, Ed Sarno, Pat Scavone and Jerry Grasso will be trying to match the big offensive output of a week ago. Also the giant end tandem of Nick Mc Garry and John Hulecki will be in action.

Fusia expects to spot once again assorted people on offense, such as Mike Sawyer, Dick Heavey, Craig Lovell, Dick Cummings, Angelo DiNardo, Bill Byron and Steve Parnell should see action.

Defensively, the starters will be the same, and will also be boosted by the addition of veteran linebacker John Farelly who missed the Maine game with a sore leg. However, spare quarterback Mike Marchev probably will not play, due to a sore shoulder.

Fusia, while not knowing just how good Buffalo will be, is just as in the dark about his own team. "I really can't tell how good we are from our one game. It's tough to know off what we've done."

"But the way we have gone after people is the sign of a pretty good football team. The way we perform against Buffalo should indicate just how far we can go and just how good we can be."

It is therefore, like a new season, like the switch from night to day. For Buffalo is a lot different from Maine, just as most outside games are different from the Yankee Conference.

All hail the conquering hero. Returning from the horror of defeat, the Great One fought back with a glittering 78% success rate. Such is what legends are made of.

But now to the business at hand. Now, as the Great Star he is, your friend resented not being invited to recite at the frosh-soph picnic. And as for the Supremes, well, he never liked any music except rain dances.

But even with this irritation harassing his wit and wisdom, the Great One picked and wrote and presents another edition of the never-ending success story that makes this rank, second to the news bureau, the longest continued, piece of crap in the history of our great university.

Harriers Face Tough Harvard, P.C.

Opening their 1969 season, the UMass cross-country team travels to Franklin Park in Boston tomorrow to meet Harvard and Providence in three way competition. For both UMass and Providence, it is their first meet of the year. However, Harvard has already run and won their first meet of the season, a 15-47 decision against Northeastern, to run their dual meet record to 24 straight wins.

This will be the second straight year that the Redmen will open against these two teams. Last year UMass lost to the Crimson 22-37, but beat the Friars 21-34.

As usual, Harvard will field a strong team again with a base of returning lettermen headed by Royce Shaw, who won the race last year, and Dave Potteti, and Tom Spengler. Along with these experienced runners will be a group of sophomores who will number in Harvard's top seven. Mike Koerner, who won the UMass Harvard-PC meet last season and who won the Harvard-NU meet this week, is the Crimson's most promising soph.

Providence has a new coach this year and the type of team which they will present on Saturday is unclear. They have the material with Robb and Labonte, last year's one two combination on the varsity returning and last year's top frosh Kelly and Speck coming on strong. How these runners react to their new coach, who received his position because the old coach was fired after a dispute with his runners, leaves the PC team with a question mark before their first meet.

UMass enters this meet trying to develop a large group of sophomores and juniors into a top team. The loss of three top runners through graduation puts more pressure on the top ten runners Ron Wayne, Leo Duart, Tom Derderian, Larry Paulson, Don Dunsky, Al Mangan, Bruce Blackburn, Steve Whicher, Dave Elben, and Mike Cowles, who must try to run as a cohesive group and stay with the quick starting Harvard team.

Coach Ken O'Brien said he entered this season with the goal of developing the entire team and improving all 18 runners. He admitted that he is pleased with the progress of the team and with their attitude. The coach said the team has improved faster than he expected and that all the runners are producing to their best. The coach said he expects a close meet Saturday but wouldn't make any predictions on the outcome.

The Redmen frosh open their season Saturday also against the Harvard and Providence frosh. Harvard will have a top freshman team this year with the Providence team like the varsity, a question mark. The UMass frosh have been looking good in practice and should give their opponents a run for the top spot.

N.E. Quad Run Down and Forgotten

The most fervent remarks concerning the Quad seems to be, "Where is it?" or "What is it?" It has been neglected and ignored for years. But the Quad is changing its image.

The residents of the Quad are organizing to remake the Northeast Area into a vital and productive part of the University. The students in the Quad want good facilities and furniture. They want social and cultural activities.

The Administration has ignored the Quad. In the University's "propaganda" film, " A Giant Step", they failed to even mention or show pictures of both the Quad and the Central Area. However, the Administration has good reason not to mention the Quad. It is the most under-staffed, under-funded, under-cultured area on campus. One counselor directed the following comment at the administration, "They should be ashamed to call this University property."

The conditions which precipitate such remarks and such activity can be found on the Quad these days, as is obvious to anyone who ever visits the Dorms.

Hamlin House, converted two years ago from a women's to a men's residence, still has "no facilities for men", including urinals, sink trays for shaving equipment and electric outlets for electric razors. The second floor floods when someone takes a shower. "Promised" lounge and room furniture has never arrived. Some rooms lack usable desks. All lack lamps, bookshelves, and wastebaskets. The lounge furniture is ripped. The residents of Hamlin had the following comments: "They are building all around, why don't they do something to the dorms." "As far as the Administration is concerned, we don't even exist."

Knowlton House is a women's residence. They have a well kept lounge. They also have bad plumbing and washing facilities. On one of the floors there is only one workable shower for 48 people. The sinks in Knowlton have automatic shut-off valve faucets, the type found in public rest rooms, making washing difficult. The intercom system is bad. There is only one bureau for every two girls. "Requests" have been made through the proper channels to alleviate these conditions. Thus far nothing has been done.

Mary Lyons House is only ten years old. Eighty per cent of the rooms have only one bureau for two girls. Room lighting consists of one naked light bulb per room. The date room has unusable furniture. The cushion straps are missing. The furniture was moved out last year, only to be returned in the same condition.

Crabtree House was described by one resident as "looking like a cheap hotel." They have bad plumbing. Last count on the fourth

Kalus, Law and Order For Campus Radicals

BOSTON (AP) - Superior Court Judge Harry Kalus told 122 Suffolk University graduates yesterday that college administrators must take a stronger disciplinary stand against campus radicals and "have the backbone to use their power of suspension and expulsion."

He told the fall commencement of the college divisions that "college officials and faculty, with notable exceptions, have been in frightened flight, supplication and capitulation" in attacking both violence on the campus and crime in the nation's communities.

Judge Kalus said "there must be no amnesty for criminal activity. Capitulation to extremism at one school gives way to capitulation elsewhere. The effect is cumulative and contagious. Public order and common civility at every level of society right up to the top has been challenged."

He warned, however, of the prospect of more violence in the new academic year. He said the avowed purpose of groups that advocate violence "is to disrupt operations in universities and colleges across the nation. However successful these 'storm troopers' will be depends on the response made by the faculty and administrators."

Judge Kalus said that college students " are free to state their position, to demonstrate and protest, without violence or trespass; make recommendations concerning curriculum and other school matters; but in the last analysis, the final decision has to be left with the faculty and administrators."

The judge blamed the Vietnam war for triggering campus unrest and giving "a small body of revolutionaries from within and without the campus a ready-made issue for them to exploit in their effort to destroy our institutions of learning."

He then called on the United States to pull out of the war, saying, "Vietnam has caused dissent and discontent. Our further participation in this senseless bloodshed must end now and not wait upon Saigon's approval."

He added that "young and old will not accept blindly and without question all that they have read and are told. More people are beginning to use their own judgment."

But Judge Kalus emphasized that "we are not ready to cast aside or destroy our democratic intitutions, not stand idly by if such an attempt is made."

MLK Sponsor Visit By Draft Organizer

On Wednesday, October 1st, Thomas Reeves, Director of the National Council to Repeal the Draft, a newly-formed organization headquartered in Washington, D.C., will be visiting UMass to explore prospects of organizing a local chapter of the Council in western Massachusetts, possibly in the town of Amherst or on the University campus itself.

Only thirty years old, Mr. Reeves presents an impressive record of work in academic and ecclesiastic circles, both in America and abroad. In 1959 he graduated magna cum laude from Birmingham-Southern College, Alabama, with a B.A. in politics.

He holds an S.T.B. from Harvard, cum laude; an M.A. from American University; and a D. Phil. degree in philosophy from Humboldt University in East Berlin.

In addition he has studied at Otto-Suhr Institute and the Free University in West Berlin. Mr. Reeves has taught at Schiller College (West German y), American Universi ty, and Federal City College (Washington).

He served as pastor of the First Methodist Church, South Athol, Mass., from 1961 to 1963. In 1965 he was Administrative Director of the Institute on Christianity and World Affairs, co-sponsored by the National Council of Churches and American University.

He was Director and Tour Leader for "The Free Trip" tours to East and West Europe and to the USSR and Asia in 1966, 1967, and 1968, and he will lead a "Free Trip" tour to the USSR, Pakistan, People's China, and Japan in the summer of 1970. He became Director of the National Council to Repeal the Draft in July, 1969.

Mr. Reeves is scheduled to arrive on campus around noon Wednesday. Between 2 and 3 p.m. he will hold a news conference in the Student Union. At 6 p.m. he will attend a dinner with a select group of student leaders, draft counselors, clergymen, and members of the University administration. At 8 p.m. he will lecture in the Student Union Ballroom on "American Militarism and the Draft." The public is cordially invited to attend.

Mr. Reeves' visit, which is sponsored by the Martin Luther King Council, coincidentally follows on the heels of President Nixon's announced draft call reductions of 50,000 men for the remainder of the year. In a recent NEW YORK TIMES interview, Mr. Reeves commented that President Nixon's statement was "very fraudulent" in that the total number of men drafted in 1969 would even then be only 5,600 below the 1968 total.

Persons interested in obtaining further information may call Ken Mosakowski at the Martin Luther King Council office, 545-0648 or 545-0649.

Tonight WMUA's "Focus" will examine two major events on the University of Massachusetts campus. First: "Free University City." Ken Mosakowski's guests, for an in-depth discussion of Free University City and community involvement, will be Free University spokesmen Tim Ney, Dick Sleeper, and Steve Stoia.

All interested persons are invited to tune in on "Focus" tonight at 9 o'clock at 91.1 FM.

Orpheus at Soph-Frosh Picnic.

Thieu Makes Vague Request For U.S. Nuclear Weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nguyen Van Thieu of South Vietnam appeared to suggest in an interview yesterday that his country be given atomic weapons. But an interviewer said he thinks Thieu was misunderstood.

State Department sources said there never has been any such official request from Saigon. And they noted that the United States is firmly committed, through the nuclear nonproliferation treaty, against the supplying of nuclear weapons to any country not now having them.

Thieu made his suggestion in an interview filmed last week in Saigon for broadcast in this country yesterday on the ABC television-radio program "Issues and Answers".

John Scali, one of the ABC interviewers, said yesterday that although Thieu's words appear clear on the surface, he and his fellow reporter, Frank Reynolds, gained the impression that Thieu does not want or expect to be provided with nuclear weapons.

Rather, Scali said, their impression is that the South Vietnamese president was trying to say that his country was counting on the U.S. "nuclear umbrella" policy for protection.

Scali noted that Thieu has difficulty with his English and this may have contributed to a misunderstanding.

Developing his main theme that South Vietnam has the manpower to deal with the Communist-led enemy if given enough economic aid and military logistical support, Thieu said:

". . . the United States can be free and stay behind and help us economically and in more sophisticated weapons, like atomic warfare that we have not." An interviewer asked "More sophisticated weapons like what?"

Thieu replied, "Like atomic weapons, something like-" The obviously surprised interviewer interrupted to say "Atomic weapons?" But Thieu did not respond to this, going off on another subject, and the matter was not referred to again during the interview.

Although pressed repeatedly on the point of how many U.S. troops could be withdrawn in 1970, Thieu refused to be specific, always conditioning his replies on the matter of the amount of U.S. logistical and economic support and the speed with which it is supplied.

Students Seek To Aid Holyoke Welfare Mothers

Recently Holyoke welfare mothers staged their first march on the Holyoke Welfare Office to secure their rights. The march resulted, however, in intimidation from Holyoke's social workers and Mayor. Mothers who marched were told by social workers that their checks would be cut off or even the Welfare Office would close. Mayor Taupier would not listen to appeals for right of welfare mothers, but instead issued warnings about violence and outside agitators to the non-violent marchers. The intimidation resulted in demoralization in the ranks of the welfare mothers.

A new student organization at UMass will be formed tonight to aid the welfare mothers in their struggle for rights. Called "Students for Welfare Rights" the organization will meet tonight with Holyoke welfare mothers to discuss concrete things students can do such as organizing welfare recipients, providing Spanish translators, and participating in future marches. The meeting will take place in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union at 8:00.

Actors James Flavin, Robert Blake, Gerald O'Loughlin, John Forsythe, Scott Wilson and John Gallaudet line up at an entrance to a State Prison as they prepare to film a location sequence for the film version of Truman Capote's "In Cold Blood," which will be coming soon to the Student Union ballroom.

Communist Party Ousts Dubcek; Keeps Him on Central Committee

PRAGUE (AP) - Alexander Dubcek, who tried to give communism in Czechoslovakia a "human face," was ousted from his party's inner circle Sunday in a major overhaul of the Communist party and government by the new pro-Soviet leadership.

A purge list also showed that 29 men who backed Dubcek while he ran the nation from January to August last year have left the Central Committee, the second highest organ in the party.

At the same time, President Ludvik Svoboda announced a Cabinet shakeup in which nine members were unseated or had their jobs abolished. The new government will be sworn in Monday.

Then, in another move in a day filled with political activity, the Communist party made Dubcek's 1968 reform regime the scapegoat for the Soviet invasion last year. It said the invasion "was under no circumstances an act of aggression against the people, nor was it an occupation of Czechoslovak territory or a suppression of freedom and Socialist order in our state."

Gustav Husak, who succeeded Dubcek as Communist party chief in April, said in a speech released Sunday night that the weekend party and government purges should serve as an example for action needed in all areas of Czechoslovak life from top to bottom.

In the speech made during the three days of closed Central Committee meetings last week, Husak said: "It is necessary to review the party apparatus from the central bodies to the lowest so that right-wing opportunism does not find refuge . . . The same line should be adopted in social organizations, state and economic apparatus, science and culture."

With the ouster of Dubcek from the ruling party Presidium, Svoboda and Premier Oldrich Cernik became the ranking officials remaining from the brief reform era.

Dubcek, still very popular in the country, was retained as a member of the Central Committee, but he and Josef Smrkovsky, one of his closest aides in 1968, were removed as president and vice president of Parliament.

Josef Kempny, 49, a rising conservative star, replaced Dubcek on the Presidium and was one of six deputy premiers named in the new government. Kempny also was among 13 new conservatives placed on the party Central Committee.

Dubcek's retention on the Central Committee was surprising in view of Husak's report accusing him of error after error in the months leading to the invasion.

Husak said that during 1968, if the Dubcek party Presidium "had proceeded from internationalist positions with a political and statesman-like responsibility in the negotiations . . . with the Soviet Union and the other fraternal parties . . ., the allied troops would not have entered our territory."

Parents Must Overcome Hang-Ups Before Sex Ed Programs Successful

Before sex education programs can be successfully introduced in a school system, parents must overcome the sexual "hang-ups" they have grown up with in a Puritanical society.

This view was expressed at Edna Skinner College Chapter of the American Home Economics Association's first lecture Wednesday night at the Student Union. The speaker was Dr. Eleanore Braun Luckey, head of the Department of Child Development and Family Relations at the University of Connecticut.

Logic and rationality in sex education have been emphasized far too long, cutting off a whole area of feelings and emotions, Dr. Luckey said. Until they are brought out as an integral part of the subject, a serious discussion between parent and child cannot take place, she added.

Dr. Luckey maintained that classroom instruction in sex education plays a secondary role to that of the family. However, more willingness on the part of parents to share the task with teachers is a step forward, she believes. Teachers, in turn, can be most effective by respecting all points of view in their discussions, Dr. Luckey said.

In the question period, Dr. Luckey described her philosophy; if the subject is taught from kindergarten, there should not be a need to place emphasis in a particular class later. The best topics a teacher could cover on the junior high level would be basic physiology, and how to relate to each other as individuals, she said. In addition, adolescents should not be denied access to birth control information at any time.

Dr. Luckey said that although not so much stress is put on sexual values in Swedish classes, U.S. teaching methods in the area would probably be comparable. Swedes have had sex education in their school systems for 15 years, she noted.

Applications are available for the Oxford Summer Seminar at Trinity College, Oxford, England. All those interested should contact Dr. Ernest H. Hofer of the English Department.

The Seminar is not limited exclusively to English majors.

Not every Dorm in the Quad has extremely bad facilities. Leach House was just renovated. Johnson is fairly new. The others not mentioned, Lewis, Thatcher, and Dwight, are plagued by similar conditions. But the complaints go much further. The area is socially and culturally deprived. There was never enough money to start activities for the Quad. The Administrative staff for the area is under-manned, compared to other areas.

Mike West broke the Quad's problems down to four areas: environment, program, money, and staff. Official request for improvements in these areas have been denied or ignored.

The students of the area feel neglected and ignored. The House Presidents and Heads of Residence for all nine dorms in the Quad have met and decided to support the Area Congress fully in all activities.

The Quad is changing. It no longer wants to be known as the "slum" of UMass. The students are organizing and working towards improvement.

Temporarily Wrecked But Still Wired for Action

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Despite complaints about zealous inspectors peeking into the purses and lunchboxes of school children and forcing travelers to strip off their clothing for personal searches, the United States said yesterday it has been successful with it's Mexican border crackdown on drug smuggling.

The weeklong crackdown saw 1,824 of the 1.98 million people checked at border stations, searched after stripping off their clothes, only 33 persons arrested and 405 seizures of an unspecified amount of marijuana and drugs.

The Mexican vice consul at Brownsville, Tex., filed a protest after he and his wife were searched.

The search is part of Operation Intercept, which has dropped what some people now call a "grass curtain" across the 2,000-mile border from the Pacific Coast to the Gulf of Mexico.

Travelers are complaining of long delays as the inspectors search virtually everything and everyone crossing the border.

Mexican and American bordertown businessmen agree that stopping drug traffic is a noble cause, but said tying up auto traffic for one to six hours is disastrous.

"We're measuring our success not by the number of seizures made," a federal spokesman said, "but by the price of marijuana, heroin and other drugs on the market. It is raising their cost beyond the means of most young people in America."

"We're positive we're stopping narcotics and dangerous drugs from coming into this country. No large seizures have been made since Intercept was launched last Sunday, because obviously the big smugglers have gotten the word."

Mexican labor leaders said they plan demonstrations this week to protest the border crossing delays, which discouraged tourism and caused thousands of Mexicans to be late for work in nearby U.S. cities.

The Life and "Times" Of Christine Keeler

LONDON (AP) - Christine Keeler, sloe-eyed goodtime girl who rocked the British government, started her life story yesterday and set off a fresh row, as the London Sunday newspaper News of The World began a series on Miss Keeler's life.

Main concern is expressed for John D. Profumo, war minister who resigned six years ago when his affair with Miss Keeler was revealed.

Rupert Murdoch, Australian press magnate who recently took over the newspaper, said: "She, Miss Keeler, is part of the history of this country just as Profuno is. There are lessons in it, lessons that a politician should not tell lies."

Miss Keeler, now 27, claims she wanted to give her own account of the scandal which some say actually led to Labor's triumph in the 1964 general elections.

The first part of the newspaper series recounts her affair with Profuno and a Soviet naval attache, Yevgeny Ivanev.

Neither Party Wins Majority In W. Germany

BONN, Germany (AP) - West Germany's voters Sunday denied a clear mandate to either of its major parties to form the next government.

Chancellor Kurt Georg Kiesinger's Christian Democratic party-CDU-again got the most votes. But it did not get the majority required to rule alone.

Foreign minister Willy Brandt's Social Democrats-SPD-now junior partner in the government coalition with the CDU, made gains from the last election in 1965. But it also did not get enough votes to form a government alone.

Official results gave the Christian Democrats 46.2 per cent of the votes; the Social Democrats 42.7 per cent, and the Free Democrats 5.7 per cent.

Well-Planned Concert

A UMass concert start on time? They said it couldn't be done.

However, it was done Saturday night, and for two shows.

The Supremes were excellent, but they, as well as the audience benefited from the organization and planning that went into the concert.

The Senior class officers, Dave Veale, Ina Goldstein, Lynn Nevins, Rene Markt, and Bob Twiss merit our congratulations for providing the campus with one of the most enjoyable concerts in recent history.

MY OWN TRIP

To Break Loose

ASSIGNMENT: Write a High Holy Day service that the most ardent non-Jewish Jew can feel comfortable with.

This was the homework Cindy Shamban and I took on a few days before Rosh Hashonah. The first part was easy. Eliminate all mention of God, prayer, religion, Hebrew, and any other elements of a particularist clan which strives toward the opposite of that universal brotherhood of man we all feel is ours for the asking (except that no one is asking). We gleefully threw out all we were sick of and sat down to discuss what a satisfactory service might include.

Rick Levine could open and close the experiment with his guitar. No one would protest that. We've all known for a long time Rick's fingers are guided by angels. But what about the actual worship? Well, if religion and life are synonymous, and if prayer in Judaism is an affirmation, then any kind of affirmation of life would be a relevant service.

We decided on a sort of encounter group where our real religious feelings, in other words, out attitudes toward life, would come out, be discussed, challenged, and modified so that at the end we'd all be together with the feeling that it is still possible to be comfortable and Jewish at the same time. Around this "group" (we even sat in a circle on the floor) we stuck in the Sh'ma and the "Grant us peace" passage from the traditional service.

What a bomb! About thirty people showed up, but my initial thrill that a significantly large group would again be involved in the process of reevaluating their Jewishness soon succumbed to disappointment as the "rap" in the middle of the whole thing got hung up on the question: "Is Judaism, or any religion, necessary?" The answer, forced by those who admittedly "just came to hassle" more than by those involved in an honest inquiry, was a terminating "No". Everyone went home without finishing the service. I walked out more confused than I was when I began the experiment. That evening did strange things to my head.

When Tim and Dick asked me to do another one in F.U.C. for Yom Kippur, my immediate response was "No thanks." Two hours later, I had posted several signs around Southwest announcing my intention to try once again. This time I prepared nothing. Those who showed up could do what they pleased. I was more interested in process than in product anyway. When a hundred people packed F.U.C.'s first scheduled event, I held my ground. Anything that was to happen would come from the entire group. "What do you want to do?" was my first question.

After debating structure vs nonstructure, and one large group vs. several smaller ones ("Please don't fight on Yom Kippur," I had to beg at one point), we settled down on a "discussion" of what "God" meant to three or four people who participated. Bad? It got worst. Soon we were discussing just what it was we wanted to pass on to our children. I walked out.

Depressed, I looked at Michelle Citron, who had walked out even earlier, and asked for a suggestion to salvage the service. "I came here for an emotional experience," moaned Michelle, "not for that nonsense."

I agreed. We both went back into the dome, interrupted a rapidly deteriorating discussion, and encouraged everyone to come out under the freezing firmament. There we formed two huge concentric circles and began to sing. Suddenly the whole atmosphere was transformed. We danced, sang Hebrew songs of God brotherhood, Israel, and peace and clung to each other for warmth. In our own Jewish, particularistic way we were participating in a universal quest for warmth, understanding, a sense of purpose, and an elevation above the careless everyday existence we have been accepting.

When we became too exhausted to continue, we broke up and went into three of the domes. My group did a few non-verbal things and then we subdivided into even smaller groups where people talked about anything they felt appropriate. I was comfortable being a Jew that night. I didn't have to worry about being considered any of those things a campus Jew isn't supposed to be.

I imagine that everyone occasionally reaches that point when he just has to break loose and sing, in his own particular way. That Sunday night proved that when we allow it to happen, it is a beautiful thing.

Campus Comment

A Process

We greatly enjoyed our stay here with you all and feel you have the energy needed to transform some great fantasies into some very strong realities. Your approach to building domes rather than talking about them shows that you are committed to offering true alternatives to the students on this campus in a human, sensory manner. As in most other truly new things, the problems occur not in doing things but in evaluating the things you do. Fortunately, this process is usually done through conglomerate shout and change is almost insured.

It is important to keep the structures (both people and physical) evolving, do not let any of it become too previous. The most important thing you all have going for you is a thing so new that you are not inhibited by ill-set precedent, so keep it loose. When the Free University City becomes a "process" instead of a "thing" you will truly have something new. Good luck from the Right on Muthafuckers.

Survival

In the last week, one community has blossomed and flourished on our campus; while another has struggled for its very existence. The concept of the Free University City is certainly a valid one, and is the culmination of the physical and mental efforts of many hard working and rational people.

On the other side of campus, however, another community is dying. Fraternities have existed on our campus for a century and have flourished during much of that time. What has happened to them in the last decade? The answer is "nothing". The times and people have changed, but the fraternities have not. The people, times, and fraternities are no longer synchronized. The campus is caught up in what might be called an "intellectual revolution" in which the social life which characterizes fraternities is no longer relevant.

Yet, there exist many intangibles in a fraternity which the outsider cannot see. Friendships are developed which last a lifetime, and there is no gift greater than this. The fraternity represents a challenge to the liberal or even "fringe" radical thinker. What could be more rewarding than showing a bigot or racist the hatred which underlies his belief? There is the challenge open to a liberal thinker to induce the fraternity man to challenge the "truths" which lie in the Record American, or to read more of the New York Times than the articles about the Mets. The student of today would also be surprised to find many fraternity men who think about more than girls and booze. I have spent many intellectually stimulating hours at my fraternity house.

So I offer you liberal and so-called "radical" thinkers and you of the Free University City a challenge to change the fraternity man and raise him from abyss of conservatism and status quo. Please give us a chance. I have given you one; for, I am one of you.

Fists

I feel a lot of people don't understand and are being turned off by the symbol and initials of free university city: the symbol being a clenched fist superimposed over the blue and green hemispheres of a circle, denoting the sky and earth respectively; and the initials being F.U.C.

While the clenched fist has become the symbol of power, it also represents unity, and in this case, the sense of community which has arisen between the students involved. I believe the fist also stands for the power of the ideal and the strength of the spirit that has driven us to create free University. This was a necessary act; an act showing the unity of the students and the strength of their convictions in an attempt to provide themselves with a better alternative to their education.

The past has shown us that the road to change in Universities via destructive means isn't always successful, and thus we feel that the time has come when constructive alternatives toward the educational system can be the only viable answer.

The seven demands presented by proponents of F.U.C. and the free classes now being taught there, are attempts to answer the individualized needs of the student body, and to create a better educational environment.

And this is why I wear the colors of Free University City.

Supremes Concert, The Plastic Queen

By TOMMY WALKER
Staff Reviewer

I still haven't figured out all the heavy implications of the black ventriloquist with the white suit and pathetically sick humor (whose name I thankfully didn't catch) being part of the same show as the Supremes (they had the same back-up band). His nowhere attempts at singing "Can't Turn You Loose" and "Proud Mary" could have been worse than his jokes. I can't imagine either Otis Redding or John Fogerty being anywhere near the same artistic universe as this joker, but in any case his performance was so bad that it isn't even within my power to analyze it.

Not so with Jimmy Castor, the first show on the bill. Good, driving rock with a touch of Latin from the band complemented Castor's fine vocals and really soulful stage performance. The highlight of his set was an incredible version of the pop-gospel song "Oh Happy Day."

The humorous interlude mentioned above blew everything that Castor had created and set the stage for a ventriloquism of another sort, the Supremes. They came on in gold-glitter floor-length gowns, and began the set with a medley of their all-time great smash hits, running through them far too fast, sort of like the national anthem at a baseball game. "Sorry about the football game," said Diana: "We're going to make you feel all right." Yeah. Like I DREAM OF JEANNIE after the Patriots lose another one.

When they started into "Queen of the House," ("this is dedicated to all the mothers in the audience.");) the Supremes' music, UMass, capitalism, and all sorts of other things fell into place like a cosmic jigsaw puzzle. Originally written as a put-on take-off on Roger Miller's "King of the Road," the Supremes did it straight. They celebrated Potato Woman and the new slavery of suburbia, leaving every bit of their cultural heritage in the garbage disposal with the watermelon rinds. Fix breakfast, get the kids off to school and Big Daddy off to the rat race, do the housework and reach for Mother's Little Helper . . . then . . . maybe someday your daughter will be crowned Freshman Queen and then she'll get that wonderful husband and become Queen of the House herself. When Hubby comes home with fantasies of Big Mama Thornton clashing with the fresh memory of a hard day at the office, he'll have a TV dinner to eat, a Plastic Fantastic Lover to stare at, and a Plastic Queen to ride into oblivion.

(The liner notes to the Supremes' Greatest Hits album, written by Carol Channing, starts off with, "The Supremes and I have a lot in common. They make records. I buy them." Dig it. Just like Ban Roll-On.)

Fine Arts Program

by STEPHEN WALT
Fine Arts Editor

After a rather slow start, the fine arts program finally begins to take shape in the next two weeks. Next Friday night, the New England String Quartet will perfrom in Bowker; Saturday night, Nina Simone Entertains; a week from Thursday, Mischa Dichter performs.

The New England String Quartet is a faculty group in residence at the University of Connecticut. They have done a great deal of touring both at home and in Europe, being acclaimed wherever they perform. Their program includes works by Haydn, Beethoven, and Bartok, and should prove rewarding and entertaining for all who attend.

Nina Simone's singing defies classification. She combines elements of folk, jazz, rock, and gospel singing into a unique sound which appeals to followers of each musical idiom. Her performance will doubtless be exciting. See it.

Mischa Dichter is one of the most exciting pianists in the world today. He has performed to capacity crowds all over the world, appearing with several major symphony orchestras. He generates a great deal of excitement when he plays and should not be missed. His program includes works of Bach, Beethoven, and Brahms.

I recently went to a preview showing of MEDIUM COOL, which, according to the invitation, was judged "powerful" at its premiere. The film is about a week in the life of a television news photographer; television being a cool medium by McLuhan's criteria. With the exceptions of the soundtrack, by Mike Bloomfield, and some good shots of Chicago, summer 1968 (in the last fifteen minutes of the film), the film offers little more than a waste of two hours of your time.

An exhibit of paintings by deaf children, entitled "Shout in Silence: Visual Arts and the Deaf" is on display at the Smith College Museum of Art through October 19. The exhibit was organized by Rawley A. Silver and is being circulated by the Smithsonian Institute. The paintings show a high degree of sophistication in relationship to the ages of the artists and show how painting may be used as a means of expression for the nonverbal deaf child.

UMass Environmental Engineers Begin Graduate Program in Air Pollution

UMass engineers have joined the battle for clean air.

The UMass environmental engineering group this year begins federally-funded research and teaching programs in air pollution, supplementing a broad program of water pollution studies already under way.

This year the first students were enrolled in a new federally-backed graduate program in air pollution control. A three-year study of pollutant removal from stack gases under a $118,000 federal grant has been initiated through the department of chemical engineering.

According to group director Tsuan H. Feng, the graduate program is designed "to train engineers and others who deal with air pollution control problems in regulatory agencies at different levels of government as well as dealing with pollution in industry."

The program is for graduate majors in the departments of public health, civil engineering and chemical engineering who take courses in those departments plus a core curriculum in air pollution studies through the environmental engineering group.

The training program begins this fall with a course by Dr. Donald D. Adrian on micrometeorology - the study of small particles in the atmosphere and how they move. Also being taught this fall is an introductory air pollution course by Dr. Howard A. Peters, director of environmental health and safety at the University.

Planned later are key courses in air pollution control processing, a study of the engineering of pollution control processes taught by Dr. W. Leigh Short of the chemical engineering faculty, and bio-instrumentation, a study of pollution measurement techniques, taught by Dr. Francis DeGiano of the civil engineering faculty.

The latter will study "instrumental techniques available to use in the whole field of water and air pollution control," Dr. DiGiano said. He explained that one of the big problems now in air pollution control is instrumentation and measurement of pollution. "You can't enforce pollution regulations unless you know your instruments are telling the truth," he said.

Another planned course will examine the effects of air pollution on plant life, a crucial economic factor in the northeast where annual air pollution losses by the greenhouse, vegetable and flower industry are estimated at $18 million in the 12 northeastern states.

The course will be taught by Dr. William Feder of the UMass Waltham Field Station, a specialist on the effects of air pollutants on plants.

On the research side, the environmental engineering group is tackling a major pollution problem with its $118,000 study of stack gases. The researcher is Dr. Short, a former research engineer for the Chevron Research Co., where he played a major role in inventing and developing a new process to remove chemicals from refinery waste water.

"The grant is to investigate a process for the removal of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide compounds from stack gases by chemical reaction with carbon monoxide to form sulfur, which would then be recovered and sold commercially," according to Dr. Short.

Pollution from combustion of high sulfur fuels such as the soft coal commonly used by power plants is a major clean air problem. "Without control or elimination of sulfur emissions about 30 million tons per year of sulfur dioxide will be discharged into the atmosphere by the early 1970's," Dr. Short noted.

His research and the air pollution graduate program are supported by grants to UMass from the U.S. Air Pollution Control Administration.

Literature Table on War Moratorium in SU

In connection with the upcoming Viet Nam Participation Day on October fifteenth, The Martin Luther King Council for Social Action has set up an information table for all students, faculty and workers on campus.

The table has been established in the Main Lobby at the Student Union. The purpose of the literature table is to sell leaflets, bumper stickers, and buttons concerning the October Moratorium, and to give out related information about it.

Operation every Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, the table is open from nine o'clock to five o'clock in the evening.

A "Commitment Sheet" is also at the literature table, for interested people to sign their names to.

It states the following: "We, the undersigned students of the University of Massachusetts, commit ourselves to the support of the October fifteenth Peace Action Day. We further commit ourselves to demonstrating our support by attending the planned morning rally, soliciting support for the November Moratorium by door to door canvassing and by boycotting our classes for that day if they are not cancelled administratively."

To date more than fifteen hundred people have signed their names to this commitment sheet.

The Viet Nam Moratorium has been nationally scheduled for Wednesday, October fifteenth. It is to be characterized by rallies (both on campus and off) in support of complete troop withdrawal from Viet Nam, door to door canvassing concerning the war and cancellation of classes for the same purpose.

At this time efforts are being made to cancel classes at UMass. So far these efforts have been unsuccessful. Full student and faculty backing is needed in order to help make an effective impression on the nation's leaders.

Orchard Hill Votes $125 For Free City

Orchard Hill Residential College Area Government held its first meeting of the semester on September 25. The first major action of the four-dorm government representing Field, Grayson, Webster, and Dickinson, was the appropriation of $125 in support of Free University City. Further involvement in FUC by Orchard people was also pledged.

In other items on the agenda, OHRCAG discussed recreational facilities for the Hill. Basketball courts are now being planned. Re-affirmed was the necessity for lighted, paved paths leading to and from the Hill, as well as improved paved parking facilities.

OHRCAG meets on alternate Thursdays at 10 p.m.

Fistful of Dollars Proves New Angle as Cowboy Flick

After over 60 years of movie-making, you'd think the western well would have run dry -- but United Artists has come up with another angle on the perennial cowboy flick with "A Fistful of Dollars," coming to the Student Union ballroom Thursday, Oct. 2.

Combining the best of recent trends in adventure entertainment as well as the mystery-motivation elements of psychological drama, the creators of this unusual movie have created a man with no name and placed him in the one setting considered ideal for character development and free-for-all action: the American Southwest.

Spies and secret agents notwithstanding; soldiers and astronauts and cops and robbers and all the other stock in cinematic trade to the contrary, there is one kind of movie that has always offered limitless possibilities. Since 1903, when "The Great Train Robbery" made history as the first movie to tell a story, the best stories on film have been set in the west. We've long since passed the point where the bad guys wore black and the good guys rode white horses . . .and we've explored almost every pathological pathway to analyze the nature of the men who made the west. Almost every path--but not all.

In "A Fistful of Dollars," Clint Eastwood portrays a fascinating character calculated to trigger a whole new style in adventure. It is the first motion picutre of its kind. It won't be the last.

Politella Named to Board Of "Scholastic Editor"

The appointment of Dr. Dario Politella of UMass to the Editorial Advisory Board of "Scholastic Editor" magazine has been announced by Otto W. Qyale, publisher.

Dr. Politella is associate professor of journalistic studies at the Amherst campus. The magazine is published at the University of Minnesota by the Associated Collegiate Press for more than 3,600 member schools in North America. Founded in 1920, "Scholastic Editor" prints articles to aid student editors and their faculty advisers in producing campus newspapers, yearbooks and magazines.

An authority on the student press, Dr. Politella is also founder and editor of "The Collegiate Journalist", a triannual magazine distributed to student editors, administrators and libraries on 850 college campuses. He is president of the National Council of College Publications Advisers and coordinator of its Commission on the Freedoms and Responsibilities of the College Student Press in America.

Dr. Politella has compiled the "Directory of the College Student Press in America." The second edition of this biennial work will appear November 15 from Orbridge Publishing Co., who also publish "The Standard Periodical Directory."

A Concrete Undertaking

Sidewalk superintendants will have a red-letter day tomorrow (Tuesday) as the foundation of the new library tower is poured in a continuous 12-15 hour operation that will use the entire cement-making capacity of three cement plants.

Twenty-six hundred cubic yards of concrete will be poured from 30-35 trucks making 22-25 round trips per hour. Instead of using cranes, the Big Pour will have 4 points of discharge into the concrete forms, two directly from the concrete trucks and two from the trucks into the site via conveyors. The magnitude of operation is equal to that of pouring the foundatons of 60 average size houses at one time.

The tremendous latticework of steel cables and reinforcing steel that has been laid during recent weeks within the 100-foot square excavation is arranged to reinforce the concrete base so that it can resist the shearing forces of the 300-foot high tower that will rise above it. The cable has been positioned to match the lines of stress that will develop in the concrete as the building is completed.

In an intricate maneuver on Tuesday, as the concrete hardens tension will be applied to the cables to maintain their position in the tower base and counter-balance the shearing forces. This construction system is know as post-tensioning (tension applied afterwards). It will enable the tower to be built without internal supporting columns.

The full library building will also include, surrounding the tower, a 200 x 300 foot main floor topped by a terrace that will be a ground level on the South College side. On the pond side, because of the slope of the land, the main floor will be above ground.

KennedyCutsBack on Politics,AwaitsCourt Action

By WALTER R. MEARS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Edward M. Kennedy has decided he will not make public political appearances while court action continues in the aftermath of the fatal automobile accident which altered his life.

That self-imposed moratorium has kept him from direct participation in a special congressional election in Massachusetts - which has drawn a parade of bigname Democrats.

"For now, the senator is not making any political appearances himself," said Richard C. Drayne, Kennedy's press secretary.

That decision could be altered if court proceedings continue over an extended period.

The Massachusetts Supreme Court is to hear arguments Oct. 8 on the contested rules for an inquest into the death of Mary Jo Kopechne, the secretary who drowned July 18 after Kennedy's automobile plunged from a narrow bridge on Chappaquiddick Island, Mass.

The Massachusetts Congressional contest matching Democratic state Rep. Michael Harrington and Republican state Sen. William Saltonstall, is next Tuesday.

Kennedy has taped radio statements urging support of Harrington; on Saturday, the Democratic candidate's organization finally decided to use them during the last three days of the campaign.

The Massachusetts senator also held a fund-raising reception for Harrington at his home in Boston on Sept. 18.

Meanwhile, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine and Sen. George S. McGovern of South Dakota have gone to the Sixth Congressional District to campaign for Harrington.

Sen. Fred R. Harris of Oklahoma, the Democratic national chairman, plans an appearance there before the Tuesday election; Hubert H. Humphrey is due in the district Monday.

Republicans have countered with state GOP leaders, with Sen. Edward W. Brooke and Gov. Francis Sargent working for Saltonstall, son of former Sen. Leverett Saltonstall.

Both national parties are paying close attention to the Massachusetts race for the seat left vacant by the death of Republican Rep. William H. Bates, as a possible signal of off-year political trends.

The race now is rated a toss-up by both Democratic and Republican sources.

Mary Jo's Parents Say No Need For Autopsy

By LEE LINDER
Associated Press Writer

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. (AP) - The case to prevent the opening of Mary Jo Kopechne's grave goes to court again today with her parents arguing there is no need for an autopsy.

The parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Kopechne of Berkeley Heights, N.J., want a dismissal or at least continued delay, of a petition to exhume the body.

First arguments were heard Sept. 24, when attorneys for the parents presented their case before Judge Bernard C. Brominski, who set Monday's hearing for further arguments.

A similar plea to kill Dinis' request had been rejected Sept. 3. It was in that hearing that Dinis said he had learned there was blood on Mary Jo's body and clothes, but the judge demanded proof that a crime may have been committed.

"Our position is no different now than before," said Joseph Flanagan, counsel for the Kopechnes. "It is quite simple - no crime, no criminal conduct, no autopsy."

The parents said Dinis has failed to prove a Massachusetts medical examiner was incorrect in ruling, without an autopsy, that death was by drowning.

Failing dismissal, the parents want Brominski to delay enhumation until after an inquest into the death is held in Massachusetts, which might be a month or longer.

RedmenResemblePros(?) In Horrendous 2nd Half

UMass, in the second half, Saturday looked just like pros, but unfortunately, like the Boston Patriots. And even more frightening was that they looked like they did a year ago.

The Redmen were brought back from the euphoric heights of their rout over Maine, by a big, powerful Buffalo team that ran the ball down the UMass throats and hemmed in an inconsistent offense.

UMass did its own part by breaking assignments, making mistakes, missing opportunities and playing generally lousy. It was bad enough to watch all this, without the pleasant memory of Maine staring you in the face.

Vic Fusia didn't enjoy the unimpressive proceedings any more than the leather-lunged drunks singing his praises from the safe and unintelligent distance of the home side grandstand. Believe it or not, you budding barbershop quartet boys, he thought UMass played lousy too.

"We were as bad this week as we were good last week. There were broken assignments, our passing attack was anything but lethal and, in clutch situations, we did not take advantage but instead made mistakes. We were inconsistent to the point of picking up an average of six yards on first downs and then being very poor on second and third downs.

"I feel badly about how we played, because we should have looked a lot better."

Fusia did not give all the credit to his own team for losing, but also gave some praise to Buffalo for winning. "They are a good football team," said the coach. On defense they did everything we expected them to, but they did it consistently well. Maybe we were a little out of our league out there Saturday."

The Redmen were further hampered by poor equipment namely the lack of tear jerseys. On at least three occasions, UMass runners were breaking away, only to be pulled down by their shirts. Maybe, UMass players should become more generous and give defenders the shirts off their backs.

It's not nice to say, but the Redmen looked a lot like the '68 Redmen and that must be a scary thought for all. A year ago, UMass was overpowered by Buffalo in the second game of the season after an initial win, and were on their way to a 2-8 disaster.

If history ever repeats itself, there will be a lot more bald heads around from worry than just one head coach, who incidentally, has the best lifetime winning percentage of Massachusetts college coaches.

REDMEN RANTINGS - Action picked up in the second period when a fan was carried out of sec. 18....The end of era was signaled by the joyous throwing of one (1) freshman beanie following the U-Mass score....Buffalo quarterback Mick Murtha was a doubtful participant because of a hamstring pull but he played with the agility of the fine signal caller he is.....A great stand was wasted with a U-Mass safety.....A Buffalo defender was almost decapitated by the cannon at the end of the field, but the Bulls reciprocated by almost wiping out the flying Redmen following their halftime performance, Buffalo only threw one pass in the second half, an incompletion.....Steve Rogers, who made his 14th career interception, narrowly missed another with a great one hand effort that was made with one foot out of bounds...UConn edged Yale in a thriller, 19-15, as Mike Zito scored twice...Boston College had a tough time before winning 21-14 over Navy...Maine defeated Southern Connecticut 21-14...Boston University, who by all appearances could be a power to be reckoned with, crushed Vermont 27-7.....Dartmouth bombed New Hampshire 31-0...Brown shutout Rhode Island 21-0, while Harvard did likewise to Holy Cross 13-0....And a former Collegian Editor and now an admiral in the Swiss Navy was seen lurking in the press box.

EVERY INCH COUNTS - UMass fullback Ed Sarno busts through the Buffalo line on one of his six carries which earned him 36 total yards for the afternoon. Sarno was third best Redman rusher. Pat Scavone gained 41 yards on ten carries and Jerry Grasso led all backs with 81 yards on 11 carries.

Redmen Defeated by Buffalo, 16-6

Bulls Spoil UMass Home Opener

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Sports
VOLUME XCVIII ISSUE NO. 17
MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1969

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Assistant Sports Editor

On a sunny and warm Saturday afternoon before 13,200 fans at Alumni Stadium, UMass met its first football defeat, losing to the University of Buffalo, 16-6, in the home opener of its '69 grid campaign.

The Redmen showed signs of offensive brilliance in the first half, much to the delight of the crowd, even though they left the field trailing by three, 9-6. Buffalo, however, was feeling out UMass and came out in the second half with a devastating ground attack that produced the final Bull touchdown and which ate up many valuable minutes of the clock.

It was the Redmen who put the first points on the scoreboard late in the first quarter. They got their hands on the ball when Buffalo's second punt of the game rolled dead on the UMass 12 yard line.

Two rushes into the line by fullback Ed Sarno followed by three Jerry Grasso gainers brought the ball to the Buffalo 47 yard stripe, first down. After an incompleted pass, halfback Pat Scavone picked up three yards, leaving the Redmen with a third-and-seven situation on the 43.

Quarterback Tim Adams faded back and aimed a pass for Grasso on the left side of the field. Grasso made an over-the-head grab on the 30, shook off his defender and raced into the end zone, putting UMass ahead, 6-0, with 2:11 left in the first period.

An illegal procedure penalty nullified Dennis Gagnon's extra point try and forced him to kick over from five yards back. He was wide to the left.

For the remainder of the period and for the first several minutes of the second quarter, the ball changed hands four times until Buffalo took possession of it on their own 34 yard line. Five plays later, with 9:12 showing on the clock, the Bulls scored as end Paul Lang took a pass down the middle from quarterback Mick Murtha on a third down play from the UMass 18. An extra point kick by Mike Constantino put Buffalo ahead by one, 7-6.

The Redmen took the visitors' kickoff and promptly moved to the Bulls' 28 yard stripe in eight plays for a first-and-ten. However, Adams was nailed for a 12-yard loss back to the 40 and, when the next two plays netted but one yard, UMass had to surrender the pigskin.

CAUGHT BEHIND THE LINE - UMass quarterback Tim Adams is nabbed behind the line by a Buffalo defensive player. Adams was thrown for losses on five occasions for a total deficit of 37 yards. Plays like this one were typical of the inconsistency of the Redman offense. (MDC photo by Ken Emery).

Seven plays later found Buffalo faced with a third-and-ten from the home 19. Murtha was beseiged by a fierce rush, but, as Redmen luck would have it, he fled the pocket and picked up the first down on the eighth. Two plays brought the ball to the one.

Two running attempts for paydirt were then thwarted in mighty fashion by the UMass defense and the Redmen took over possession with less than a minute to go in the half. On the first offensive play, Adams fumbled the ball and was nabbed by enemy linemen for a safety, putting the Bulls in front, 9-6, with 34 seconds left in the half.

Buffalo took the kickoff up to their own 27 and decided to go for broke. Murtha let one fly but it was intercepted by Steve Rogers, who scurried out of bounds on the visitors' 45 with 16 seconds left on the clock. Much to the disappointment of the fans, a quarterback sneak was called in order to run out the clock.

Both teams were pretty evenly matched in the first half. The rest of the game, however, was dominated by Buffalo and their ground attack of Joe Zelmanski, Barney Woodward and John Faller.

The third period was scoreless as UMass had possession of the ball for 14 plays. Buffalo had the ball for 23 plays and were in control of it with a first down on the Redman 39 as the fourth quarter got underway.

This drive had started on the Bulls' 21 yard line and eight running plays had brought it thus far. Seven more running plays brought the ball into the end zone as Zelmanski took it in from the one with 11:58 remaining in the contest. The extra point by Constantino made it Buffalo 16, UMass 6.

On the next set of downs, the Redmen advanced to the visitors' 29 and a fourth down kicking situation, Gagnon's field goal attempt from the 36 was short by a hair.

UMass made it back to the Buffalo 30 late in the game, but a fourth down pass from there was intercepted by Tom Elliot with just over a minute to go. Needless to say, Buffalo held on for the victory.

UMass Harriers Meet Double Defeat

Surprised by a real strong Providence team and a typically fast Harvard squad, the UMass harriers met with double defeat in their first meet of the season. The overall score of the race was Harvard 30, Providence 38, UMass 60.

Harvard, running their race throughout, got off to a fast start, as a group of the Crimson, along with the Redmen's Ron Wayne and PC's Robb and Speck flashed through the first mile in a very fast 4:30. Wayne stayed close to the frontrunners the whole race as all but one of the fast starting Harvard men fell back. The Redmen's top man finished fourth behind Koerner of Harvard and Robb and Speck of Providence. Wayne's time of 27:11 was 10 seconds faster than he turned in last year on the Harvard course.

Three more Harvards crossed the finish line behind Wayne before the Redmen's second man Leo Duart finished in eighth place with a time of 27:52. Following Duart for UMass were junior Larry Paulson, 16th in 28:47, soph Bruce Blackburn, 17th in 28.58, and senior Dave Evans, 18th in 29:05.

Evans, recovering from a knee operation this summer, turned in a good performance in his first competition since last November. Rounding out the top seven for UMass were sophs Don Dunsky who finished 20th and Steve Whicher who was 25th.

UMass' effort over Harvard's 5.5 mile course compared favorably to last year's Redmen team which split the meet. However, Providence, coming to the meet in mid-season shape, and Harvard, just coming off a three-week training camp proved too much for the Redmen on this Saturday.

The Little Redmen fared better than the varsity as they gained a split in their meet. The final score read Harvard 17, UMass 47, and Providence 77.

Leading the frosh was Tom Jasmin who placed fourth in the 3.1 mile race. Jasmin was sixth coming up the hill at the two mile mark on the Franklin Park course, but passed two of the five Harvard men he was trailing on the last loop of the course.

Placing second for UMass was Tom Swain who was seventh in a time of 16:36, 29 seconds behind Jasmin. Third man for UMass was Phil Riley, placing ninth in 16:46. Finishing up the top seven were Rich Barry 14th, Mike Daly 15th, Gary O'Dell 16th, and Bob Sullivan 17th.

Both the varsity and frosh return to Franklin Park on Saturday to meet Northeastern which defeated Yankee Conference rivals Vermont and New Hampshire in a tri-meet this weekend.

Patriots Fall to Unbeaten Raiders, 38-23

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) - Daryle Lamonica fired four touchdown passes in rallying the unbeaten Oakland Raiders to a 38-23 victory over the winless Boston Patriots Sunday before only 19,069 American Football League fans.

Lamonica, a 7-year pro veteran from Notre Dame, got the Raiders rolling to a third triumph after the upset-minded Patriots stung the 1968 Western Division champs with two touchdowns in the first 12 minutes.

He hit speedy Warren Wells with a 28-yard shot into the end zone late in the opening period. Then, taking the field for the second half with Boston in front 13-10, Lamonica broke open the game.

The Patriots caught the Raiders by surprise at the outset, intercepting a Lamonica pass on the game's fourth play. However, Oakland regained possession as Gino Cappelletti's 50-yard field goal attempt fell far short.

Stopped cold by the Boston defensive line, the Raiders called upon punter Mike Eischeid. However, Eischeid had to run because of a poor centering pass and Boston took over at the Oakland 20. On the second play, Mike Taliaferro passed 18 yards to Charlie Frazier for a touchdown. A few minutes later, Boston went for 65 yards for a touchdown. Taliaferro passed to rookie Ron Sellers for nine and 47 yards in the drive before hitting Jim Whalen in the end zone from the Oakland four.

Soccer Team Frustrated By Maine 2-1

The UMass varsity soccer team was downed by the University of Maine, 2-1 on Saturday morning. The loss was a frustrating one for the Redmen, who out-shot their opponents 20-8 and completely dominated the game in the second half.

All the scoring was done in the first period. UMass high scorer Duane Brown tallied for the Redmen, but Maine took advantage of an inexperienced UMass defense to score twice. Ruben Hernandez and Vernen Connell netted the goals as the Redmen defenders slipped on the rain-soaked field.

Redmen Coach Peter Broaca was dissappointed with the loss, but felt that his forces played well. "We made a few sophomore mistakes on defense and Maine took advantage of them," he said. He was pleased with the way his team played in the second half, and praised the play of Dick Matuszczak, Brown, Lindo Alves, Augie Calheno and Greg Hamilton.

The loss put the Redmen at 0-1 on the year with the same record in the conference.

Green Beret Case Dropped

By BOB HORTON
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Army abruptly dropped its entire case Monday against the Green Berets accused of drugging and killing a South Vietnamese civilian who was an alleged double agent.

Secretary of the Army Stanley R. Resor said the Central Intelligence Agency had refused to provide any witnesses for scheduled October court-martials, making it impossible for the men to be tried fairly.

Resor, in a four-paragraph statement issued by the Pentagon without elaboration, said he was informed the CIA refusal was made "in the interest of national security."

"It is my judgment that under these cirumstances the defendants cannot receive a fair trial," Resor stated. "Accordingly, I have directed today that all charges be dismissed immediately. The men will be assigned to duties outside of Vietnam."

The unexpected Army action brought a theoretical end to the controversial case but appears likely to set the stage for charges that the military is trying to sweep its official dirt under the rug.

The House burst into applause when Chairman L. Mendel Rivers, D-S.C., of the Armed Services Committee announced the charges had been dropped.

"These men will be returned to duty and their records cleared," Rivers said, "and we will insure that their records are clear."

For his part, Resor went on record as disapproving of the kind of act the eight Green Berets, including the former Vietnam commander Col. Robert B. Rheault, were originally accused of carrying out.

"I want to make it clear that the acts which were charged, but not proven, represent a fundamental violation of Army violations, orders and principles," Resor said. "The Army will not and cannot condone unlawful acts of the kind alleged."

Under specifications released only Friday after weeks of official secrecy, the Green Berets were accused of murder and conspiracy in the death of a South Vietnamese named Thai Khac Chuyen, who was allegedly drugged with morphine and then shot.

Col. Rheault, later relieved of command of the 3,000 Green Berets in Vietnam, was charged with premeditated murder although the legal specifications said he did not participate in the actual slaying.

The so-called trigger man was identified in the charges as Capt. Robert F. Marasco, 27, of Bloomfield, N.J.

According to the Pentagon, Resor acted on his own in the rare, top-level legal intervention and informed Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird of his decision Monday morning.

"Laird supports him," Daniel Z. Henkin, Pentagon spokesman, said.

Presumably the CIA decision against allowing any of its intelligence people to testify in the courtsmartial was based on the fact that some of its secret operations involving the military in Vietnam might be compromised.

Resor did not explain in his statement how the national security might be affected by CIA testimony.

He stated that the CIA was "not directly involved in the alleged incident," but there have been a flood of reports from both Saigon and Washington that the Super-secret spy outfit was enmeshed in the situation.

According to one account, the CIA originally ordered the assassination of Chuyen. George W. Gregory, a South Carolina lawyer representing one of the accused, Maj. Thomas C. Middleton Jr., said the CIA later tried to rescind the assassination order but it came too late.

There also were reports that the glamorous Special Forces which wear the green berets and the Army were feuding about handling of the case. Those sympathetic to the case accused Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, U.S. commander in Vietnam, of taking a direct hand in making an example of the eight Green Berets. But they furnished no documentation.

There were contentions that Abrams became furious over the slaying and was using his full authority it prosecuting the case.

Although the case was a hot potato for the Nixon administration, the Pentagon had generally maintained a hands off policy, leaving legal disposition with the Army in Vietnam to avoid short circuiting the UMF process.

Laird revealed that at one point he had directly intervened to see that the accused men were freed from what amounted to solitary confinement in small, individual cells, and given some amount of freedom as "institution parolees" pending their trials, at the Army base at Long Binh, South Vietnam.

There had been other criticism from official quarters about the Army's handling of the legal details. Although the South Vietnamese agent was slain in mid-July, the accused men were not informed of the charges against them for several days after being arrested.

On Sept. 18, Maj. Gen. G. L. Mabry Jr., the convening authority, directed general court martial on charges of murder and conspiracy to commit murder against Col. Rheault, Capt. Marasco, Maj. Middleton, and Maj. David Crew, Capt. Leland J. Brumley and Capt. Budge E. Williams.

Charges against two others, CWO Edward M. Boyle, and Sgt. 1C Alvin L. Smith, Jr., were ordered held in abeyance pending their trials.

Mabry had specified that the accused men would not face the death penalty, which he had authority to do.

There was no immediate word on where the Green Berets will be assigned next. Col. Rheault, strictly speaking, is the only career special forces man in the group, with the others having backgrounds in intelligence work, plus qualifying training in special forces operations.

In response to reporters' questions at the White House, press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said President Nixon did not have anything to do with the dropping of charges against the eight Green Berets.

Moratorium Gains Support in Nation

UMass Faculty Form Group To Add to Campus Participation

A group of concerned faculty members, called Faculty for the Vietnam Moratorium, is being formed at UMass, and its purpose is to foster faculty participation in the October 15 Vietnam Moratorium and to ask that the University administration cancel all classes on that day.

As its first action, a letter has been sent to all members of the University faculty.

The letter solicits faculty support for a proposed full-page advertisement in next week's COLLEGIAN, where the names of the supporters will be listed under the declaration, "WE FACULTY MEMBERS WILL WORK FOR PEACE ON OCTOBER 15."

The letter is signed by Wolfgang Paulson, Head of the Department of Germanic Languages and Literatures; Wolfgang Fleischmann, Chairman of the Program in Comparative Literature; Dean A. Allen, Principal Psychologist, University Health Services; Professors Gerard Braunthal and William Connolly of the Government department; Professors Everett Emerson and John R. A Different View

WASHINGTON (AP) - Senate Republican leaders appealed Monday for a 60-day moratorium on criticism of President Nixon's Vietnam policy.

They said Nixon needs time and "a common front" in the effort to negotiate a peace settlement.

But the prospect signaled by congressional critics of current policy is for escalating pressure, not a letup, in demands for American withdrawal. And outside Congress plans already are far advanced for massive demonstrations on and off college campuses.

King Council Schedules Meeting; Four Senators Join Movement

By MARK SILVERMAN
News Editor

The Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council will hold a teach-in Thursday night at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker auditorium, to discuss plans for the October 15 War Moratorium.

Meanwhile, national leaders of the movement in Washington are hailing "an amazing ground swell of support from all over."

Spokesmen for the national committee to end the war, Sam Bowen and David Hawk, say that a group of congressmen support the movement, and plan to ask Congress to observe the moratorium.

Included in this group are Senators Edward M. Kennedy, Edmund S. Muskie, Clairborne Fell, and Congressman Edward P. Bolan.

At UMass, moratorium plans are in the process of being formalized by the King Council, which is also sponsoring a Student Union information table on the moratorium.

At the Thursday night meeting, the rationale for the Peace Action Day will be discussed. Speakers for the night include Council Executive Secretary Gil Salk, and representatives from area colleges.

The program according to Council spokesmen, is designed to give interested persons a clear view of the planned campus activities, as well as national programs scheduled.

Discussion will also focus on Nixon Administration attitudes, and the meaning of the recently announced cutbacks. One roadblock which UMass planners have encountered, King Council spokesmen report, is the Faculty Senate's unwillingness to support a general course cancellation on the 15th.

The Student Senate is scheduled to vote on moratorium support this week.

In a Washington press conference last week, Brown and Hawk explained, "We intend to build a movement which will make it imperative that the U.S. withdraw from Vietnam."

President Nixon's only public comment on the moratorium has been, "under no circumstances will I be affected by it at all."

And this reaction, Brown says, is "deeply disturbing."

He criticized Nixon's attitude for reflecting "the same kind of isolation from public opinion as former President Johnson's."

An important aspect of Brown's plans for the movement is a broadly based front of support from politicians and businessmen.

Last May, the Chicago City Council passed an anti-war resolution, and this is presently being circulated by moratorium workers at College campuses.

Students are being urged to go into communities, to canvass door to door, to circulate petitions, and to picket draft boards.

Quad Committee Moves

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Staff Reporter

A delegation of students and residence personnel will meet Wednesday at 2:30 with Asst. Treasurer Brand to discuss the conditions, and the reasons behind the conditions in the Quad. The student group will include the Northeast Area Congress Officers and the President of each dorm within the Quad.

Expected to be on the agenda is the presentation of the 16 page list of missing and needed furniture and facilities, including general maintenance requirements and a petition signed by Quad residents.

The students have many questions as to how the dorms are financed and exactly why the dorms have been allowed to deteriorate to their present state. They are expected to ask to "open the books".

The committee of area presidents and residence personnel had organized a "fact-finding" group, which reported to the committee at the Monday night meeting.

They had met with Mr. Norton of the Physical Plant, and Mr. Marren, in charge of maintenance in the area. The common complaint was lack of funds and workers. Mr. Marren said he had a three month backlog on repair work. Both pointed ultimate responsibility for any improvements to the Treasurer's Office.

Humphrey Scores Nixon Policies

BOSTON (AP) - Professor Hubert H. Humphrey graded the Nixon administration Monday as if it were a balky pupil, saying it was doing "very poorly" and was in danger of flunking the course.

"Its term paper is overdue. Its day-by-day recitations are poor. Its research is faulty. It hasn't had its final exams yet, but its close to failure," said the former Vice-President, whose loss to Nixon in the last presidential election sent him into the teaching ranks in Minnesota.

At an airport news conference endorsing the congressional candidacy of state Rep. Michael J. Harrington, D-Salem, Humphrey said Nixon has done "poorly-very poorly" since taking over in January.

"It has forgotten the people it said it would remember," Humphrey said the Nixon administration's campaign promises on behalf of the "forgotten American,"

"The Nixon administration is very long on announcements and pronouncements," he said. Humphrey listed the administration's failures as in inflation, high interest rates, "less than enthusiastic response" to problems of the poor.

Autopsy Hassle Continues

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. (AP) - A judge took under advisement Monday the latest motion by the parents of Mary Jo Kopechne to block an autopsy on their daughter.

Judge Bernard C. Brominski of Common Pleas Court also reserved decision on a separate motion by the Kopechnes to delay any hearing on the petition of Dist. Atty. Edmund Dinis of New Bedford, Mass., for an autopsy until Dinis completes his scheduled inquest into the young woman's death.

Miss Kopechne, 28, died July 18 when a car driven by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., plunged off a narrow bridge into a tidal pond on Chappaquiddick Island, off the Massachusetts coast.

There was no indication when the judge would rule on the dismissal motion, he promised a decision "forthwith," possibly by the end of the week, on the motion for the hearing delay.

The Kopechnes moved to dismiss it Aug. 25, but Brominski turned that motion down on Sept. 3.

Dinis filed his petition Aug. 14 and amended it Sept 19, reporting his investigators only learned of the alleged presence of blood in Miss Kopechne's mouth and nose and on her clothing after she had been buried.

The Kopechnes, sitting behind their lawyers in the courtroom, leaned forward as Armand Fernandes Jr., Dinis assistant, insisted: "The parents must yield to the public interest."

Dinis was not in the courtroom. "It is very difficult to argue with a bereaved parent," Fernandes said. "We are sympathetic, but their motions are dilatory.

Driver Takes Leave, Joins Ford Foundation

Dr. Edwin D. Driver, professor of sociology, has taken leave from the University for the 1969-70 academic year to join the International Division of The Ford Foundation.

Dr. Driver will be engaged in a project which concerns research by the several social sciences with respect to population policy. In addition to surveying the literature and course offerings on population policy, he will visit major universities in the United States.

During the summer of 1968, Prof. Driver and two colleagues - Prof. Reuben Hill of the University of Minnesota and Prof. Moni Nag of Columbia University, undertook a similar survey for the Ford Foundation in India. This resulted in a voluminous report titled "Needed Social Science Research on Population and Family Planning." Since then and until his present appointment he has been a part-time consultant to the foundation's Population Office in New York.

From 1963 to 1965, Dr. Driver and Dr. Wendell King, formerly of the University of Massachusetts, were supported by the foundation in their research and seminars which culminated in their report, "The Overseas Professional."

Dr. Driver is now completing two books, "The Sociology and Anthropology of Mental Illness," first published in 1965 by the University of Massachusetts Press, is not revised and is scheduled for publication early in 1970. The other book is also scheduled for 1970 and is tentatively titled "The Sociology of Leadership in India." Materials for this work were gathered while Dr. Driver was at Madras University in 1965-66 as Fulbright professor and director of the Social Science Center. At Madras University, he was the first occupant of the chair in sociology.

DRIVER

Dr. Driver has been a member of the faculty at the University since 1948. In addition, he has been visiting professor or lecturer at Smith College, San Fernando Valley State College, University of Minnesota, University of Hawaii, and University of Wisconsin. In the summer of 1969 he was invited to Stanford University as visiting professor.

Draft Counseling Resumes

The Valley Peace Center announces the resumption of its draft counseling program in Southwest, at Coolidge Lobby this evening from 6:30-8:00 p.m. Last year some 500 students availed themselves of this service which is sanctioned and supported also by the United Christian Foundation and the Southwest Master's Office.

The main purpose of the program is to furnish students with counseling concerning their questions about the draft. Trained draft counselors from the Valley Peace Center are on hand each Tuesday night to meet in private with individuals. Any and all questions are welcomed, from resistance and conscientious objection to the desire to sign up. Most questions concern draft board procedures and student status

Although President Nixon is pushing for draft reform and has reduced the November and December quotas, the January quota is 31,000. The percentage of college students being drafted during and after college remains high.

Every Tuesday night the draft counseling program will be held in Coolidge Lobby 6:30-8:00 p.m.

North Shore Race Seen Nixon Test

BOSTON (AP) - The Nixon administration's policies come in for a test at the polls Tuesday when voters in Massachusetts' 6th Congressional district choose between a liberal Democrat and a down-the-line supporter of the Nixon program.

The race to succeed the late U.S. Rep. William H. Bates, R-Mass., was rated a toss-up between two state legislators - Rep. Michael J. Harrington, 33, and Sen. William L. Saltonstall, the 42-year-old son of Massachusetts' "Mr. Republican," former U.S. Sen. Leverett Saltonstall.

The Democrats envision taking the seat for the first time since 1875, when the district was laid out differently. Bates and his father before him held the seat for 33 years.

Harrington, who advocates stepped-up withdrawal of American troops from Vietnam and Monday endorsed "in principle" an Oct. 15 moratorium for Congress over the war, polled 2,000 more votes than Saltonstall in the Aug. 26 primary.

But Saltonstall was installed as the early favorite on the basis of his name, which scared off both primary and final election opposition in two terms in the state Senate.

Democrats have the edge in registration, while Harrington hopes to make inroads in the large block of independent votes. The district was solidly for the Democrats in the last presidential election.

The district extends north of Boston and has 233,000 registered voters: 76,000 Democrats, 66,000 Republicans, and 91,000 independents.

Both candidates were educated at Harvard and both come from families whose political reputations are familiar locally, but they differ sharply on virtually every issue.

Harrington opposes the anti-ballistic missile, wants to cut military spending, advocates sweeping tax reforms, and promises to spur Congress; Saltonstall voted "present" when the state senate memorialized Congress to drop the ABM, cautions against curbing military spending; endorses Nixon's tax plans, and promises to be a "service-oriented" congressman like Bates.

Well Done

A Coed dorm at UMass is almost a reality.

The recent approval by the board of trustees of students' desire to establish a coed dorm in Greenough is another example of student power at its best. An idea which some called foolish last spring is now a reality.

While we applaud the trustees' action last week, most of the credit belongs to the students of Greenough, and other Central Area dorms, who initiated the proposal. Kevin Moore, Rick Verrochi, Jack LaReau and Pam Pepper carried the idea to its ultimate victory.

Also deserving praise is Provost Oswald Tippo, who after studying the proposal carefully and checking the progress of coed dorms at other universities, threw his support to the plan and won over some trustees' votes.

The work isn't over yet. There is still much planning to be done before girls move into Greenough next semester. However, no matter what happens in January, we can all take pride in what the students from Greenough accomplished.

Moratorium Cop -Out

Last Thursday the Faculty Senate shot down the proposed October 15 moratorium to end the Vietnam War. It's true that they issued a statement supporting the right of students to cut classes and participate. And, I suppose that also includes any faculty member who feels strong enough commitment. But if the Senate now feels that they have discharged their duties, they are mistaken. Ducking the issue will not be so simple.

First, the reasoning for not voting to cancel classes is weak. Evidently most were afraid that a positive vote would politicize the university. This fear comes a little late since the university is already politicized. Faculty members are engaged in Government supported research, ROTC is an official part of the academic structure, and, of course, the State holds the purse strings. Though the Senate may wish to return to the old "ivory tower" concept of the university it is impossible, and really not desirable.

It must also be remembered that the Faculty Senate is a democratically elected body, and as such represents the entire faculty. On other issues they don't seem to be bothered with the varying views that may exist in the faculty, let alone the entire community. Yet, for this one issue, in their short, equivocal statement they said, "we cannot commit a University community representing a multiplicity of views to one position on the Vietnam War..." This statement is amazing since their vote on the issue, in no way can be construed as a commitment by the entire community and they know it. The Student Senate will also vote on this issue, and I'm sure their vote will not be considered a commitment of the entire community. And then there is the small matter of the army at the fort. Now the decision that comes out of that building, unfortunately will be considered the position of the entire community, unless we all make a clear statement of our position.

This leads to the final point. For more than a week students have been voting on the moratorium. Dean Shapiro, head of Arts and Sciences stated publicly that the Faculty Senate has the means to poll every faculty member as to his stand on the issue. Since the Senate has avoided its responsibility, they should at least implement this poll. But time is running out, and if any action is to be taken it must be done immediately. This is too important an issue to push aside so irresponsibly.

Rebuke

Wednesday's Collegian included a letter publicly rebuking Lowell Fitch for what seemed to be a personal omission on his part of Kenneth Mosakowski's senior picture from the senior lineup of the 1969 INDEX. I do not intend to analyze this bone as it is one Mr. Mosakowski can pick on his own - or combined with others of his viewpoint - with Mr. Fitch. I do not know enough about this problem to extol my opinion of either Skip Fitch's action and his reasons or Mr. Mosakowski's right to question the same.

However, I do intend to give my opinion of Mr. Mosakowski's implications that the INDEX represented - and does represent today - the University's "sterility; its artificiality; its public-relations phoniness; its pompous, expensive meaninglessness."

I had the privilege --that's right: PRIVILEGE! -- to work on and be proudly associated with the 1969 issue of the INDEX. There are those who may depreciate the fact that working on the INDEX is a privilege, but to those who may, I heartily invite them to come and find out for their snide selves.

In working on the INDEX, discussing and accomplishing its goal of presenting a yearbook that each of us could look back over with pleasure and pride, appreciation, and a feeling of rapport with the students pictured, I experienced a sensation of unity with the great and the small people, the big shots and the obscure faces of UMass that each of us passes every day. We all gripe about the troubles with the administration, faculty, housing, parking, construction -- even the same old hassles of classes, exams, the social system, getting ID's, the people who suddenly aren't there, or those who are and turn you off.

By portraying all of these as best we can, amateur journalists, some of whose only previous experience writing had been with term papers -- we have given life to several hundred pages of white paper.

In the 1969 INDEX, and hopefully in the 1970 issue, the staff has tried, successfully, I believe, to imprint on those pages in pictures, and even more in words, what it means and involves being a student here. I appreciate the privilege to be involved in such an adventure in publication. I hope some may join me. To the others, I only ask that you may enjoy and cherish the good, and tolerate the bad points in the INDEX. In the long run, to do so will probably be worthwhile.

Problems

Today I received a long letter from my sister who is attending college in Washington, D.C. which I would like to share with other students. Her college is having some problems which sound vaguely familiar. The school is located in the black district of Washington, and for years the students have been robbed and physically molested by black youths both on and off the campus. (Remember the trouble we had on the Hill last year?) The students have demanded more adequate lighting (Remember F Lot?) but there is no new money in the budget until 1971(Remember our Legislature?) The students are also complaining about their security department and called off a boycott of classes only after having a meeting with the school's president. At that meeting, the students voted to turn their campus into a fort - stone walls were to be built, a gate has already been ordered, a 24-hour guard will be posted, and a private detective agency has been added to the security force. The president was dismayed by the students' choice but he went along with it.

I am sending my sister all the ideas UMass students have thought up to solve our own similar problems (for example, student patrols on the Hill), but I still can't help worrying a little. My sister is a big girl and can take care of herself but she's no match for a knife-wielding punk. I invite all UMass students to share their ideas and suggestions on this problem with the students in Washington, D.C. If you have a constructive idea or suggestion, please contact me. Let's share what we've learned by solving our own problems.

Boob?

In reference to Tommy Walker's extremely biased letter about the Supreme's concert, we would like to know just who in heck Tommy Walker is. His name does not ring a bell when one thinks of capable critics, and his article certainly backs this up. I have heard no one but this BOOB degrade this concert.

The Supreme's are known world wide for their excellent showmanship and they certainly displayed just that at Saturday's concert.

We found your remarks about the Freshman Queen innane and petty and uncalled for.

So, Tommy, please do us a favor. Stick to reviewing the band at the football game at Homecoming. Leave the "Greats" to greats.

In response to Miss Tina Swift's editorial in September 22nd's Collegian, I feel I must try to rebut some of the arguments offered by Miss Swift in defense of the Free University City.

I agree that sensitivity can be developed in almost any environment; however some environments are more conducive to the development of that sensitivity. How many times has the average student, unable to study in a dorm, run to the library or other secluded place to study? One could stick it out in that dorm, but why should he? Why be sensitive to a hostile environment; it only causes pain.

The reason why the force-feeding of education cannot continue is due to many problems that people are running into in this process. The main reason force-feeding cannot continue is the element of time. Why should I be compelled to sit through dry lectures of material that I will learn for an exam and then forget? For the sake of requirements? I could be learning something that I would really like to know with that time. The educational system, as it now stands, supposes that I will not learn if not cramming for an exam. People will no longer accept the fact that what the whole society, through its educational system, says the college graduate must study (not necessarily learn) in college will make the well-rounded person that it is supposed to.

Competition is detrimental to the education of the individual. If the class is graded on the curve, as most are, this means that only a certain amount of the class can get "A"s. If a guy next to me will get an A if I help him on a point, then that reduces my chance of getting one. And we all know how important grades are.

The Alienation problem is a very real one. Not all students have the ability to overcome this problem as Miss Swift suggests. The University also thinks this way, or it wouldn't have a counciling center or the concept of residential colleges.

The last point that Miss Swift makes the impression on me that she is misinformed. She implies that Free University City is trying to work outside of the channels. We have always worked through proper channels, and we feel that this is a very valid and correct way to renovate this university.

Internal?

With the flourish of enthusiasm that has arisen among many students as a result of the continuing growth of the free university, attempts to make meaningful changes within the structure of the established university have been overshadowed. Many of the needed changes concern requirements, particularly those in the college of arts and sciences. The campus attitude seems to be: "If you're up tight about problems created by the university, join the free university."

One of the complaints that students involved with the construction of the city had mentioned was that "university education operates under an antiquated course requirement system which leaves students with little choice of selection in half of their courses." Administrators realize that requirements are a real obstacle but little can be accomplished unless students continue with previous efforts to eliminate or restructure subjects manditory in the college of arts and sciences, as well as attempt to create an ideal microcosm such as free university. Now that the innovators of the project have enlightened everyone to one of the major problems which exists, let's continue the struggle from within. It's been going on for a long time but the college of arts and sciences has been functioning in "the liberal arts tradition" much longer -- since 1867.

It is improbable that all students who have been discontented with the requirements of the college are now appeased by the revision in the language requirement. It is unquestionably a step toward liberation. However, it has been the only recent significant change, aside from the physical education requirement being shortened. Nothing has been done or is likely to be done concerning the mathematics and science requirement. It remains as before, a grueling and tedious three years work. Granted, some departments have designed introductory courses which are designed for non-science majors. Such courses are invaluable assets. Now all that is needed are courses which will illustrate how to become motivated in required courses. For example, why doesn't someone initiate a course for English majors entitled "How to stimulate interest in Mathematics." Not very likely. Let's renew our efforts to eliminate or at least alter more of the stifling arts and science requirements, and keep the battle internal as well as external.

Northampton's World: A Bleak Continium

By MARGARET ANDREWS
Staff Reporter

The woman waits, slumped in a chair against the wall of a ward in Northampton State Hospital. It's Wednesday night and although she is tired and would rather be asleep, the nurse has told her that she must stay up because the student volunteers will be arriving. Like most of the 40 other women who are also sitting and waiting, she looks 10 years older than she really is. Aged by institutionalization in ways that nobody from the outside can understand, her features are as nondescript as her faded dress. She has been in the state hospital 10 years.

The building is as dismal as her future. Pink does not conceal the despair painted on the walls. Green curtains do not cover the bars on the windows. The windows are open but the atmosphere inside is stifling.

The television is talking from somewhere but, all too-familiar with her surroundings, the woman has no interest.

At seven o'clock the door is unlocked from the outside and the students walk in. Some of the women rise from their chairs to meet them but she does not stand. She looks down when the new volunteers walk past. She feels like an object on display; an animal at the zoo.

At the opposite end of the rectangular ward a group of students and patients start a game of catch with a bean bag. Someone asks the woman if she wants to play. She does not reply and, when the person has gone, she moves to another chair, further inside herself.

"This place is enough to drive ya crazy," someone says, to no one in particular.

"I'm going home this weekend," another patient tells a student. They both know what a lie it is.

In another part of the room, two of the women swear at each other, beginning a fight. One of the two nurses on duty separates them.

A new volunteer bends down to ask a patient, "What's your name?" Without looking up, the woman replies, "They call me shit." . . .

The woman sits in her chair and hears the noise around her but does not acknowledge the outer world until a girl volunteer stops and stands beside the chair. The woman remembers the girl but doesn't return her smile or answer her questions. The woman remembers the books with the funny pictures that the girl showed her last week. But she remains motionless. The student looks around the ward as if she is leaving. Something stirs inside the woman. Reaching up, she touches the hand of a friend.

This is the kind of world any student will enter as a Northampton Volunteer. Orientation begins Wednesday. The bus leaves at 6:30 p.m. from Hasbrouck Lab and Patterson in SW. For those who have any questions, any of the following Volunteers' officers may be called: Walter Mullin, President; Stephanie Rosen, vice-president; Nancy Viall, secretary; Peter Logan, treasurer; Margaret Andrews, publicity.

Dubcek Still Has Chance

PRAGUE(AP) - Although purged from Czechoslovakia's top leadership, Alexander Dubcek is not a "lost person" and still has great opportunity if he heeds criticism and acknowledges shortcomings, a Communist party spokesman declared Monday.

But another party official disclosed that the man who tried to liberalize communism in Czechoslovakia in 1968 stood his ground at a party meeting last week that resulted in his ouster from the ruling Presidium and the presidency of the National Assembly.

Lubomir Strougal, deputy chief of the Communist party, said in a radio broadcast Dubcek refused to admit errors in the manner in which the party had expected.

Strougal charged Dubcek failed to answer some of the criticism directed at him and gave unsatisfactory or "very unself-critical" replies to other points.

Strougal said Dubcek "failed to understand the true, comradely efforts of our friends in the Socialist countries as an endeavor to solve matters we did not solve ourselves. . .Comrade Dubcek did not admit that he himself had caused problems."

WMUA Seeks to Interest Students

By BRUCE GLAZER
Staff Reporter

WMUA, the student owned and operated educational radio station at the University, hopes to please all student interests this year by following what Station Manager Dick Stadlen calls a "contemporary" format.

Stadlen said that WMUA's aim is to have a format with "the idea of variety to give them (the students) something they can't get in commercial radio." The 10-watt FM outlet will concentrate on education which will involve the college-age community; and also will play all types of contemporary music. This attempt is unique in college radio, Stadlen claimed.

For special programming, WMUA expects to obtain RKO General's "History of Rock 'n' Roll," a 48-hour history of the industry, featuring interviews with the stars who have been significant in the growing up of the r'n' r scene, as well as a chronological history of rock music, following it from the early 1950's to the late '60's. Should WMUA obtain this special, it will become the only station outside of the "top 10" market to do so, Stadlen said.

The News Department, Stadlen said, will emphasize news and issues relevant to the University and all college-age students, including special programming for important lectures and guest speakers, as well as any other event on or off campus that WMUA considers important to the student body. This includes all Redmen football and basketball games and any other sports event that would interest the students (such as last year's UMass - M.I.T. lacrosse game for the New England Championship).

Talk programs are in the offering this year also. Every Monday-Thursday night, from 10 to 11, is reserved for a different kind of talk show, including Ken Mosakowski and Dean of Students, William Field, returning from last year to their respective Monday and Tuesday night shows.

Should WMUA's request to the Federal Communications Commission for an increase in power to 1000 watts be approved, then 250,000 listeners will be within the "contemporary sound" of WMUA.

Inconsistent Offense Plagues Redmen

By PETER PASCARELLI
Sports Editor

They were singing to Vic Fusia Saturday at Alumni Stadium, but it wasn't praises. "They" were a small but vocal group of grandstand experts, who were singing with great imagination "Goodbye Victor" to a coach who has the best winning percentage among Massachusetts football coaches.

Fusia commented on his serenade, "They could have been more continental and sang Arrivideci instead of goodbye. Maybe at that stage of the game, if I was in the stands, I would have been booing me. But they pay their way in and I guess if that's what they pay for, they can do it."

The coach was more upset about an inconsistent offense that plagued the Redmen all day. "We were unable to sustain a drive all day," said Fusia. "We were making some serious mistakes, which cost us numerous good chances. But they are mistakes we should correct."

Defensively, UMass was effective at times, but could not stop a quarterback option run to perfection by Buffalo's Mick Murtha.

But, as Fusia reminded, "Buffalo is a very fine football team, probably one of the top teams we will play. They are a seasoned team, with excellent personnel. And their quarterback Murtha is one of the best we will face this year. You have to give them credit for an excellent performance."

Fusia's confidence in the Redmen is bolstered by the fact there have been few injuries and also that he believes the team is a good one. "We'll make mistakes, but this team will turn out pretty well, a team that will beat a few people. Don't sell them short."

The UMass baseball team was honored in Boston last Friday, by the Bosox Club, an organization made up of prominent Boston businessmen who promote interest in baseball, from the Red Sox down to little league.

Coach Dick Bergqust and co-captain Joe DiSarcina received a trophy honoring the Redmen as the top collegiate team in New England. Toastmaster Ken Coleman made the presentation along with Boston College coach Ed Pellegrini.

The club in addition honored Red Sox pitcher Lee Stange as Red Sox 'Man of the Year' for his contribution to the team and his cooperation with all aspects of baseball.

Braves Clinch Tie . . .

By ED SHEARER
Associated Press Sports Writer

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) - The Atlanta Braves will call on their ace pitcher, knuckleballer Phil Niekro, to wrap up the National League West Division championship Tuesday night when Cincinnati arrives for the final two regular season games.

The Braves clinched a tie for the title Sunday with a 4-2 triumph over San Diego, reducing the magic number to one. Preston Gomez, manager of the Padres, says it will take "a miracle for the Braves to lose."

San Francisco clings to its fading pennant hopes but must sweep a three-game series from San Diego combined with two Atlanta defeats in order to tie the Braves and force a one-game playoff in Atlanta Friday.

Any Atlanta victory or San Francisco defeat will send the Braves against the New York Mets, East Division winners, for the National League pennant. The championship playoff series, a best-of-five affair, would begin in Atlanta Saturday and switch to New York Monday.

Niekro, 22-13, has beaten the Reds five times without a defeat this season. The Braves have won nine in a row, 16 of their last 19. They posted a 19-6 September record.

"It will take a miracle for the Braves to lose the pennant now," said Gomez.

"It might take another miracle for the Mets to beat them," Gomez said. "There is too much power, too much hitting through the whole lineup. That will make the difference against the Mets."

However New York won eight of the 12 regular season meetings with the Braves.

Once again Buffalo quarterback MICK MURTHA runs the option play to perfection as he unloads the ball just as he is about to be hit by Redman PAUL TONER (86). (MDC photo by Ken Emery)

But Giants Try

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - The San Francisco Giants "still are not out of it," Manager Clyde King declared Monday.

The National League West's title race will go into a playoff only if the Atlanta Braves lose their two remaining games to Cincinnati and if the Giants sweep their final three over San Diego.

"It's not impossible for Atlanta to lose its two to Cincinnati," said King.

"And our guys sure don't think we're out of it. That's most important of all."

King says he will send Gaylord Perry, 18-14 and 2-1 winner over Los Angeles last Saturday, against the Padres Tuesday night at Candlestick. He will pitch southpaw Mike McCormick Wednesday and finish with Juan Marichal, 21-11, Thursday.

"If we can just get into the playoff, we'll make it," declared Larry Jansen, Giant pitching coach and the team's game saver in the Giants' historic 5-4 pennant playoff win over the Dodgers in 1951. Bobby Thompson's three-run ninth inning homer won for the Giants after Jansen stopped the Dodgers in their ninth.

"We haven't lost a playoff yet," said Larry. "Don't forget we beat the Dodgers again in 1962."

That year, the Giants scored four runs in the eighth inning to win the pennant, 6-4, with Billy Pierce shutting out the Dodgers in the ninth.

Willie McCovey broke out of a 2 for 22 slump Sunday with his 45th homer as San Francisco beat Los Angeles 8-1 behind Marichal.

Greg Landry saw action Saturday against the New York Giants, completing two of three passes and driving his Lions offense to the Giant 20 yard line before time ran out in the game.

Boston College is conceded to be the power of New England football, but don't sell short Boston University who has swept to two straight lopsided victories. The Terriers meet Harvard this week in a big Greater Boston clash.

Major Hoople of the world famous Springfield Union should soak his head in dining commons soup. He picked the UMass game last week twice, once with the Redmen winning and once with them losing to assure himself of a success. Even with that, his average stunk. Metawampe who had a rousing .760 average this week, should challenge him, but Hoople would back down.

The SDS Rift
No Present Split at UMass

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

"There has always been a split between leadership and membership, a lack of communication between the national office and the campus." This statement by Stanley Finehirsh served as the starting point last night for a four member panel discussion of the recently publicized split within the Students for Democratic Society. The program was sponsored by a campus organization known as SMILE.

SMILE sponsored the panel discussion program because it felt the need for a clarification handled by an outside group. Members of the panel included Sidney Finehirsh, UMass graudate student and former New England SDS campus traveler, Bart Kaplan UMass graduate teaching assistant in English and supporter of the Revolutionary Youth Movement I, Norm Bender, supporter of the Worker-Student Alliance, and Steve Moore representing the radical black analysis of the split.

The center of discussion involved actions of SDS national convention last June which included the establishment of rival headquarters for the Worker-Student Alliance (WSA) and the Revolutionary Youth Movement (RYMI) with each group claiming to be the true SDS.

Finehursh was the first to speak out with a brief history of SDS and a general statement on the split. He pointed out that there has been a dichotomy between members of the national office and those of the campus, neither group caring or interested in the other's actions. Finehirsh pointed out locally, however, that "Presently at UMass there has not been a split and I hope there will not be."

Kaplan then defended and explained his position regarding the Youth Revolutionary Movement I, calling it "basically activist." He declared that the issues at hand are ones not of a political ideology but rather a "life-death struggle."

The University teaching assistant rejected education as a reform technique because "no theory can produce the same results as action." There must exists the "shock of encountering brutality of human life."

Kaplan then cited the "Weathermen" group which is presently organizing for street violence in Chicago later this month.

Finehirsh then criticized Kaplan's position saying that violence and activism are "tactics doomed to failure" and a form of "committing a Kamikazee attack on the power structure." He said that these actions would make it impossible for the Left to operate as it would provide the Nixon Administration with reasons for "suppression."

Finehirsh also spoke on the Worker-Student Alliance by saying that it had made a valuable contribution to the New Left by "forcing evaluation" upon the group, but brought Marxist thought to 20th century American practice.

WSA must consist of three areas according to Norm Bender - pro working class and students, anti-racist and imperialist, and must "fight and defeat all forms of anti-communism." And SDS should ally all three areas continued Bender.

The Worker-Student Alliance is important and workers because it "brings both groups together as an alliance," said Bender. He

Harrington Victor Over Saltonstall

BOSTON (AP) - Democrat Michael J. Harrington won a special congressional election yesterday defeating Republican William L. Saltonstall.

With 176 of 186 precincts reporting, Harrington led Saltonstall by a vote of 67,225 to 59,764.

The voters' decision sends to Washington a liberal who is a strong opponent of the Vietnam war and who is against many of the Nixon administration's domestic programs.

The defeat of Saltonstall, son of retired U.S. Sen. Leverett Saltonstall, was a blow to the administration. Saltonstall is a strong Nixon backer, and supported the President's Vietnam policy and antiballistic missile program.

Voters responded slightly better than expected in the special election to fill the vacant 6th Congressional district seat that the GOP had held for 93 years.

The seat formerly was held by the late U.S. Rep. William H. Bates, R-Mass., who succeeded his father after the latter died in a 1938 plane crash. The two held the seat for 33 years.

Saltonstall's family is one of the oldest in Massachusetts, a state with many old families. The drawing power of the name, made famous most recently by the candidate's father, retired U.S. Sen. Leverett Saltonstall, scared off both primary and final election opposition for young Saltonstall in two terms as State Senator.

Harrington also had family name strength going for him. His cousin and campaign manager was Kevin B. Harrington, majority leader of the state Senate and the leading political figure in Salem.

The candidate's late father, Joseph, served as a mayor of Salem, state senator, and judge.

The two candidates, both products of Harvard and of Harvard graduate schools - Harrington in law and Saltonstall in business - presented sharply contrasting views on most major issues.

BU Imposes Ban on SDS After Ruckus

The Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) will be banned from the campus of Boston University until further notice, a university spokesman said Monday.

A BU public information officer said that Staton Curtis, Dean of student affairs, plans to remove university recognition from the radical political group and thus deny it use of campus facilities.

The public information officer said Curtis made the decision "unilaterally" but could not say whether it would be subject to further review.

He said the dean made up his mind after SDS used a B.U. auditorium for a meeting last Friday night during which furniture was broken and one youth was beaten.

Dr. Ryan Drum Returns To Help "Free City"

By NEAL NOVACK
Senior Reporter

Dr. Ryan Drum, former faculty member of the Botany Department at UMass, has made a special visit to the University to seek out support and to interest students in Free University City.

Dr. Drum, who is presently teaching at UCLA in Los Angeles, became interested in Free University City upon reading about the project in the California newspapers.

He is scheduled to meet with Free University representatives this evening to decide on a program of events to be held until Monday when Dr. Drum will return to UCLA. The schedule will appear in Thursday's Collegian. Dr. Drum will spend time with students in discussing the objectives of Free University City and other relevant issues concerning University life.

This discussion with students by Dr. Drum is planned to give impetus to an important transitional approach to be attempted by Free University City. Shifting emphasis from the present geodesic dome structures at Southwest, Tim Ney, spokesman for Free University City, said that, "We want to go out into the campus and spend most of our energy talking to the students."

As part of this effort to increase student communications and to be consistant with their belief that the University should not remain apolitical, Free University City will actively participate in the National moratorium on October 15 to end the war in Vietnam. Participation will be in the form of discussions on chemical-biological warfare and American militarism.

DR. RYAN DRUM

The shift away from the geodesic domes is the result of several problems confronting the project. Wind damage and vandalism have deterred the construction of the original number of proposed domes. Having the physical structure down at Southwest and concentrating operations around that part of campus has limited student awareness and communications with the rest of the University.

Expressing the community's desire to be a "model university," Ney said that "We want to poll and interview people as to how we should change or improve our present model." The fact that the

Bentley to Observe Vietnam Moratorium

Bentley College will cancel classes Oct. 15 so its students and faculty may observe a day-long appeal for an end to the Vietnam war.

All Americans, regardless of their personal political views, desire a speedy conclusion to the war in Vietnam, Morrison said.

The cancellation of classes at Bentley College should be seen as an indication of our concern and to allow faculty and students to participate in a meaningful manner in this nationwide observance," he said.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

WASHINGTON (AP) - A Senate witness accused the Army Tuesday of muzzling a probe into the rigging of slot machines at U. S. servicemen's clubs because of fear the facts might implicate its top NCO and embarrass a former chief of staff.

CHICAGO (AP) - Vice President Spiro T. Agnew said Tuesday that operation of military systems in space "to enhance the national defense" must be one of the objectives of the country's future space programs.

This would assure that 'there will be no blind reliance on good faith," he said in a speech to the Executives' Club of Chicago.

A limited military presence in space is important to national defense and should prove an invaluable force for peace in this world and beyond," he said.

Agnew, as chairman of the National Aeronautics and Space Council headed President Nixon's Space Task Group to study directions the space program should take.

TOKYO (AP) - Premier Chou En-lai of Communist China said Tuesday his country is developing nuclear weapons only for defense purposes and "would never commit aggression against others." He spoke at a reception on the eve of Communist China's 20th anniversary.

WASHINGTON (AP) - After 17 years on the launching pad, pay television entered the final countdown Tuesday for a December launching - unless Congress decides to call the whole thing off.

The U. S. Court of Appeals, in a crucial decision, upheld the authority of the Federal Communications Commission to permit television broadcasts that can be received in the home only upon payment of a fee.

The FCC rules are already in effect and the commission has said it would start authorizing pay-TV operations 60 days after a court decision, unless Congress intervenes.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) -- A raid on the apartment of a Brown University student Tuesday resulted in one of the largest drug seizures on record, police reported.

Kenneth Stutz, 21, of Los Angeles, was arrested, police said, after they found in his apartment about 30 pounds of marijuana, refined and in block form, a pound of hashish, about 50 bags of marijuana prepared for sale, about 1,000 tablets including "speed" and LSD, a quarter of a pound of opium, peyote caps, heroin and a substance thought to be cocaine in his apartment.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) - Secretary of State William P. Rogers held a final meeting with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko on the Mideast Tuesday night amid signs that any peace settlement will be a slow, difficult process.

Jordan's foreign minister, who saw Rogers shortly before the two big power foreign ministers met in Rogers' apartment, said "there can be no progress" toward a solution unless Israel promises complete withdrawal from Arab lands.

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) - A band of London hippie leaders landed on a 20-acre uninhabited island in Dublin Bay Tuesday and siad: "This is for us."

The hippies have paid $4,800 for an option on St. Patrick's Island where they hope to set up a settlement.

The hippies have eight weeks to raise the rest of the $48,000 asked by the island's owner, British real estate agent Herbert Marricott.

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) - The Rev. Ian Paisley led about 1,000 Protestant demonstrators in a march on Northern Ireland's Parliament Tuesday and threatened to close down Belfast with a general strike.

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) - In a detailed dress rehearsal of how they plan to work on the moon, the Apollo 12 astronauts Tuesday said they may walk more than a half mile from their landing craft to fetch a television camera attached to an unmanned Surveyor spacecraft now on the lunar surface. Astronauts Charles "Pete" Conrad and Alan L. Bean also revealed intentions to document rocks they collect in far greater detail than was done on Apollo 11.

Nixon Says VietPeace will Come If Americans at Home Stand Fast

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon said Tuesday that a fair peace will be achieved in Vietnam if Americans at home stand fast.

He joined Republican congressional leaders in applying the term "bugout" to demands that this country set a deadline for pulling out of Vietnam.

Sen. Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania the GOP Senate leader, said he used the phrase "bug out" to describe resolutions seeking a deadline for U. S. withdrawal, and Nixon accepted the term.

Scott said Nixon declared that if such legislation is approved, U.S. negotiators might as well be withdrawn from the Paris peace talks. With a guarantee of coming U. S. withdrawal, there would be nothing to discuss with the Communists, stated Scott.

In the Senate, Republicans took note of nationwide antiwar demonstrations planned for Oct. 15.

Declaring "I want no part of such an effort as this," Sen. William Saxbe, R-Ohio, said it would cut the ground out from under U.S. troops in Vietnam.

Sen. Robert P. Griffin of Michigan, the assistant GOP leader, called it a "misguided effort which can only have the effect of undercutting and undermining the President of the United States."

Scott told reporters that Americans who are demonstrating would do better to demonstrate "against the real adversary, which is the government of Hanoi and not the government at Washington."

In the House, a New York congressman urged Americans to wear a black ribbon as a sign of mourning until all American troops are withdrawn from Vietnam.

Rep. Edward I. Koch, D-N.Y., pointed to a six-inch black ribbon pinned to his lapel and said it was a "visible expression of my grief and outrage that every week more than 150 American men are killed in Vietnam."

Koch said the American people have been asked to be patient over Vietnam for too long:

"We are dealing with the lives of our best young men and there is no excuse for this unjustifiable delay," Koch said. "Therefore, I think this ribbon can also be worn as a sign of commitment to do all one can to change our government's tragic policy and thus end the unnecessary killing."

Asian Troop Withdrawal Is Increasing Momentum

SAIGON (AP) - The withdrawal of America n troops from Southeast Asia gained momentum Tuesday with the disclosure of plans to pull 6,000 soldiers and airmen out of Thailand and the departure of another 1,000 Marines from South Vietnam.

Announcement of the impending U. S. troop reduction in Thailand came in a joint communique from U. S. and Thai leaders in Bangkok. The reduction was much larger than had been expected. Earlier reports stated that 1,500 of the 49,000 American military personnel would be with drawn through negotiations initiated by the Thai government.

President Nixon has ordered 60,000 American troops withdrawn from South Vietnam by Dec. 15. More than 25,000 already have left.

The withdrawals will leave U. S. military strength at 484,000 in South Vietnam and 43,000 in Thailand.

pointed to the universities as "exploiting workers and students by paying them low wages," and playing them off against each other by paying them different rates.

WSA must also demand ROTC be dropped from all campuses added Bender because it 'trains people to work for the ruling class."

Steve Moore was the final panelist to speak and addressed his remarks totally to the issue of race. "The struggle of Black people is for survival. SDS has not addressed itself to his fact," he declared.

Moore accused SDS of having a "hang-up" by failing to make a "cultural analysis of what is happening to blacks."

"Intellectualism is not a substitute for change. Oppression is real and you must feel it in the gut," Moore told his audience.

Following the panel discussion questions were entertained from the audience and rebuttals made by various panel members.

community can serve as a model means that it can change in regards to what students want.

A major move in community change came last night when Free University City held an organizational and evaluational meeting in the More House Apartments. Study committees and information gathering committees were established. A construction committee was organized to decide whether new domes should be constructed or whether the idea of domes should be abandoned.

A committee on curriculum was set up to study utilization of teaching space and course structure. Interviews with faculty and students to be supplemented by questionnaires will be the concern of the public relations committee.

The objective of this group will be to find out how much students know about Free University City and what changes students feel should be made in Free University City. Coordination of press releases to help alleviate any misunderstandings about the community's objectives and actions was established.

To help keep the community, itself, aware of what's going on, and also to keep group cohesion, a coordinating committee was set up whereby a representative from each group within the community can meet and exchange information and ideas.

This committee has been formed mainly in anticipation of the development of specific groups within Free University City. The subgroups include those students who are mainly interested in political issues and in forming a student power base. Another group is concerned mostly with the building of a functioning community and group sensitivity. Academics is also a concern of many students in the community.

Designated also were people who will serve as sources of information in such areas as the procurement of faculty; the usage of state appropriations on campus and who is directing them; and the investigation of the possibilities for immediate changes in grading and course requirements. From this gathering of information will hopefully come specific recommendations for change at the University.

Nixon Administration Launches Big Assault on Marijuana Flow

WASHINGTON (CPS) - Operation intercept is the Nixon Administration's title for an all-out air, land and sea assault it is mounting to reduce the traffic of marijuana and other drugs between Mexico and the U.S.

The operation's arsenal includes German Shepherd dogs trained to react to the scent of marijuana, Navy patrol boats in the Gulf of Mexico, Air Force pursuit planes, a web of radar screens installed by the Federal Aviation Administration to detect illegal border crossings, and aircraft equipped with electronic sensing devices capable of sniffing poppy fields from the sky.

Massive numbers of customs inspectors -- the exact number is a government secret -- are posted at 27 U.S. airports in the southwest authorized to receive international flights, and at 31 places along the 2,500 mile Mexican border, where all motor vehicles and pedestrians are now stopped around the clock to undergo 2-3 minute searches for contraband.

The cause for this increased surveillance -- comprising the most intensive drug crackdown in U.S. history -- is a 55-page report released with President Nixon's blessings by the Special Presidential Task Force Relating to Narcotics, Marijuana and Dangerous Drugs.

The report, authored by 22 government personnel under the direction of Deputy Attorney General Richard Kleindienst, makes the following conclusions about the use of marijuana:

(1) It is psychologically addicting, tending to lead to the use of hard narcotics, because once the user has adopted the drug as a "crutch to cope with life stress," he is "substantially more susceptible to the acquisition of a larger crutch through the medium of a stronger drug."

(2) Its widespread use by the young constitutes a "significant mental health problem...since persistent use of an agent which serves to ward off reality during this critical period of development is likely to affect adversely the ability of the individual to cope with the demands of a complex society."

(3) Though medical evidence "neither proves nor disproves that marijuana is a cause of crime, criminal records establish clearly an accelerating rate of association between crime and the use of marijuana."

Finding that pot smoking was originally confined to "certain jazz musicians, artists and ghetto dwellers," the report says current evidence suggests that over five million people in the U.S. have tried grass at least once, and perhaps 60% of the students at some colleges and universities.

Since "more than 80% of the marijuana smoked in the United States, about 20% of the heroin used, and an undetermined volume of illegal amphetamines" enter the nation illicitly from Mexico, the report advocated a commission of resources toward restricting the drug flow from that Central American country as the panacea.

So at 5:30 p.m. EDT Sept 21, Operation Intercept was commenced, accompanied simultaneously by a joint announcement by Treasury Secretary David Kennedy and Attorney General John Mitchell that the project, termed the "grass curtain" by some reporters, would continue "for an indefinite period."

A week before, Mitchell's assistant Kleindienst, briefing the Washington press in advance, had remarked that the crackdown would remain in effect until marijuana becomes so scarce that the price per lid is driven beyond what most, especially teenagers, are able to afford.

Already, a dispute has grown over the value of the operation, now more than a week old. Although there have been few arrests or interceptions, U.S. officials claim this is indicative of success, not failure. The smugglers are simply too intimidated to try anything, the officials say, and the second pot crop of the year, which is ready to be harvested and marketed, will go to waste.

But drivers who have been kept waiting for up to six hours during border checks possess less regard for the enforcement activities, as do laborers who live in one country and work in the other, and businessmen in the 30 twin cities straddling the border. Retail business on the American side has dropped 50%.

The anti-drug drives appear to represent but another manifestation of the hard line Nixon has taken on what he refers to as the "drug abuse problem."

The administration's drug bill, proposed by the late Sen. Everett Dirksen and currently before the Senate Subcommittee to Investigate Juvenile Delinquency, lumps marijuana, heroin and LSD together, keeping the same penalty structure for a first offense of possessing any of the three: a minimum of 2 and maximum of 10 years in prison.

Anyone convicted of a first offense in selling the drugs will face 5-20 years in prison and a $25,000 fine under Nixon's bill. Anyone convicted of a second selling offense will face 10-40 years incarceration and a $50,000 fine. There would be no opportunity for probation or suspension of the sentence.

In addition, the bill contains a "no-knock" provision whereby police may enter a home without identifying themselves.

Meanwhile, the Nixon bill continues to be debated, even within his own administration. Dr. Stanley Yolles, director of the Health, Education and Welfare Department's National Institute of Mental Health, testified before a Senate sub-committee last week that the legal punishment given a convicted marijuana user is likely to do him more harm than the junk he smoked.

"I'm convinced that the social and psychological damage caused by incarceration is in many cases far greater harm to the individual and to society than was the offense itself."

Contradicting the Task Force report, Yolles placed the number of American who have used marijuana at between 8-12 million. Disputing the philosophy behind the hard line approach to drugs, he said federal drug laws should be aimed at rehabilitation, not repression.

Two Adams Study Coed Living Survey Resident's Opinions

Two houses in Southwest are surveying their residents to determine how many favor and oppose a co-ed living arrangement.

The survey, launched last week at a meeting of John Adams Middle and John Quincy Adams Middle, will also ask the 425 students which of several possible co-ed arrangements is most popular.

The co-ed proposal states: "We choose to set up a way of living that is more relevant to that way of life outside of college dorms. Reasons: a) present dorm life is unnatural; people should be able to live together in the same environment as they would anywhere else. b) co-ed dorm in order to promote a brother-sister relationship; we care about people, each other; want to know each other more closely and to help each other."

Many students and the heads of residence, Mr. Gerard and Mrs. Hardy, are for the idea. However, supporters are running into problems. Besides the fact that some students are against co-ed living, the students who are for it have different opinions on exactly how the dorms should be set up.

Some of them want alternating floors of men and women, some want alternating corridors - one side for each sex - and some of the students want alternating rooms.

Many students wish to go co-ed without waiting for any official approval. Up to the time of the meeting, nobody was sure about what action the University administration would take, if any, if the students went ahead with the plan.

Newspaper Editors Society To Hold Seminars at UMass

Applications are being accepted for a new class of New England Newspaper Fellows at UMass.

Co-sponsored by the New England Society of Newspaper Editors, the class will be entered in a three-part program over the next two years. More than 60 professional newsmen from all regional states have participated in the program in the past five years. Some have used the nine credits toward undergraduate and graduate degrees.

The class, about 15 men and women, will be on campus six weekends for 54 hours of seminar meetings between October and May while carrying on a reading program. They will return for a three week summer program and then conclude with another October-May campus-reading program, according to Bob Eddy, NESNE president and editor-publisher of the Hartford (Conn.) Courant.

"The mere bringing together in a seminar of new and experienced newspaper men and women from a variety of New England newspapers also contributes to a stimulating program," Eddy said.

The newspaper fellows will also attend seminars in connection with the convention of NESNE in Boston this December.

Applications are being accepted by Dr. Arthur B. Musgrave, program director, professor of English and journalistic studies and a former Nieman Fellow at Harvard. A second section for broadcast newsmen and women may be established if enough interest is shown by New England radio-television journalists.

Transcendental Meditation: Search for Fulfillment

Who are the most optimistic people in the world? If one asks any of the 250 teachers of Transcendental Meditation, he will claim that he and his fellow teachers are. The reason for this optimism is that each of these teachers has participated in introducing a technique for the fulfillment of human potentiality into the lives of many individuals. And the teacher knows that if every community of individuals could practice this technique regularly, the world would be a world of ultimate creativity and happiness.

In December, Jerry Jarvis, Director of the Students International Meditation Society spoke to an audience of nearly 200 students, faculty, administration, and others. He introduced those people to the technique of Transcendental Meditation as taught by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi.

Trancendental Medidation is not a new technique. It has been around according to Mr. Jarvis, "as long as there was a mind to think a thought." But the technique was lost for centures. The reason for this loss was that there was a corruption of the teaching of the technique. Impurity entered the teaching and other practices replaced Meditation in the name of Meditation. The true technique was lost until it was recovered by Maharishi's teacher. At last, the technique is available for the first time on a world wide level.

Meditation and the process of transcending make use of sound to reach the "ultimate constituent" of the human mind. In each of us, there is a source of thought which is infinite in its scope and potentiality. In order to contact that source, a meditator uses a sound called a mantra which is given to him individually by a teacher. He repeats the mantra in his mind during his medidation and it carries him to subtler levels of thought until he transcends his "mental thinking level,. reaching the source of thought."

There are some techniques which are called meditation which call for the use of thought on the level of meaning, rather than sound, as the key to reaching a transcendental state. Sound is claimed to be only representative of thought. But if one utters a thought in English, it is only sound to a Chinese. It is the sound that is universal capability and the mantra, a sound, is the key.

Other techniques call for concentration and contemplation, while Transcendental Meditation does not. Concentration asks one to focus his mind on a single idea, with the result of maximum exploration of that idea and no transcendence. One who uses a technique of concentration may find his experience on that level broad, but it cannot go beyond that level. The mind is therefore dissatisfied when it realizes that it has achieved width when it really seeks depth.

Techniques of contemplation call for focus of attention on a fixed point of reference. The result is that the mind is held at a single point, hindering the possibility of transcending to subtler states.

In his lecture, Mr. Jarvis made frequent use of analogies to introduce or illustrate particular point. He spoke of cutting vegetables with a knife. Sharpening the knife regularly is the only way that one can continue cutting the vegetables efficiently, for otherwise, it gets dull. Putting the knife down and allowing it to rest does not sharpen it; it only relieves fatigue in the arm of the vegetable cutter. There is no substitute for grinding the edge of the knife.

The analogy is drawn between the human mind and the edge of the knife. Twenty minutes of meditation in the morning and evening keep the mind sharp. Sleep relieves fatigue and it is necessary, but meditation keeps the mind free from dulling tension and inhibiting anxiety.

As one continues practicing the technique and removing these negative influences from his mind, physical well being is enhanced. Wrinkles and other outward signs of dissatisfaction disappear. The toll that tension can take of one's energy is no longer a factor. Psychosomatic illness is no longer a possibility.

Improvements are not only mental and physical but environmental as well. The removal of a single individual's anxiety from his environment has beneficial effects on all people he comes in contact with and his sense of fulfillment is projected.

Meditation requires no kind of belief for practice. There is no mysticism involved. Just as a knife requires sharpening for efficiency of use without any kind of spiritual commitment, the human mind requires no spiritual commitment as a prerequisite for revitalization.

Why is it that men seek a technique of this nature? Why has Maharishi found so many eager pupils all over the world? Why should there be approximately 500,000 people in the United States alone who are waiting to begin meditating?

Jerry Jarvis answers all of these questions quite simply. "Something is missing. This generation is aware more than any other that something is missing. Their elders are aware of it too." In a world of pure experience, men are forced to use their source of thought without being able to contact it. When there is no contact, suffering results. As a consequence, the world is full of suffering.

The need for contact is recognized by religions and philosophies but no technique is provided for regular and "systematic" contact. "If you are thirsty, a lecture on water would not help. The thought of water or a drop of water would not satisfy."

Mr. Jarvis continued, "We move in the direction of greater happiness and fulfillment....if the object of experience weakens in its ability to satisfy, the mind wanders. Wandering is not the nature of the mind. Its nature is fulfillment. Similarly, the nature of the bee is to find honey. If flying were the nature of the bee, it would fly more and more."

No man has to be taught to want to find happiness. This is a technique to help man become fulfilled before his search leads him to suffering.

Laird Gets Cool Reception In Congress on Draft Lottery

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird got a cool reception Tuesday when he tried to persuade Congress that a draft lottery is the fairest way to let young men know their callup prospects.

Rep. F. Edward Hebert D – La., chairman of a special House subcommittee hearing President Nixon's proposal, said the difference between the lottery and a plan the President could establish without congressional approval is "tweedle dum and tweedle dee."

The lottery plan would still leave most young men guessing as to just when they might be called, Hebert said.

And he said removal of the present congressional ban against a lottery-which is all Nixon asks - would give the President "a blank check" to abandon the lottery proposal and establish any system he likes.

Laird said the lottery would be the fairest and simplest way to reduce the present seven-year draft-risk period to one year. He said its need is particularly urgent in view of administration hopes to significantly cut draft calls in the months ahead.

Rent Strike Held at UWis. Students Protest Housing

MADISON, Wisconsin - (CPS) - The University of Wisconsin has become the third school to begin a community-wide rent strike this month as students have organized the Madison Tenants' Union.

The Badger campus follows the lead of University of Michigan students who are beginning their second year of striking and the University of California students at Berkeley who have begun a rent strike this fall.

Spokesmen for the Madison Tenants' Union claimed "an extremely tough fight will be on our hands" because Wisconsin laws are the most fascistic in the country with regard to tenants' rights."

He said the state's laws allow for "immediate three-day" eviction for the withholding of rent. The Wisconsin Student Association (WSA) is supporting the independent union.

In Berkeley, an $821,000 damage suit has been filed against one management firm, and numerous apartment buildings have been damaged by fire and breakage as the rent strike is taking over as the number one issue on campus.

House painter Stanford Rose, who pays $35 per month along with 17 other male tenants in a house near the Berkeley campus, is suing his landlords, the city, and city officials for failing to correct vented gas heaters in a flat with one bath and one shower for 17 tenants.

Meanwhile, landlords are facing other problems including arson and general destruction. One duplex was almost completely destroyed with the landlord estimating it will cost at least $6,000 to repair it.

Operators of a 32-unit apartment only two blocks from the campus are considering whether or not to re-open this fall "because of the extensive damage and the time necessary for repair."

Landlords in Ann Arbor and Berkeley are attempting to counter tenants' actions with "radical" clause amendments to the leases, higher damage deposits, and forcing leasees to put their parents' names on the leases regardless of the student's age.

The radical clauses ask the lessee to waive his rights to strike, to withhold rent, to certain sections of state laws, or to a jury trial if the case would ever be brought before court. One firm in Ann Arbor has also sent letters to parents of students renting from it asking for greater security and assurances.

Student Judicial System Handles All Policy Violations on Campus

"If the student judicial system is to work, students must understand the system, and must have faith in it."

With this, Justice John Shyavitz began his explanation of the role of the campus judicial system, which has jurisdiction over all campus violations of University and student policies.

The system is divided into four units.

The House Judiciary is the primary judicial unit on campus, and handles all cases involving complaints within a dorm. This level has the power to give out penalties ranging from verbal warnings to a recommendation for expulsion.

Area judiciaries are responsible for all violations occuring within its area, and outside of dorms, and serve as an appellate court for House decisions.

The General Court is responsible for any violations of policy occuring within the Union, and involving R.S.O. or other student groups. It also serves as an appellate court.

The highest judicial court on campus, is the University Judicial Board, composed of four students and four faculty members.

This court is a final appeal board, and hears all recommendations for suspension or expulsion.

Justice Shyavitz said that there are several openings in the Area West Judiciary at the present time.

Agriculture Dept. To Hold Colloquia

The department of agricultural and food economics at the University of Massachusetts will sponsor three colloquia during the month of October.

The topic for the Thursday, Oct. 2 colloquium is "Best Talks at the Annual Meeting" with four department members speaking.

"Our Nation and the Sea" will be the topic by Dr. David A. Storey on Thursday, Oct. 16.

Dr. Jean B.Wyckoff, head of the department, will speak on "Characteristics of Urban Demand for Rural Resources" Thursday, Oct. 30.

Each of the meetings in the series will be held in the Worcester Room of the UMass Student Union at 3:45 p.m., with coffee served at 3:30 p.m.

All are open to the public.

Contact lenses are made of modern plastics which have entirely different characteristics than the tissues and fluids of the eye. Consequently your eye cannot handle this foreign object without help.

So, in order to correct for Mother Nature's lack of foresight, you have to use lens solutions to make your contacts and your eyes compatible.

There was a time when you needed two or more separate solutions to properly modify and care for your contacts, making them ready for your eyes. But now there's Lensine from the makers of Murine. Lensine, for contact comfort and convenience.

Lensine is the one solution for complete contact lens care. Just a drop or two of Lensine coats and lubricates your lens. This allows the lens to float more freely in the natural fluids of your eye. Why? Because Lensine is an "isotonic" solution, very much like your own tears. Lensine is compatible with the eye.

Cleaning your contacts with Lensine retards the build-up of foreign deposits on the lenses. And soaking your contacts in Lensine between wearing periods assures you of proper lens hygiene. You get a free soaking-storage case with individual lens compartments on the bottom of every bottle of Lensine.

It has been demonstrated that improper storage between wearings permits the growth of bacteria on the lenses. This is a sure cause of eye irritation and, in some cases, can endanger your vision. Bacteria cannot grow in Lensine because it's sterile, self-sanitizing, and antiseptic.

Let caring for your contacts be as convenient as wearing them. Get some Lensine . . . Mother's little helper.

Mother Nature never planned on contact lenses

Deprived Area

The Quad is not unique. It has only responded to a basic drive for survival.

The Residents of the Quad see a University of "living-learning" centers. The Quad is socially and culturally undeveloped.

For fifty-dollars a year more room rent, other students can have good furniture and facilities. The Quad has cockroaches and bad plumbing. It has been ignored.

Students have been ignored. Buildings in a University shouldn't be ignored and neglected. Students can't be.

The reaction is what the activity on the quad is all about. The people in the Quad have been concerned. They must live there. They must battle to survive. Petitions have circulated. "Fact finding" groups have worked hard. Lists of needs have been gathered. They are about to confront the Treasurer's Office. The Quad needs money, that should be rightly theirs. The Quad and its sympathizers are rallying.

Someone once said, "A house divided against itself cannot stand." The situation is one that requires co-operation. The University must be recognized as a whole. The Administration should never have allowed the Quad to reach its present state of deterioration. The Quad has vast potential as a vital and productive part of the University. It could, with some planning and improvement, become a good place to live and even attend classes. It could be a "living-learning" experiment.

Above all, at this time, the Administration must recognize the dilemma in the Quad and act with all haste to improve the "basic living necessities" within the area. The students in the Quad must not be ignored. They are as much a part of the University as a student in Southwest. They must be recognized as such.

A Needed Start

The campus reaction to Free University City can only be described as very sad and very typical of UMass. Response has come slowly, or not at all. We have answered the latest issue on campus in the finest UMass tradition; we have done nothing. If September rhetoric is to be believed, this is the year of tripartie cooperation and soul searching. Rhetoric and reality, however, have diverged in an interesting manner.

One side of this obtuse triangle has shown surprising response. Whatever their motivation, administrators have at least demonstrated an interest in Free University City. They are among the criticized, yet they have demonstrated cooperation, and per capita the administration leads the other segments in Free University City appearances. They have not attempted to takeover, and they haven't attempted to subvert. Their reaction has been a pleasant surprise.

This is in direct contrast to student reaction. It is a peculiar phenomenom that the endless energy of youth is best expended by sitting in a dormitory listening to Blood, Stills, and Airplane, but a psychological study of Joe Umie would reveal that this is exactly how he spends his time. Either he or his parents is spending money on his education, yet he feels no desire to influence the course his education takes. The student body has shown very little inclination even to learn what Free University City is, let alone to try to make it work.

He should see that Free University City is his. If then it is to his advantage to speak out. Surely a place teaching sexuality, William Faulkner, and drugs can also offer such seminars as "Why students drink" "the philosophy of the scrambler: a comparison of Tarkenton and Namath," or a course in survival tactics called "How to shower in Knowlton House." The essence of Free University is that it is free and that it is for everyone. In any case, there is no reason to ignore Free University. Come down and play trivia, but just come down.

Finally we come to the formerly sacred group, the faculty. Although fashion has much to do with criticism of academe, still criticism is largely justified. The faculty has shown only minimal interest in Free University. Perhaps "school spirit" on the part of titled employees is now merely a romantic anachronism. Yet the idea of a teacher as one who shuns students is not a pleasant thought. The University bureaucracy succeeds in demanding enough time to make teaching a difficult task. Teachers are in many ways not permitted to be good teachers. If this be so, then we feel the faculty should rebel against the morass of paperwork in which it swims. We ask that the faculty make an effort to help Free University a success, and to make their grievances better known. One key goal of Free University ought to be understanding.

We can make it if we get together. The jocks, the freaks, and the profs are all strangers to each other. They should all try to get involved in FUC. Then maybe people on campus will know each other, if only by name. It's a start, and it's needed.

Violence Is Taxable

WASHINGTON - My friend Mc Cormick thinks he has an answer to all the violence in movies and on television.

"Tax the hell out of them," he said.

"But how?" I asked.

"You sell licenses to producers of movies and television shows. They'd be like a hunting permit. You wouldn't be allowed to kill anyone in a TV program or a film without first buying a license. It would cost you $1,000 to kill one man, $2,000 to kill a woman and $5,000 if you wanted to kill a child."

"Would you have a limit on how many people you could bag?"

"Not at the beginning. I think a producer could kill as many people as he wanted to, providing he had a license for each one."

"What about the method of killing people in movies and TV?"

"We might add a surcharge for unorthodox methods of killing, such as burning, garroting and throwing them off buildings. But I believe shooting or stabbing should be permitted for the straight $1,000 fee."

"McCormick, your idea has great merit, but it seems to me it would add tremendous costs to cowboy pictures."

"Exactly. I believe the producers of cowboy films and TV shows would have to be very discriminating in whom they killed. It will stop them from shooting everyone within camera range. If, for example, a producer had only three licenses, he's have to choose his victims pretty carefully."

"It would certainly save a lot of Indians from being killed," I said.

"As far as war pictures are concerned, we might make a package deal. For a flat $100,000 the producers would be permitted to wipe out either one World War II German battalion or sink one Japanese aircraft carrier with all personnel on board."

"Would you require licenses for wounding and maiming people on TV and in films?"

"I would propose a rate card starting with knocking out a person in a fist fight, which would cost $10, to causing a severe brain concussion, which would cost the producer $500. Any open wound or display of blood would automatically be taxed an extra $100.

"It seems to me those prices are pretty high."

"That's the idea. The only way you're going to get anyone to cut down on violence is to hit him where it hurts - in the pocketbook.

"At the same time," McCormick continued, "I believe producers of nonviolent films should be encouraged by receiving tax rebates. If anyone makes a TV show or picture in which no one is either killed or maimed, he certainly deserves all the tax advantages he can get."

"You've really thought this through," I said.

"It's going to be a touch fight to get it by Congress," McCormick said.

"How's that?"

"The pro-violence lobby in Washington has put out the word that if anyone taxes violence, he'll soon be wearing cement shoes."

Campus Comment

Disturbing Dissent

The "moratorium" scheduled for October 15 is a profundly disturbing exercise in dissent. Surely most Americans earnestly desire an early end to this frustrating conflict. The goal of the moratorium, however - hasty, unilateral withdrawal of U. S. troops - is both unrealistic and potentially dangerous. It would involve abondonment of thousands of allies to a ruthless foe. It would drastically alter the balance of power in Southeast Asia and would, many experts believe, undermine American credibility and increase the danger to our security throughout the world. There is, unfortunately, no easy exit from Vietnam.

The "moratorium" as a tactic is also questionable. Demonstrations and petitions are, of course, constitutionally permissible forms of protest. But the anti-war crusade does not stop here. It seeks the cancellation of all college classes and business on October 15 and for longer periods later on - in effect, a general strike. To demonstrate is one thing; to 'close down colleges' - or any activity - is quite another. It suggests coercion and the raw use of power. Indeed the "moratorium" does not seem designed to educate President Nixon but to intimidate him. Its purpose seems less to disagree with the government than to frighten it. And polls indicate that the goal of immediate withdrawal is not even shared by most Americans.

The educational aspects of the coming peace campaign are also disconcerting. Once more college students are being urged to join a "movement," to abandon their studies, to protest and to "strike", and to subordinate the life of the mind to the life of bodies in motion. Already such activism has disrupted hundreds of colleges. Teaching and learning cannot survive in such an atmosphere of turmoil. Moreover, by closing classes, the "moratorium" would deny students who wished to study the right to attend classes. This is unjust and possibly illegal.

Finally, if universities as institutions, endorse the "moratorium," they will be lending official prestige and sanction to a political, not educational, activity. Gone, then, would be the old, healthy ideal of detachment of the university from the distraction, wiles and woes of the everyday world. Instead, by entering the political fray, colleges and universities would endanger their excellence and invite reprisal. Political action always involves political risks.

The antiwar "moratorium" of October 15 is therefore gravely disquieting. It should not be supported.

The Builders Explain

We, "the hardhats" employed at the various construction sites on campus can understand the discontent voiced by some of the students of the University in a recent letter to the DAILY COLLEGIAN. The problem they were concerned with was overcrowding, especially at the "Hatch". But, if they would just stop to think for a moment, the reason the "hardhats" are present on campus is to alleviate the overcrowded solutions that exist at present at the University.

The new Campus Center is being built to relieve the pressure on the already over-taxed facilities of the Student Union. The new residential complex on Eastman Lane will help to eradicate the inconvenience to many dormitory residents who are forced to live in triples in the existing housing units. The new library under construction will expand the present services offered by the cramped and crowded Goddell building. These new and expanding facilities do not grow from seeds. They must be built, and the "hardhats" are the ones who are building them; not for us, but for you, the students.

We would also like to point out another fact to you. That is, we do pay taxes to support the University. We are sure that you will become painfully aware of this when you leave the sanctuary of the academic environment and take your place in the labor force in whatever capacity you choose.

We "hardhats" are not here to impose on your freedom, nor make things inconvenient for you. Our reason for being here is just the opposite, we are here to help you. So, please be tolerant of the thirty minutes that we are present in "your" Hatch, and don't forget, "hardhats" built that too.

JERRY HOWE
ANDY HEALEY

The Builders Threaten

Students. Tomorrow your union will be closed. The hard-hatted workers have expropriated what truly belongs to us. The university will cease to function. All students will be rationed to one 25¢ hotdog, which they shall eat while standing on their soft heads, without the benefit of a hardhat.

We direct this reply to all groups of elitist bastards which submit that the "People's Union" is run on the pitiable taxes levied on students. This institution of highest ignorance exists not on your specious hypothesis of student independence and fiscal autonomy. Youare here precisely because we put on those hardhats and earn $4.00 an hour. We pay WEEKLY $70 - $80 in taxes, so don't whine to us about taxation. University students are wards of our state, your monomania about automony notwithstanding, Since this institution was built, not only with our money, but with our sweat, we reserve the right to spend one-half hour in "our", i.e. everyones Hatch. We bar none, not even clubby country club types.

Therefore in response to this manifestation of discrimination, We, The Workers warn you, our hands have the power to feed you, but this same hand can unmercifully crush you. Studeats should win our minds to your side. If used correctly all power can flow from us to you, thus making a student victory at least within the realm of the possible.

BILL McKENNA

Inexcusable Action

The failure of the Faculty Senate to support the Oct. 25th Moratorium as a body is understandable, but inexcusable. Given the nature of some of the legislation being passed to "protect" our campuses from "dissident" students (and professors), we can see the Senate's hesitation to take such firm "political" stance against the war; we might awaken to find our funds coming from the State Penitentiary System, and our teachers from the National Guard, (FUC, here we comel). However, the Senate overlooked the following considerations: 1) the war is unconstitutional; 2) when the Nation expressed herself in last year's election, she chose the man who had a plan to end the war "soon"; 3) any decision regarding the loss of human life is a moral decision; 4) ALL political decisions are moral decisions, and we, the citizens, are responsible for the consequences.

The Senate's decision against public support of the Moratorium is a letdown; it may as well of called the Moratorium a "military" issue, and washed its hands of the matter, I hope we get more private support from the Faculty.

DAVE ROONES

A Prejudicial Attitude

It is unfortunate that there is a reviewer writing in the Daily Collegian under the guise of Tommy Walker who actually is an opinated "arse". His vilification of the Supremes' Concert that was held last Saturday at the cage is indicative of the type of individual who projects a very prejudicial attitude. His inability to discern real talent was evidenced by his claim of ignorance in the first line of his article. Undoubtedly sir, if you would take your head out of your "arse", you could have easily comprehended the ventriloquist's style, for it was not that abstruse. Then too, he should definitely consult an optometrist, for it seems that he also has a problem in discerning colors. The motley outfit of the dummy was by no means white. If he would take the "speck" out of his eyes, then maybe he could see straight.

He has a hang-up. I wonder if he realizes this? He could not leave well enough alone for he added insult to injury when he called Diana Ross and the Supremes a "Plastic Queen". He seemingly just does not understand soul music. Diana Ross and the Supremes are considered the best Black female vocalists in the nation.

What I suggest he does is take a course in music appreciation (mainly on soul music). Then and only then will he be able to write a better critical analysis of Black artists.

In essence he is the one who is pathetically sick. "It is better to remain silent and be thought a fool, than to open your moth and remove all doubt."

Homebound Berets Await New Assignments; Case Remains Surrounded by Controversy

BIEN HOA, Vietnam (AP) - With the traditional V-for-victory sign, seven of the eight Green Berets arrested in the alleged slaying of a Vietnamese spy headed home Tuesday after the Army dropped all charges against them.

The eighth member of the group in the secrecy-cloaked case remined behind because he had not completed processing, military spokesmen said.

Led by Col Robert B. Rheault, commander of all Green Berets in Vietnam until the case broke, the departing Special Forces officers were put aboard a charter plane carring 212 other homebound servicemen to Travis Air Force Base in California.

The eight Green Berets are due to go on leave while the Army decides their new assignments.

"I'd just as soon have completed my tour," the 43-year-old Rheault, dressed in jungle fatigues and a green beret, said on departing.

Capt. Robert F. Marasco, 27, of Bloomfield, N.J. who had been named by the Army as the alleged trigger man in the case, said: "It's great to be going."

The widow of the allegedly slain Vietnamese agent, Thai Khac Chuyes, sobbed at news of the men's release.

"The soul of my husband will follow those who killed him," she said. "The Americans are worse than the Viet Cong! I'm going to blow up the Americans! They are more cruel and savage than the Communists."

Chuyen was reportedly slain June 20 near the Special Forces headquarters at Nha Trang and his body was weighted in chains, wrapped in a sack, and dumped into the South China Sea never to be found. Attorneys for the Green Berets had said the U. S. Central Intelligence Agency approved the slaying after Chuyen was discovered to be working for North Vietnamese and Americans at the same time. The CIA denied any such involvement.

Army Secretary Stanley R. Resor announced Monday that Rheault and five other Green Berets specifically charged with murder and conspiracy could not be court-martialed because the CIA refused to furnish witnesses.

Though the charges against the men were dropped, controversy still swirled around the case.

Among many unanswered questions was why the Army had pressed so vigorously to have the men tried and what, if any, role Gen Creighton W. Abrams Jr., commander of all U. S. forces in Vietnam, played in the decision.

Chorale Plans November 5-College Talent Revue

An Intercollegiate Talent Revue, featuring performances by 5-college area students, is being planned for late November by the UMass Chorale.

The chorale is hoping to bring a fresh, new kind of entertainment to the university. An organized variety show has not been run here for several years. The Revue will also provide exceptionally talented students with the opportunity to be seen and recognized by the university community.

The show will present various forms of profession and semi-professional entertainment. The event will include an appearance by The Jeffersons, a folk-pop group which formed two years ago at U-Mass and is now doing extensive concert work throughout New England.

Auditions will be held October 21-23 from 7-9:30 p.m. at Cottage C, UMass. All persons proficient in some form of musical entertainment, comedy, or dramatic presentation are welcome to audition. Acts must be prepared in large part prior to auditioning.

Persons finding audition dates inconvenient must call Joanne Exbicki at 545-2516 before Oct. 14. The show is scheduled for Nov. 22.

Audubon Film Series To be Shown at Smith

NORTHAMPTON (Mass) - "New Zealand Spring," the first of a series of four Audubon wildlife films, will be presented at 7:30 p.m. Friday (October 3) in Sage Hall on the Smith College campus.

Dr. Olin Sewall Pettingill, Jr., the producer of this film documentary on the coming of spring to the island, will be the lecturer. Scenes of New Zealand's mountains, glaciers, fiords, and exotic wildlife are featured, including such rare species as black swans, royal albatrosses, and wrybill plovers.

Pettingill has traveled widely to obtain wildlife pictures and has exposed over 50 miles of film. Director of the laboratory of ornithology at Cornell University, he teaches every summer at the University of Michigan Biological Station. He is the author of several well-known volumes.

Future films in the Audubon series include "Island Treasure" by Walter J. Breckenridge on October 29, "Galapagos - Wild Eden" by Roger Tory Peterson on January 9, and "Death Valley - Land of Contrast" by Kent Durden on April 2.

Tickets for each film-lecture, or for all four as a series, can be purchased on the Smith campus in Burton Hall, Room 115, and in College Hall, Room 26. They are also available at the Arcadia Wildlife Sanctuary, Easthampton, Mass. Series tickets are $2.50; single admission tickets are 75 cents.

Human Relations Board Presents 'Man Nobody Saw

For its Annual Meeting on October 6th, the Amherst Human Relations Council has invited the Dunbar Players of Springfield to present the play "The Man Nobody Saw". This 45-minute play received the enthusiastic acclaim of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders last year.

The Dunbar Players, who have appeared at Amherst Regional High School and UMass, are a bi-racial theater group founded in 1965 at the Dunbar Community Center in Springfield. They have performed at Stage/West, as well as colleges and churches in New England, and have collected numerous awards, notably at the Berkshire Drama Festival.

"The Man Nobody Saw" recently won an award at the New England Theatre Conference at Brandeis University when the Dunbar group performed there.

Many of the Dunbar productions have had racial themes but the group performs an equal number of classical and comedy productions. Earnings are used for an annual award of two scholarships within the Dunbar community.

The AHRC annual meeting will take place at 8:00 p.m., October 6th at the First Congregational Church of Amherst. A short meeting will precede the play.

Blood Donors Wanted; Drive Nov. 4, 5, and 6

Student volunteers for the annual Red Cross Blood Drive will soon begin recruiting blood donor pledges. This program, which not only benefits those in need of blood but also the donor, is sponsored by APO, GSS, and the University Women, in co-operation with the Hampshire County Red Cross.

Students, faculty and staff are urged to register to donate blood on November 4, 5, and 6. Each donor will become a member of the Hampshire County American Red Cross Blood Insurance Program. Under this program, the donor and his immediate family are eligible to receive free blood for one year after donation.

Anyone in normal health, weighing at least 110 pounds, and between the ages of 18 and 65 is eligible to donate blood. Unlike past blood drives, STUDENTS BETWEEN THE AGES OF 18 and 21 ARE NOT REQUIRED TO FILL OUR PARENTAL PERMISSION slips.

A table will be in the lobby of the Student Union on October 7-10 and 14-17 from 10-5 for all people interested in donating blood. Representatives will also be on hand in all dining commons to answer questions and help fill out your pledge forms.

Do you have to give up your identity to make it in a big corporation?

You've heard the stories:

One big corporation forbids you to wear anything but white shirts.

Another says it wants you to be "creative"—and gives you a 4-pound rule book telling you exactly how to do it.

Yet another doesn't want you to buy a more expensive car than your boss because "it wouldn't look right."

Is this really happening in American business?

Have companies become so rigid and fossilized that they're scared of people who don't fit the "norm"?

Not this company.

We are not hung up on trivia like that.

The advances General Telephone & Electronics has made didn't come from people hiding behind organization charts and smiling at the right time.

They came from people who used their brains:

People who revolutionized picture-taking with the Sylvania flashcube, who developed the high-energy liquid laser, who came up with the sharpest color TV picture in the world, who pioneered instant electronic stock market quotations, and so on.

We are looking for more people like this—people who aren't afraid to stand up and try themselves out.

We are an equal opportunity employer:

All you need to make it with us is a good head on your shoulders.

Fine Arts Council Sponsors Simone, Olevsky

Pianist, Vocalist Nina Simone

Nina Simone, known as one of the ablest popular musicians before the public today, will appear in two concerts at UMass Saturday, Oct. 4, under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council's Concert Association, at 7:30 p.m. and at 10 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Heading her own company, Nina Simone has been called one of the most unique artists appearing today. She is equally at home as a vocalist and as a pianist and will be featured in these two capacities. Her singing is not strictly popular, jazz, folk or gospel, because while she sings in all of these idioms she cannot be pigeonholed into any one of them exclusively.

Nina Simone became a top named entertainer during the summer of 1959 through her recording of "I Loves You Porgy". Since then, this leading black artist has been highly acclaimed for her personal appearances and through many best-selling records. Her great success as an artist has a direct relationship with her solid musical training which included study at New York's Juilliard School of Music and private piano and theory classes with Carl Freidberg.

Reserved tickets to Nina Simone concerts at UMass are available from the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, Telephone 545-0202 and are priced at $1.50 for UMass undergraduates; $2.50 for UMass graduate students, faculty, staff and other students and $3.00 for the general public.

Pianist Estela Olevsky

Estela Kersenbaum Olevsky will be featured in a piano recital at the UMass Wednesday, Oct. 1, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The recital is open to the public without charge.

A native of Argentina, Estela Olevsky made her concert debut in Buenos Aires at the age of eight. She received her piano training at the National Conservatory of Music in her native country and was a composition student of the eminent composer Alberto Ginastera.

Estela Olevsky has appeared in concert as a soloist, recitalist and as a sonata partner of her husband, the violinist Julian Olevsky, on many occasions. She made her New York debut as soloist with the Mozart Orchestra and has recently returned from an extended tour of New Zealand. At present, she is a member of the piano faculty of the University.

For her recital, Estela Olevsky has programmed "Six Variations on the theme: 'Mio Caro Adone' by Salieri" by Mozart; Sonata Opus 5 in F Minor by Brahms; "Fantasy Piece (to the memory of Howard Lebow)" by UMass composer Robert Stern; Ravel's "Sonatina" and "Mefisto Waltz" by Liszt.

A Total Experience "Pamela, Pamela, You Are. . ."

"PAMELA, PAMELA, YOU ARE. . ." with Elaine Edwards, Paul Hardy, and Mary Lindsay. Produced and directed by William L. Rose. Black and white and color, 90 minutes.

"Pamela, Pamela, you are. . ." is a kaleidoscopic departure from what is too often called "reality" (i.e., the norms of our society). The film concerns itself with sex, alienation, and an LSD trip, the bizarre and perverse, middle and upper class boredom, lack of identity, and countless other themes worked into a complex but unified whole. "Pamela, Pamela" actually defies definition: it is a "skin flick," but at the same time it is a unique observation of a multi-faceted society.

William Rose, producer-director, uses interesting techniques which must be seen to be fully appreciated. He employs techniques that are rare in film, to show the audience the potential and the singularity of film as an art form.

The film is essentially black and white, but Rose effectively injects color to heighten the intensity of a particular experience or emotion, especially during the acid trip sequence.

A sense of confusion and surrealism is created by flashbacks, juxtaposition of scenes, and brevity of many scenes. Rose's technical style, backed by excellent photography, make "Pamela" exciting and intensely interesting, not just as a screen-story, but as a film.

To briefly describe the "plot" would be absurd and misleading: the plot is so complex that it cannot be briefly described. "Pamela" is a total experience; a combination of many contrasting elements, and is well worth seeing.

Ohio State Number One; So What Else is New?

Ohio State sends its point-a-minute wreckers against Washington this week, favored by two touchdowns to defend its position as the country's No.1 college football team.

National champions and Rose Bowl champions last season, the Buckeyes cemented their place at the top of The Associated Press poll by smothering Texas Christian in its opener last Saturday 62-0.

Some observers called it one of the most powerful college machines of the era.

Woody Hayes, the Buckeyes' reluctant master, commented: "We have to get better every time we play.."

Most of the top teams in the weekly poll face formidable rivals with three of the games matching members of the Top Twenty. Eighth ranked Purdue, winner over Notre Dame last week, plays a strong Stanford team at home in a game some predict could be a preview of the 1970 Rose Bowl. Stanford is ranked 17th.

Missouri, No. 9, invades Michigan, No. 13, with the latter favored by a point while Alabama, No. 15, and Mississippi, No. 20, tangle at Birmingham in a match of Southeastern Conference powers.

The Alabama-Mississippi battle will be Saturday's national television morsel, starting at 9:30 p.m. EDT. ABC televises.

Ohio State received 35 of the 40 first place votes cast by a sports writing and broadcasting panel of 40 and collected 784 total points.

Penn. State, which trounced Colorado 27-3, is second, followed by Arkansas, 55-0 winner over Tulsa; Texas, which ran over Texas Tech 49-7, and Southern California, which crushed Northwestern 48-6.

Penn State is at Kansas State Saturday and Arkansas at Texas Christian, Texas is host to Navy and Southern California travels to Oregon State.

Completing the Top Ten in the poll are Oklahoma, Georgia, Purdue, Missouri and Tennessee.

UMass soccer squad held a scrimmage yesterday at Boyden Field. Redmen aim to sharpen their attack in an attempt to rebound from Saturday's 2-1 defeat at the hands of Maine. Next game will be this coming Saturday at home versus Boston College. (MDC photo by Charles Mitchell)

Braves Clinch Flag; Top Cincinnati, 3-2

ATLANTA (AP) - The red hot Atlanta Braves captured the National League West Division championship last night, cutting down Cincinnati 3-2 with a two-run seventh inning rally capped by Rico Carty's tie-breaking sacrifice fly.

The Braves' 10th consecutive victory gave them a three-game lead over second place San Francisco with two to play, mathematically ousting the Giants.

Carty's fly to right sent Felix Millan scampering home with the run that gave ace knuckleballer Phil Niekro his 23rd victory of the season, including six straight over the hard-hitting Reds.

Hoyt Wilhelm, the 46-year-old relief specialist obtained by Atlanta for the September stretch drive, stymied the Reds over the last two innings after Niekro, 23-13, left the game for a pinch hitter in the big seventh.

With the Reds leading 2-1, Mike Lum opened the home seventh with a single to center and Ralph Garr, batting for Niekro walked.

Wayne Granger, the Reds' record-setting bullpen ace, replaced starter Gary Nolan and got Felix Millan to bunt into a force at third. But Tony Gonzalez singled to left, scoring Garr to tie the game 2-2, and after Hank Aaron walked to fill the bases, Carty delivered the winning sacrifice fly.

Wilhelm then nailed the victory by taming the last six Cincinnati batters with his knuckler, sending the Braves into the NL pennant playoffs against the East Division champion New York Mets. The Braves and Mets open a best of 5 series at Atlanta Saturday.

Constitutional Convention Approves Presidential Post

Popular Vote to Elect New Student Executive

A Constitutional Convention last night night approved an amendment which calls for the popular election of a student body president. The Convention consists of the Student Senate and all elected class officers.

The amendment calls for the election of a president from a campus-wide election in February of each year. The President would be the chief executive officer of Student Government and its official representative. The Student Body President could propose legislation to the Senate, ask the Senate to reconsider any action which it takes, and make appointments to all campus-wide committees.

Other responsibilities include making sure that "regulations duly enacted by the Senate are promulgated and properly executed, and the power to issue executive orders for the enforcement of such regulations."

Included in the proposal is a provision to allow the Student Senate to elect from within its own body, a Speaker, who shall be the presiding and administrative officer of the Senate.

Currently the Senate elects a president, vice president, secretary and treasurer.

The main arguments for the new student body elected president centered on the fact that the Student Senate President now only represents the Senate and not the entire undergraduate student body.

The amendment was passed by a vote of 31-4-3.

The text of the amendment is printed on page 2 of today's DAILY COLLEGIAN.

In late action the Convention passed the entire Student Constitution deleting sections which would have limited the power of class government and the S.U.G. Board.

The Constitution will now go on a campus-wide referendum.

Additional Funds for Index Refused

The Student Senate last night refused to grant the 1970 INDEX $14,779 needed to print a yearbook comparable to this and last year's.

The appropriation as now listed will allow the book the same amount of funds as last year with 1500 more books to print.

The cut, according to Index Editor-in-chief Alan Marcus, will severely limit the number of color pictures in the book as well as cutting down the total number of pages.

The $14,779 request was to replace funds cut by the Student Senate Executive Committee late last spring while the full Student Senate was not in session.

After considerable debate the Senate voted 19 to 10 in favor of giving the funds to the book, but a two-thirds vote was necessary to pass the motion, Student Senate President Bruce Balboni refused to vote aye on the motion, which would have given the two thirds needed for passage.

Balboni instead voted nay and forced reconsideration of the motion as a last ditch effort by the majority of senators in favor of allocating the funds.

An amendment by Senator Dawn Dudash to give the INDEX $7,300 instead of the original amount requested was defeated. Senator Sue Bacon then moved allocation of $13,500 for the book.

Senator Bacon, Senator Staff Sheehan, Senator Bob Nims, and Senator Dick Kline spoke strongly in favor of allocating the funds.

"The Senate will be killing one of the finest yearbooks in the country by not allocating these funds," stated Kline. "Instead of an outstanding yearbook, we will receive a mediocre one -- all because the Student Senate refused to replace the ten per cent of the INDEX budget that provides the extras for an outstanding book," Kline pointed out.

On the final vote 19 Senators were in favor of the allocation, 11 against and one abstention. Once again the request went down to defeat.

"I'm not entirely sure how to proceed from here," said Index Editor Alan Marcus; "We really only have two options. Either we cut the pages drastically by eliminating much of the coverage in sports, Greeks, dorms, academics and atmosphere, leaving only Senior portraits and a chronology of the year's events; or we can reduce the overall quality of the book by going to a lower quality paper and eliminating most of the color."

"Either way," concluded Marcus, "the students of UMass lost."

An amendment to allocate $8,000 to Index will be debated next week.

Strong Support Given For War Moratorium

By ROSE MILLER
Staff Reporter

The Student Senate last night unanimously passed a resolution demanding the Administration cancel classes for the Vietnam Moratorium on October 15.

The resolution reads in part: "Resolved that the Student Senate request the appropriate authorities to cancel all classes and administrative functions of the University on October 15, to allow members of the University community to extend the impact of the Moratorium to the surrounding larger community; and be it further Resolved that the Student Senate expresses its intention to use any and all means necessary consistent with the Student Senate Picketing Code to insure that all classes and administrative functions will not be conducted if the proper authorities do not comply with the above request."

The resolution was passed early by the Senate session with all other business being put aside. There was little debate preceding the vote. Senator Madden speaking for the resolution pointed out, "the Senate had never acted with such force in the past and that it is time to bring about change...we have the right to picket and question."

A similar resolution calling for class cancellation, debated in the Faculty Senate last week, was overwhelmingly defeated. The Faculty Senate said it felt the decision whether or not to hold classes should be left to individual professors and students. The feared "politicizing" the educational process.

The Student Senate resolution calling for class cancellation will go to the administration. If the administration does not reply with the request, President of the Student Senate Bruce Balboni says a boycott of classes would be an alternative.

Highlights of Moratorium Teach-in To Be Aired on CBS News Broadcast

A teach-in on the October 15 War Moratorium will be held in Bowker Auditorium tonight at 8:00. Sponsored by the Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council, the teach-in will be covered by C.B.S. News, for airing on the Walter Cronkite newscast.

At the meeting, the aims and rationale of Peace Action Day, the nation-wide war protest demanding immediate withdrawal of all U. S. troops from Vietnam, will be discussed.

Speakers for the night include King Council Executive Secretary Gil Saik, Gene Pettit, Gerald Meisner of the Physics Department, Tito Graige, President of the Amherst College Student Council, and representatives from Smith, Mt. Holyoke, and Springfield colleges. The Amherst business community will be represented by Ray Werbe.

The program, according to King Council spokesmen, is designed to give interested persons a clear view of the planned campus, local state, and national activities. This event is scheduled as the first major event on this campus leading up to the Moratorium itself. It will serve, in part, as a training session for those planning to participate in the Peace Action Day activities, as well as answering questions of those curious about the day's events.

The Moratorium has already received strong support from the Student Senate (see related story on page 1), and taken support from the Faculty Senate. To date, the Administration has been silent about the planned program.

Grad Students Get Reprieve In New Nixon Draft Policy

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon announced Wednesday that all draft-eligible graduate students who do satisfactory work during the current school year will be safe from induction at least until next June.

Under old rules, graduate students had been permitted to delay induction only to the end of the semester. The delay now will cover the entire academic year.

The White House estimated that about 10,000 young men would be affected by the shift in policy.

METAWAMPE PICKS 'EM TOMORROW

The DAILY COLLEGIAN will not publish a regular edition on Wednesday, Oct. 15, the day being set aside for a nation-wide moratorium protesting the war in Vietnam.

In a letter to members of the DAILY COLLEGIAN Publishing Board, Donald A. Epstein, editor-in-chief, disclosed that the newspaper's editorial board voted unanimously to support the day-long strike.

Instead of a regular newspaper, the DAILY COLLEGIAN will publish a broadside devoted entirely to the moratorium. Complete coverage of the day's events will be reported in the Oct. 16 edition.

In addition the Collegian editors decided to urge President John W. Lederle, in the strongest terms possible, to cancel classes on Oct. 15, in order to allow students and faculty to participate in the day's events.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

(AP) - Hundreds of Canadian college students demonstrated and tied up traffic Wednesday at approaches to the United States from Canada to protest U. S. plans to detonate a nuclear device in the Aleutian Islands off western Canada.

Orderly groups of students demonstrated on the Rainbow Bridge at Niagara Falls, the Ivy Lea Bridge at Kingston, Ont., near Watertown, N.Y. and at the Champlain border crossing in the eastern part of the state.

WASHINGTON (AP) - An Army officer and a sergeant who once was jailed for stealing slot machine receipts said Wednesday death threats and payoffs helped muzzle a probe into charges of looting servicemen's clubs.

Lt. Col. William L. George, who said he experienced three months of anonymous threats in 1965, testified Maj. Gen. William A. Cunningham III then commander of the 24th Infantry Division, refused repeated requests to broaden the scope of the probe despite evidence hundreds of thousands of dollars were being stolen.

TOKYO (AP) - Communist China marked its 20th anniversary Wednesday with pomp and pageantry - but no new pronouncements.

The nation's top leaders, including Chairman Mao Tse-tung and his officially designated heir, Lin Piao, stood on the red walls overlooking the Square of Heavenly Peace as a crowd of perhaps half a million paraded through the vast plaza. The square is part of the Forbidden City, site of the nation's seat of government.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Atomic Energy Commission reported recording low to intermediate "seismic signals" in the Soviet Union's nuclear test area Wednesday, the second such blast reported this week.

The first one, which was announced Sunday, took place on Friday south of Volgegrad, formerly Stalingrad. The one on Wednesday was in another area, the Semipalainsk region of Siberia.

The AEC would not say the tests were underground or that nuclear weapons were involved.

BONN, Germany (AP) - Willy Brandt and Free Democratic party chief Walter Scheel met Wednesday for another round of talks aimed at forming a West German goverament.

Brandt's Social Democratic party and Scheel's Free Democrats together won a majority of the 496 Bundestag - parliament - seats in Sunday's election. The vote gave none of the three parties represented in the Bundestag a mandate to rule alone.

SWAP Focuses on "University of Utopia"

In its effort to reform the University the SWAP Committee reformed itself.

SWAP was instituted to train R.S.O. groups in the use of office machines. It developed into a student-faculty workshop, oriented toward a single topic such as curfews or academic affairs. SWAP delegates were sent as representatives of various supporting R.S.O. groups.

This year's SWAP will be different. Any student may apply directly to the SWAP Committee. Delegates will be selected on the basis of their ability to contribute to specific discussions.

The general theme of SWAP will be the University of Utopia. Around this theme problem-centered groups will be formed. The role of the University in society the Free University, military-industrial complex on campus, university government and university fiscal policies will constitute some of the topics. Student and faculty delegates will participate in discussions according to their interest and experience in the topic. After a day of meetings the groups will collaborate and report their experiences.

Besides discussions, a variety of personal and communal experiences will be planned to facilitate communication. It is likely that these experiences will not be conducted in the usual SWAP medium.

SWAP will convene on November 14th at the Oak & Spruce Lodge in Lee, Massachusetts. SWAP is a three day convention attended by 75 selected students and an equal number of administrators faculty, legislators and trustees. SWAP is an opportunity to exchange information and ideas; to improve communication inside and outside the University; and to foster change inside and possibly outside the University.

Students will be provided with room, board and transportation for a fee of $5.00. All other delegates must pay $35.00.

Student s may suggest faculty delegates by offering nominations in the ballot box in the Student Union lobby this week.

Student applications can be obtained beginning October 6th in the Student Union.

Reeves Criticizes Hypocritical Draft Reforms; Calls for Immediate Repeal Total System

Thomas Reeves, Director of the National Council to Repeal the Draft, called for a complete repeal of the draft, criticized Nixon's draft reforms, labelling them hypocritical, and said there is greater strength in the student movement than even some student leaders suspect.

His speech, sponsored by the Martin Luther King Council, was given to a small audience in the Student Union Ballroom last night.

Reeves stated that many erroneously believe that Nixon is reforming the draft. "Nixon has been pulling one of his famous tricks," he said.

"By taking the pressure of the draft off the students, Nixon hopes to stop dissent." He continued, "His tactics can and will backfire."

"They will backfire because students hate hypocrisy more than they hate war and Mr. Nixon may turn out to be a bigger hypocrite than Lyndon Johnson was."

Reeves came out against violent campaigns stating that a broad-based and rational campaign which gives the government no excuse for repressive reactions is the only answer.

In attacking Nixon's statements and actions on the draft, Reeves charged that a presidential commission's proposals on setting up a volunteer army would be implemented only in a period of no crises; that Nixon's Youth Advisory Committees on the draft were being ignored by the Administration; and that Nixon increased the June through September callups to 56,000 over the previous year.

He also charged that Nixon had inflated the present November and December callups so that he could reduce them without lowering his requirements.

Reeves said the student movement was strong despite dissention that has hit many radical student organizations like the SDS. He said the movement was coming into its own and not splitting and that the Vietnam War Moratorium is giving shape and impetus to the movement.

In emphasizing the continuing rift between students and the government he said, "Obviously, to more and more people, the American government is becoming merciless, dishonest and closed."

He pointed out that 63% of American taxes go to the military, a bigger allocation than Hitler made to his military in 1939. He said, "The United States bureaucracy and government is the enemy."

Reeves called Nixon's proposed reform to a national lottery for 19 year-olds "a trick" designed to extend the presidential power to draft past the 1971 deadline and no reform at all.

He charged that Nixon's proposal to increase graduate deferments and to switch to a lottery for 19 year-olds was a trick to decrease the number of those who would be involved with the draft and to thus decrease the number of potential demonstrators.

"But these boys are still going to be drafted," he said. "They're still going to be forced to go; some of them against their will."

"The president and the military will still have the power to escalate the draft without informing Congress."

Reeves said that once Congress acted on a draft reform, such as Nixon's, it would be loath to act on a total repeal. He said that immediate action must be taken to block Nixon's proposals and to press for a complete repeal of the draft.

He said the time was ripe for repeal and offered as evidence a recent Harris Poll which showed that for the first time since 1948 more than 50% of the American public is against the draft.

He said that any form of draft, no matter how limited, would still do an injustice to the individual and to groups, like the blacks, who felt too disenfranchised to do anything about it and would still enable the military to dictate foreign policy.

"The draft makes a military solution the easiest solution for a president to take."

Reeves emphasized the need to enlist high school students into the anti-draft movement since they would be the generation most affected by Nixon's new proposals.

Another goal set by Reeves was the involvement of the community at large in the anti-draft movement.

In a question and answer period following the speech, Reeves criticized any proposal for universal service in a non-military duty since it would require a registration and thus control of all students and would eliminate conscientious objections.

He also said that violence would only bring repression from the government and rejection from the community at large. The only successful movement could come through a rational campaign directed toward Congress.

"Students have done some rather amazing things," he said.

Health Services Staff Supports Viet Moratorium

The following is a statement from the staff of the University Health Services, supporting the Oct. 15 Vietnam War Moratorium.

The staff of the University Health Services has been moved to express its support for the nationwide Vietnam Moratorium Day on October 15. We believe it is important that this day be devoted to discussion and action programs directed toward informing Washington peacefully but forcefully of the nation's longing for a prompt end to the Vietnam War. We believe that we can no longer defer concerted action in the futile hope that there will be a spontaneous basic change in the posture of our government toward its assumed role in policing and determining the future of Asia.

Inevitable consequences of using violence as a means of problem-solving have a special meaning to health workers who are in a position to understand more directly than others not only the dreadful direct physical and emotional effects of continuation of the Vietnam conflict, but also the indirect health effects upon everyone. Ruthless cuts in federal funds have compromised many health programs which are essential for the public welfare. The entire Chronic Disease Program of the USPHS has been virtually eliminated; building programs urgently needed for new hospitals have been curtailed; medical schools are in a desperate situation because of funding cutbacks; urban regeneration is at a virtual standstill. Without a continuation of our extravagant expenditures in support of programs of military and political folly, these and other health and educational programs could be restored - and expanded as needed.

The Health Services obviously cannot shut down completely; we have a responsibility to provide for the care of ill and injured students every day of the year. However, in order to make known our support for the Moratorium and our ardent wishes for the troops to be brought home and the killing stopped NOW, we are planning to provide only emergency services by a skeleton staff on October 15, with the entire staff readily available in the event of being needed. Cancelling appointments may inconvenience a few students. We hope that everyone can accept this as his contribution to the total community effort.

Meeting Leaves Quad Problem Unsolved

by RICHARD C. HANSON

"A representative body for the Northeast Area" met Wed. at 2:30 with Assistant Treasurer Brand. The meeting was to be a continuation of the groups "fact-finding" efforts. A bulletin from the Northeast Area Congress stated that the students in attendance left "quite dissatisfied". Mr. Brand was unavailable for comment.

The group, which included Quad dorm presidents, Area Congress officers, and heads of residence in the Quad, had prepared a list of questions for Mr. Brand. The questions concerned the Northeast Area condition, finances, maintenance, and reasons behind them. Mr. Brand was unable to give any pertinent figures, or answers except that there was a "lack of funds". The Assistant Treasurer referred most questions to Pres. Lederle, Provost Tippo, and Dean Field. The group is planning to meet with these three as soon as possible.

Mr. Brand explained the Area Dorm Trust fund and explained that there were no funds for any major improvements within this fund. He further explained that there are no dorms in either the Quad or the Central Area scheduled for renovation in the next two years.

The students are still in the same situation they were before the meeting. The Quad still has the same conditions which started the movement. As one student said "Now, we're looking for answers from Lederle."

Senators Ask Nixon to Drop Haynsworth

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Robert P. Griffin, the No. 2 Republican in the Senate, reportedly has suggested to President Nixon that the Supreme Court appointment of Judge Clement F. Haynsworth be withdrawn.

A spokesman for the Michigan senator Wednesday night refused, however, to confirm or deny the report that came from several congressional sources.

The Griffin development came on the heels of a public call by another Republican senator, Edward W. Brooke, of Massachusetts that Nixon call back the nomination or face an "embarrassingly" close vote and possibly even defeat.

There was no immediate comment from the White House on any possible withdrawal. Nixon, however, said at his news conference last week he had no intention of pulling back his nomination of Haynsworth, a judge on the 4th U. S. Court of Appeals.

Moratorium Poll Indicates Student Support

The Moratorium Committee conducted a poll yesterday to determine the degree of student support for the Oct. 15 Moratorium. As of 3:30 yesterday, approximately 3,800 students responded to the poll. The following is a reprint of the questionnaire:

A nationwide moratorium has been planned for Wednesday, October 15, 1969 to protest American involvement in Vietnam, and to demand the immediate withdrawal of all American troops from that country. If the majority of the University community is in favor of participating in this moratorium, we will ask that the university officially cancel classes on this day.

Are you in favor of the cancellation of classes on October 15, in observance of the moratorium?

Will you support the moratorium if the University refuses to officially cancel classes on this day?

The official tally, thus far, is 3,372 YES, and 414 NO for question #1; 2,484 YES, and 1,082 NO FOR QUESTION #2.

Included on some of the questionnaires were comments by individual students as to their reasons for voting as they did.

The following are some of the more "outstanding" remarks:

Question #1 "Yes - it is the moral responsibility of the University."

Question #2 "Yes - it is my moral responsibility and my conscience dictates that I support it."

Question #2 "No - cannot afford the consequences because I have an exam and 4 classes."

Question #2 "No - I haven't the balls!"

Question #2 "No - because I need all I can just to get passing grades which will keep me here. It's a struggle as it is. As for Vietnam, I've been there and thank GOD the war is over for me."

Question #1 "Yes - I'm in favor of any action which may hamper imperialism and promote peace in all hemispheres."

A few random comments were submitted on the questionnaire. They are as follows:

Members of MLK Council are manning a table in the SU Lobby to answer questions and guage student support for October 15 Moratorium. (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt)

"I have a right as a human being to live without having to kill a fellow man in some ridiculously thought up means of political propaganda."

"Save lives, not face."

"I am radical in most respects, but encumbered by a stubborn streak of practicality which regulates the things I do. An unofficial protest is not nearly as far-reaching and successful as an official one. It would not be practical or right for me to miss classes in my major subject for an unofficial protest. The spirit is willing, but my marks are weak."

The student who wrote the above responded affirmatively in Question #1.

"I am a Vietnam veteran and fully support any effort to withdraw troops from there."

"In the name of humanity, we drop napalmn not potatoes", - Joan Baez .

Greenough. Experiment in Better Living

At the last meeting of the Board of Trustees, a momentous precedent was set for a radical change in student life traditions. The Board accepted the Greenough House Co-ed Dorm proposal, thus allowing Greenough to set up its own sexually integrated community.

The proposal calls for forty girls to be living on the third floor of the facility, with men living on the second and fourth floors. The only restrictions that will have to be met by prospective new residents is that they not be freshmen and, if they are not twenty-one, that they have parental permission.

The intent of the Greenough project is to establish a small community of inter-acting people within the larger community of the University. Through this smaller community, it is hoped that people can come to know each other on a more intimate basis, through which the alienation of the larger community can be removed.

Dormitory life as it is now set up, with men living in one building and women in another, is an unnatural environment that most students never have previously be exposed to again. Greenough hopes to eliminate this unnatural atmosphere and engender free communication between the sexes.

At present there are a number of openings for girls to become residents in the Greenough Commuity. The coming Sunday and Monday nights, October 5 and 6, at 7:00 p.m., there will be meetings in room 101 Greenough for any girl interested in living in the community starting next semester. Applications will be available, and final selections of the female residents will be conducted by lot.

FROM OUR SIDE

Speak to Us, John

Many colleges and universities throughout the nation have already made the commitment to observe October 15, the date of the National Moratorium to End the War in Viet Nam, by cancelling classes for the day. But despite the importance of this commitment to morality, there are still many supposedly "humane" institutions which have yet to make any commitment at all, one way or the other. UMass is one of them.

Thus far our own President Lederle has refrained from saying anything publicly about the moratorium. He has fortified himself in his "pentagon on the mall", and there he sits, mute and uncommunicative while the world goes by. Quite possibly he is waiting for more bathers to stick their toes in the water before he takes off his shoes. Maybe he hopes that by waiting and closing his eyes he will wake up and it will be October 16th.

We understand President Lederle's precarious position as President of the University and the many trials and frustrations that go along with that rather thankless job. But by the same token we realize that there are some decisions that need to be made and that there's something "hurting" somewhere if these decisions are shoved to the back of the old cerebrum like an overdue phone bill. The question of the moratorium is definitely a decision that must be made by every college president in this nation. It is today, October 2nd. The moratorium decision will be affecting close to 20,000 people. The responsible thing would not be to wait until the hour before to make a decision that ultimately affects so many individuals.

We Can Do It

Michael Harrington's victory in the 3th Congressional district has been called a victory for the new politics. Harrington called for immediate withdrawal from Vietnam, and for money for the cities instead of for ABM. Most importantly, Harrington spoke on all issues and spoke bluntly. It was his direct confrontation of the issues which won him the votes of liberal Republicans. Thus he was able to defeat Sen. Saltonstall, a Nixon man.

For too long politics has been a game of vagueries and twisted promises. The election of 1968, which pitted Humphrey's "politics of Joy" against Nixon's promises to do SOMETHING about Vietnam and SOMETHING about law and order is a dreary example of the fog which has hung over American politics for so long.

Our generation is one which seeks honesty in its morals, entertainment, and politics. The support which Eugene McCarthy received was in part due to his blunt honesty. Now in a state long noted for what Theodore White called "puffy . . . predatory-lipped politicians," a man of the new politics, a McCarthy supporter, has been elected.

The Boston Globe reported that many young people aided in Harrington's campaign and were very important to his victory. The message is clear.

If we want things changed, at the national level, or at the state level, where a rancid Democratic leadership proclaims "We shall protect morality" while crude abortions, fear, and crime result from the Chastity laws, we can do it. There are politicians who will listen to youth, and we can elect those whose views we support. It will take participation within the system to change the "system." It takes action, not the dreamy, idyllic wishfulness of an Arlo Guthrie, to remake the United States and our own state.

Harrington's victory shows that blunt politicians and youth can change politics and garner votes if they work at it.

Man is a legal animal. Look around you - there are laws about everything - marijuana, the draft, dissent, even sex.

Our generation can elect the politicians we want, and we must become the elected politicians in a short time.

And it is the politicians who make the laws we will live, and today suffer, under.

Movements

I would like to take issue with some points made by George Nash in his letter, which you printed on October 1.

First, regarding his statement, ". . . hasty, unilateral withdrawal of U.S. troops . . . would involve the abandonment of thousands of allies to a ruthless enemy."

". . .Thousands of allies. . ." in a country of fourteen and a half million people. The rest of the people either welcome the Communists, or just don't care.

". . .Abandonment . . . to a ruthless enemy." Here we argue a point of degree. My contention is that the United States is by far the more "ruthless" of the two belligerants. It is the U.S. who defoliates hundreds of acres, napalms villages, or drops 14,000 tons of bombs on areas where there MIGHT be some Viet Cong.

And where individual acts of terror are involved, the U.S. is easily a match for the Viet Cong; witness the CIA planned murder case, which never even came to trial because the CIA thought it not in the interest of national security.

Next, concerning his discomfort over moratorium tactics. The government of this country, this democracy, has repeatedly shown it's lack of concern for public opinion. Mr. Nixon was elected because he promised to end the war SOON. It's now close to a year since he took office, and there has been no slowdown of the war, and only token troop withdrawals (mostly clerical personnel who can do their jobs as well in Okinawa or the Phillippines as in Vietnam. If the moratorium is like punching Nixon in the nose to get his attention, this is because there seems to be no other way to do it.

Finally, regarding Mr. Nash's concern for the ". . .old, healthy ideal of detachment of the university from the distractions, wiles and woes of the everyday world." That idea, if it ever existed in practice, is dying fast; and I for one welcome its demise. If the students do not get actively involved to provide the muscle for socially progressive movements, no one will, and the movements will never move.

DAVE BOUTILIER

Skimdex

In Tuesday's Collegian, Nancy Operacz states that the goal of the Index is to present "a yearbook that each of us could look back over with pleasure and pride, appreciation, and a feeling of rapport with the students pictured". According to her, "the staff has tried, successfully, I believe, to imprint on those pages in pictures, and even more in words, what it means and involves being a student here". If these are the goals (and I generally agree that they are), then the Index has failed miserably.

I am senior captain of the Women's Gymnastics Team, and I was appalled at the coverage of sports in general, and gymnastics in particular. To me, what it "means and involves" to be a student here is to be an athlete, a gymnast, so the part of the Index that deals with sports is the part that I am going to "look back over with pleasure and pride". But gymnastics wasn't covered. Neither were many of the other sports at the University. The Men's Gymnastics Team had their best year ever, but the only reference to gymnastics was in the blurb at the beginning of the sports section. In my three years with the women's team and at the University, our team has not once been covered in the Index. This year there were pictures of two gymnasts, a swimmer , and some basketball players, all grouped together under the rather wishy-washy title of "Sport is ... .. not only for men". There was nothing to identify the sports or the individuals.

One of the gymnasts pictured was Margie Sims. She was a top performer on all four events, and this year placed fifth in the all-around at Women's Collegiate Nationals. The four who beat her are all Olympians. Yet how many people knew, or now know after reading the Index, that we had a gymnast of this caliber competing for our school (not only that, the picture was such that he face was covered and she was hardly recognizable).

The Women's Gymnastics Team placed second in the East and fourth in the nation last year, and lost only one dual meet. We practice 2-3 hours a day, 5 or 6 days a week, from Sept. to March. We carry a full competitive schedule, with a meet every week-end from December to March. We work just as hard for ourselves, our team, and our school as do any of the men's varsity sports, and I think we deserve as much coverage in 'our' yearbook as any of the other teams.

Amherst Housing Authority Rejects Rent Subsidies

Amherst - Rent subsidies will not be in effect in Amherst. . .at least not for some time.

The Amherst Housing Authority voted 3-2 not to put the rent subsidies into effect at this time and instead to have a sub-committee look further into the idea.

The subsidies were considered at a meeting last week AS A MEANS OF PERMITTING LOW INCOME FAMILIES TO OBTAIN BETTER HOUSING in the town. It was noted then that up to $100,000 of State money would be available for a subsidy program.

At the meeting Tuesday night, the Housing Authority voted 2-2 on the subsidy question, and Chairman Walter Jones broke the tie by voting against it.

The authority named a sub-committee of two members, Bernie Moreau and William Mellon, and others they select to study subsidy question further.

Moreau made the motion to approve the subsidy. He also made the motion to have a sub-committee.

It was brought out that the State officials had promised a week ago to send data on rental subsidies so additional questions could be answered.

Failure on their part brought the defeat of the first vote for rental assistance for the town.

It was suggested to apply now and get information later, but this did not change the vote.

After the meeting Mrs. David Klinger, president of the League of Women Voters of Amherst, gave some authority members a letter addressed to members of the Amherst Housing Authority, Walter C. Jones, Chairman.

Her letter follows:

"The Amherst League of Women Voters has been concerned with the need for low income housing in Amherst since 1965-66. We studied the housing situation at that time and found a severe shortage of units for lower income families, such as older people, blue-collar workers, non-professional staff at the educational institutions, and married graduate students. We believe that these valuable segments of our diverse community should not be forced to leave town or live in substandard conditions.

"Since 1966 the situation has grown worse, and we now have a crisis. We applaud the planning coordination that is beginning to take place among town and university agencies and strongly urge communication and cooperation among all groups involved in the housing area. We hope this activity will lead to some specific plans being developed and units being started.

"As a public agency the Housing Authority is a vital link, and the League of Women Voters of Amherst asks you to consider and take advantage of those public programs which might ease our housing crisis."

NES to Resume Tutoring Service Program Needs Serious Individuals

After one mass meeting and a four day orientation that spread over two weeks, N.E.S. tutoring will start this Monday, October 6. Approximately 600 University of Massachusetts students volunteered to tutor in economically deprived areas in Springfield.

The beginning of the program marks the culmination of the efforts of the Northern Education Service Coordinating Committee. Credit also goes to the "Collegian," WMUA, the poster makers and pamphleteers who publicized the program.

However, the real challenge starts when the first tutors go down to Springfield on a weekly basis. The N.E.S. bus will pick the tutors up in front of the lobby entrance of the Whitmore Administration building at 2:30 and 6:30 p.m. Monday thru Thursday.

The N.E.S. tutorial program not only provides educational help, but tutors also run activities at the various centers and provide friendship to those tutees who want it. Thus the program takes on an equally important aspect of a tutor learning from the tutee and his world.

The one limiting factor in this program is that too many people have volunteered and too many drop out after the program has started. N.E.S. Headquarters feels that it can not possibly assign tutees to those who filled out the blue registration cards during the orientation meetings September 22 - 25.

However, since one third to one half of the tutors that will be assigned may quit after a few weeks it is suggested that any volunteer seriously desiring to help in the program just get on the bus and go down to one of the centers and find a tutee that wants a tutor.

The program needs this kind of individual effort from all concerned as was explained during the orientation meetings. It was frankly stated that a "white, 'Reader's Digest' " attitude will not work in the program. A tutor volunteers to help others and not to try to make another over in his own image.

The Martin Luther King, Jr. Social Action Committee helps pay part of the cost of transportation of the program. Also, anyone seeking information about the program can call the King Council Office in room 207 Hampshire House at 545-0648 or 545-0649.

Asphalt Cage Roof To Solve Problems

The glass roof on the "Cage" is being replaced by an asphalt shingled roof. The contractor, Shumway Construction Company, expects completion of this $60,000 project by October 31st.

According to Mr. Lambert, the University's Landscaping Architect, the glass roof is outdated. Curry Hicks was built in 1931 when glass roofs were practical since interior lighting was poor.

Glass, when mounted, loosens up after a period of time. In the past five year, the Cage has experienced leakage during rain - storms and heat loss during cold weather. In hot weather, the gym heats up like a greenhouse.

The cage is used for baseball practice, a purpose for which the glass roof has not been helpful, as balls have constantly been breaking the glass. To solve this, a net was placed beneath the roof, making it look, in Mr. Lambert's words, "Like one big cobweb."

During the UMass - Boston College basket ball game last winter, a referee slipped in a puddle on the cage floor and split his pants.

The game was held up for 30 minutes while his pants were being sewn. The perspiration from the 4000 persons present has caused moisture on the glass roof, and this condensed moisture dripped, forming puddles on the floor.

During outdoor commencement in 1948, it began to rain, and the exercises were held in the cage. After the transfer, the sun came out and the cage, with graduates dressed in woolen robes, became unbearably hot. Years ago, the cage was used for horticulture displays. The glass roof often made it difficult for some plants and flowers to withstand the heat which came in from the sun. Also, the photographs of the flowers varied, since the light depended on whether the sun was in or out.

Yet the Cage is a valid structure, and we still have valid use for it. It has been and will continue to be a good place for athletic practice and various University events.

New Form Of Protest

(ACP) - THE OBSERVERS, London. The administration at Birmingham University has been thrown into confusion by a new form of student protest. Instead of boycotting exams, the students have been taking too many papers.

The idea is to make a "constructive protest" and to "highlight the absurdities of the system."

Students have been walking into exams for which they have not studied and are not officially registered. In some cases they have answered the set questions, in others they have presented answers to questions they made up themselves.

Result: no inconvenience for fellow students, but more trouble for administration bureaucrats who had to sort out the genuine from the fake papers.

U Minn Presents Draft Laws To Freshmen

(ACP) - University of Minnesota school officials, rather than military personnel, will give presentations of Selective Service System draft and military deferment laws to freshmen during orientation this fall.

According to the vice president of student affairs, the change was made to "keep objectivity to the satisfaction of all," though he added, "I was satisfied that it was an objective program from the start."

A member of the organization pointed out that the Air Force major presenting the information the last time it was presented, gave information that was "incomplete and incorrect," referring to the major's statement that every male has a "military obligation."

Said the member, "there is nothing in the Selective Service laws that says this. . . Only about 40 per cent of those aged 18 will ever serve in the military; an many will be exempted or disqualified."

Vista Recruiters to Be On Campus Next Week

Three VISTA recruiters will be in the lobby of the Student Union the week of October 6, from 9-5 daily. They will provide information to prospective volunteers about service and training. The recruiters will also be showing a movie at various times throughout the day.

Vista is Volunteers in Service to America, a program of the federally supported O.E.O., the Anti-Poverty program. The volunteer works a year for one of the poverty agencies, receiving only subsistence wages and living with the poor they serve.

The recruiters are on a tour of the Northeast college campuses seeking prospective volunteers. After the application has been completed the student is invited to train for one of the Vista programs. Vista volunteers serve in nearly all of fifty states, as well as Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and American Samoa.

Vista is currently involved in a variety of projects ranging from registration in the South to running a pre-school in the Virgin Islands. There are Vista programs designed for both urban and rural settings.

At this time, there are more than 4,000 Vista volunteers. After completion of one year, nearly one third of the volunteers extend their service for a longer time. Vista will consider both single and married people, but the couple must apply for the same project.

These five faculty and administrators served as judges last Sunday for the Homecoming 1969 Queens Committee.

Their task was to interview 46 queen candidates and choose ten semi-finalists. Of these ten girls, the campus community will vote for five finalists - one of whom will be chosen by a new set of judges as the UMass Homecoming 1969 Queen.

Sunday's judges, shown interviewing three of the Queen candidates, included Mr. Paul Bigelow, Assistant-manager of the Student Union; Mr. Michael West, Northeast Area Coordinator; Mr. David Wheeler, UMass Fraternity Counselor; Mrs. Catharine Porter, Fashion Merchandising Instructor; and Mrs. Rene Carew, Southwest Area Coordinator.

All of the Queen candidates were judged for their poise, appearance, awareness involvement, and for their activities and participation.

Voters Show Anti-Nixon Trend

WASHINGTON (AP) - Democrats read a rebuff to President Nixon Wednesday into the Massachusetts ballots which elected to Congress a critic of U.S. policy in Vietnam.

Republicans generally rejected any assertion that the race was a referendum on Nixon leadership - but one GOP official acknowledged "There probably was a rub-off effect from Vietnam and general frustration."

Democrat Michael J. Harrington, 33, a vehement critic of the American posture in South Vietnam, was elected in Massachusetts' 6th Congressional District to a House seat that had been held by Republicans since 1875.

He beat a man with a noted Republican name, William Saltonstall, a state senator and son of former U.S. Sen. Leverett Saltonstall.

It was the third traditionally Republican House seat to fall to the Democrats in a special election this year.

Like Harrington, the two other Democratic winners, Rep. David Obey of Wisconsin and Rep. John Melcher of Montana were Vietnam policy dissenters. The White House response to Harrington's victory was: no comment.

Sen. Fred R. Harris of Oklahoma, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, said the election was a judgment of Republican rule in the White House.

"In each instance, Montana, Wisconsin and Massachusetts, the Republican candidate made it a referendum on the Nixon administration," Harris said.

"In every case, the voters turned them down," Harris said in an interview. "That's got to be troublesome to the Republicans and the administration, and it's got to give our spirit a boost as we look toward 1970." Republicans contended the Massachusetts race had no national significance - although the GOP, like the Democrats, had sent money and manpower to the campaign.

"We're disappointed," said Sen. John G. Tower of Texas, chairman of the Senate GOP Campaign Committee. "We don't read any national significance into it."

Sen. Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, the Senate Republican leader, said Saltonstall erred by entering televised campaign debates with Harrington.

"It seems to have been decided on the basis of charm and charisma," said Scott. Harrington succeeds the late William H. Bates, a Republican who served in Congress for 19 years.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said the election was important for what it demonstrated about voter attitudes on the war and defense issues.

"It's not unlike what I see in my state and around the country," Kennedy said.

"The main issue was the war," Sen. J.W. Fulbright, D-Ark., said on the Senate floor. "It ought to be a signal to our political leaders on both sides."

Variety of Services Provided By Student Union Caterers

By MARGARET ANDREWS
Staff Reporter

Planning a luncheon for 10 people or managing a dinner for 1,000 - this is the range of activity demanding the talents of Mrs. Connie Nanartonis, catering supervisor for the first floor dining rooms of the Student Union.

Her job, which is to oversee all activities connected with the Dukes, Berkshire, Bristol, Hampshire, Essex, Suffolk and Commonwealth Rooms, includes hiring help, giving orders to the cook and confirming reservations for the dining rooms.

Purchasing the food in conjunction with the other food services in the Union, Mrs. Nanartonis also uses the salad and other departments from the Hatch, although she does have her own catering chef.

In addition to meals, Mrs. Nanartonis supervises any coffee hour and all types of receptions, including weddings. For conference groups, which are her biggest "clients", she must plan at least a month in advance.

Mrs. Nanartonis concentrates on pleasing her customers, shaping their plans with her knowledge of protocol. She must know such practicalities as how to seat guests at a head table or what arrangements to make for ordering flowers. She must also adapt the wishes of her customers to the technical capabilities of the rooms. By use of moveable screens for example, the dining rooms may be made smaller or larger to accommodate the size of the group.

Catering supervisor for seven years, Mrs. Nanartonis explained how she initiated the Commonwealth Dining Room lunch line. A few years ago she made coffee and doughnuts available in the morning in one of the smaller rooms and soon began receiving requests to enlarge the service to include sandwiches at noontime. When requests increased, she expanded the service into the lunchline, open from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., Monday through Friday. Mrs. Nanartonis estimates that she now has at least 300 regular diners in the Commonwealth Room every day.

Students Protest At Boston English

BOSTON (AP) - A group of protesting, bearded youths lost a battle Wednesday with students at Boston English High School as they tried to prevent the students from entering the building.

The group of about 20 protestors lined up in front of the school doors, urging students to boycott classes. Police said the group represented itself as belonging to Students for a Democratic Society.

Witnesses said the fighting began when several boys carrying football gear tried to break through the line. About 50 students joined in the fracas and several hundred more looked on.

After several brief skirmishes, the group dispersed, carrying along one of their members who was injured in the scuffle. Several girls were among the group.

A teacher at the school, received a gash on the head when he tried to help a student who was being shoved away from the front doors of the school.

Several students were treated for minor injuries at the school infirmary.

String Quartet to Perform

New England String Quartet: L. to R. B. Gimpel, T. Arm, B. DiCecco, R. Coleman.

The New England String Quartet, in residence at the University of Connecticut, will appear in concert in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. Friday as the first event on the University Concert Association Chamber Music Series.

The quartet, while young in years, has established itself as one of the finer string ensembles on the east coast. During the past several seasons, the New England String Quartet has given series of concerts at its own campus in Storrs, Conn. as well as a highly successful European tour last year.

Plans for the future include a second tour of Europe this season, including visits to Scandinavia, Great Britain and Germany.

Friday evening's concert marks the quartet's first visit to the University of Massachusetts.

Members of the New England String Quartet are Bronislaw Gimpel, first violin; Theodore Arm, second violin; Robert Coleman, viola; and Bruno DiCecco, cello. For its debut appearance at UMass, the ensemble will perform String Quartet in D Major, Opus 76, no. 5, by Haydn; String Quartet No. 6 by Bartok; and String Quartet in B flat, Opus 130, by Beethoven.

Reserved tickets for this concert are now available from the University's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be sold at Bowker Auditorium box office the night of the concert, telephone 545-2149.

Brook Urges Withdrawal Of Haynsworth Nomination

Sen. Edward W. Brooke urged President Nixon Wednesday to withdraw his nomination of Clement F. Haynsworth to the Supreme Court.

The Massachusetts Republican made his plea to Nixon in a letter released shortly after the Senate Judiciary Committee put off a vote on Haynsworth for at least a week.

Although there has been criticism of Haynsworth from both sides of the Senate aisle, Brooke is the first Republican to call for withdrawal of the nomination.

He told Nixon that mounting sentiment among both Democrats and Republicans pointed to the possibility of an "embarrassingly" close vote if not actual rejection.

It was understood that Brooke acted without consulting Republican Senate leaders and that he hoped to jar loose further demands for withdrawal of the nomination from his GOP colleagues.

Brooke, only Negro in the Senate told the President he had acted after his own review of Haynsworth's business dealings and Federal Court decisions in civil rights cases.

Green Berets Return to U.S. After Cases Dismissed

TRAVIS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) - Freed of charges that they murdered an alleged Vietnamese double agent, seven members of the Army's Green Beret Special Forces came back to the United States Wednesday with denial that there even had been a killing.

Just before they scattered on 30-day leaves, Col. Robert B. Rheault was asked if he had been in charge of executing the Vietnamese, Thai Khac Chuyen. He replied to newsmen: "There has not been any substantiation that such an individual ever existed."

Rheault, 43, former commander of all Green Berets in Vietnam, said, "That is correct," when asked if he denied there had been a slaying.

Asked if he knew "the alleged dead man," he replied, "No." The other six posed with the colonel for pictures, but let him do the talking.

The eighth accused Green Beret, Sgt. 1C Alvin L. Smith of Naples, Fla., against whom charges also were dismissed Monday, took a later flight home.

Henry B. Rothblatt, New York attorney for two of the men, met the seven and told newsmen it was Smith who had gone to top Army authorities with the story of the alleged killing.

The Army said Smith's paper processing was delayed and this was why he took a later flight. "Smith was afraid the others were going to knock him off," Rothblatt said.

The charges against all eight were dismissed on orders of Secretary of the Army Stanley R. Resor, who said the Central Intelligence Agency would not permit its people to testify.

In Washington Wednesday, presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said President Nixon had approved the CIA decision and the Army made its dismissal move after being informed of the Nixon-approved CIA decision.

Ziegler said no one at the White House "exerted persuasion" on the CIA or the Army while the matter was under consideration.

At his brief news conference soon after their jet liner landed here at 4:30 a.m., Rheault was asked if he thought "the Vietnamese who was killed was a close political ally of President Thieu" and "do you think this might have resulted in the case being brought against you."

'There was no conclusive evidence that the indicidual was ever killed," Rheault answered, 'and there is certainly no indication anywhere that the alleged victim was connected with President Thieu in any way."

The colonel observed that "war is a nasty business, with a lot of high-minded objectives, like freedom and fighting the aggressor to justify killing people," and concluded this incident "would better be forgotten. . .so long as people remember that we were exonerated."

Asked if he would be willing to return to Vietnam, Rheault said: 'I am a soldier with 26 years of experience, a professional, and would be happy to go back and do my duty."

Those who came home with Rheault were Capt. Robert F. Marasco, 27, Bloomfield, N.J.; Maj. Thomas C. Middleton Jr. 29, Jefferson, S.C.; Maj. David Crew,33 Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Capt. Leland J. Brumley, 27, Duncan, Okla.; Capt. Budge E. Williams, 27, Athens, Ga., and CWO2 Edward M. Boyle, 26, New York.

They flew on a chartered jetliner that brought 219 persons here.

SWA Commences Second Session

Southwest Assembly began its second year with a meeting Tuesday night. The officers briefly spoke about the functions of the Assembly to newly elected members. President Larry Kravitz stressed that one of the main duties of the assemblyman is to communicate with his dorm government and residents of his dorm.

Also important to the success of the Assembly is the participation of assemblymen and Southwest residents on the standing committees. These committees include Finance (controls the budget), Legislative (to work on the proposed 24 hour open house policy) Academic (concerned with study halls, tutorials and lectures), Communications (in charge of publicity) Program (in charge of cultural and social events) and Services (concerned with food services, housing and living conditions).

Any Southwest Resident interested in working for the Assembly committees should apply at the Southwest Student Office in Coolidge Lobby.

The next meeting of Southwest Assembly will be held Tuesday night, October 7, at 7:00 p.m. in Hampshire Dining Commons #5. All residents of Southwest who have an interest in student government are welcome to attend.

Senators Debate Vietnam, Call for National Unity

WASHINGTON (AP) - Republican leaders, renewing appeals for national unity on Vietnam, quoted President Nixon Wednesday as reiterating he refuses to be "the first president to preside over an American defeat."

The Senate's debate on Vietnam escalated, however, with new calls for withdrawal, countered by warnings from Republican Sens. John G. Tower of Texas and Barry Goldwater of Arizona that new military moves should be undertaken to win the war.

Tower said that unless the North Vietnamese make new moves for peace within the next few days the United States should consider resuming the bombing of North Vietnam halted 11 months ago by the Johnson administration as it sought to get the Paris peace talks rolling.

Expressing belief a military victory is possible, Goldwater said "it is high time we told the people in Paris to fish or cut bait."

Three Democrats, Sens. J. W. Fulbright of Arkansas, Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, and Frank Church of Idaho, rejected GOP leader Hugh Scott's call for a 60-day moratorium on criticism of Nixon's efforts.

Fulbright, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, broke nine months of virtual silence on the war. "The time has come now when, with the best of spirits we should try to develop this issue," he said.

Fulbright said he would refuse to heed Scott's moratorium plea "until I become convinced this administration has taken the decision to extricate us from this war."

Delaware's Potent Offense Invades Alumni Stadium

Mid-Atlantic Conf. Camps to be Tough

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Assistant Sports Editor

Backed by an awesome passing and running offense, but coming off a discouraging last-period loss to Villanova, the University of Delaware invades Alumni Stadium for a football clash with the Redmen on Saturday afternoon at 1:30.

The Blue Hens virtually blew their game with Villanova for they were riding a 33-7 lead entering the fourth period only to see it disappear as the Wildcats registered 23 points in the final quarter for a 36-33 victory.

It's tough to score 36 points and lose, but lose or not, the Delaware offense always comes through. It tallied 52 points in its season opener against Gettysburg and last season it led the nation's College Division teams in average yards gained rushing per game with 316. Presently the Blue Hens are averaging 564 yards per game with 264 on the ground and 300 through the air.

The running backs are light but are extremely talented, as their statistics prove. At right half is 5'8-175 lb. senior Sam Brickley, who gained 440 yards last year, most of them in the second half. He leads the team in rushing so far with 125 yards on a 9.6 average.

Left halfback is the job of 5'10-180 lb. junior Dick Kelley who ran up 804 yards in his sophomore season, 217 of them against UMass. Adding depth at halfback is Dan McGee, a 6'1-187 lb. junior.

Junior Chuck Hall, 5'10-198 lb., owns the fullbacking slot. His 1,019 yards gained on the ground last year, in addition to his nine touchdowns earned him ECAC Division II Sophomore of the Year honors. Thus far in '69, he has been used more than twice as much as any other Blue Hen back and has responded with 103 yards.

In charge of the offensive show is 5'1-200 lb. Tom DiMuzio, a senior quarterback who set a Delaware record for total offense last year with 1,596 yards. Against Villanova last weekend, he established two more Blue Hen records for most yards gained passing in one game (347) and most yards total offense (337, because he lost ten yards rushing).

DiMuzio has a capable replacement in the person of Bob Buckley, a 5'10-175 lb. junior, who passed for a touchdown and ran for another in the last five minutes of the Blue Hen victory over the Redmen last fall.

On the receiving end of DiMuzio's passes will be 5'10-18 lb. senior Ron Withelder at split end and 6'5-205 lb. Pat Walker at right end.

Withelder accounted for 626 yds on 34 receptions in '68. Walker is currently the team leader in receiving with 134 yards on five catches. Backing up Walker at right end is 6'3-205 lb. senior Mark Lipson, a two-year veteran.

The offensive tackles for the Blue Heas are 6'2-215 lb. junior Joe Shetzler and 5'-220 lb. Yancy Phillips, also a junior. Subbing for both tackles will be senior Jack Ruch, 6'1-206 lbs.

Mickey Kwiatkowski, a 5'11-195 lb. senior, and Conway Hayman, a 6'4-235 lb. junior, are the guards. Center spot belongs to 6'-225 lb. Chip Vaccarino, a senior. Adding reserve strength at center is 6'2-200 lb. junior Jon Geisler.

On defense Delaware is experienced and bolstered by 15 returning lettermen. It employs a 4-3 setup.

Manning the defensive tackle positions are junior Chuck Avery, 6'3-220 lb. and senior Pete Cornelius has been a Blue Hen regular for two years. Depth is scarce at this position.

Playing the end posts are 6'-200 lb. senior Bruce Hanley and 6'-190 lb. junior Mark Blair.

The linebacking trio is headed by 6'4 junior John Favero, a 215 pounder, and is rounded out by 6'-184 lb. Dick Keller, a senior, and Ray Holcomb, a 6'-210 lb junior.

Linebacker JOHN FAVERO (top) and quarterback TOM DIMUZIO (bottom), are only two of Delaware's proven stars. The Blue Hens should provide UMass' toughest competition up to date.

Favero is a bonafide star, shining brightly from his middle linebacking spot. He led the defense in tackles in '68. This is Keller's first season at linebacker, having put in two years' duty as a defensive halfback.

The defensive backfield is deep, as is evidenced by the presence of six lettermen. They are junior Ron Klein, 5'11-170 lbs., senior Joe Purzycki, 5'11-185 lbs. and junior Sonny Merkel, 6'1-170 lbs. as cornerbacks; junior Pete Sundheim, 5'10-190 lbs., senior Bob Masin, 5'7-189 lbs. and junior Bruce Fad, 6'-195 lbs. as safeties. Purzycki is the Blue Hen captain. Among the six, the starters will probably be Klein, Purzycki, Sundheim and Masin.

It remains to be seen if the Delaware defense can recover from last Saturday's embarrassment in time to face this Saturday's reality.

Overall the Blue Heas appear to be a better club than their '68 team which was Middle Atlantic Conference champ and winner of the Lambert Trophy. An exciting game with this exciting team is anticipated.

Soccer Team Prepares for B.C. Clash; Looking for First Victory of Season

By RAY ESONIS
Staff Reporter

In an attempt to break last week's scoring drought against Maine, the UMass soccer team plays host to Boston College this Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

B.C., having carried soccer for only three years, is not considered too strong. The Eagles lost their only encounter of the year so far to Tufts, 8-3, and are not expected to be much improved over last year.

In 1968, the Redmen set an all-time UMass record for the largest margin of victory in a game, when they trounced B.C., 8-0.

The Eagles, however, cannot be taken too lightly. Two men to watch will be left wing Alonzo Villegas and halfback Ken Daggett. Villegas, who hails from Colombia, and Daggett, a native of Connecticut, were starters and top performers on last year's squad.

As far as Redman injuries are concerned, Tom Malone and Dav Dec are still out of action. Also lost for Saturday's clash is sophomore fullback Paul Slack. Coach Peter Broaca will thus start Greg Hamilton in the goal as Malone's replacement, and Dick McCarron will take up Slack's position.

Despite last Saturday's disheartening loss to Maine, Coach Broaca is still confident that the squad has got what it takes to win. In commenting on that loss, Broaca felt that, "we all took the game too lightly. Maine in the past has been poor, and we were unable to recognize their sudden improvement."

After the Boston College contest, the Redmen take on three solid opponents in UConn, Trinity, and Rhode Island. Last year Trinity was rated third in New England, and went to the NCAA competition. Broaca feels it is imperative that his men defeat B.C. so that they can have some momentum going into these tough matches.

"Our attitude is good and I'm pleased with our progress," states the second-year coach. "In the past we've dominated action for most of the game, but just haven't been able to score."

Broaca is hoping that his sophomore studded lineup can forget that first defeat and gain the momentum Saturday which will be needed to carry them through the season.

Soccer Co-Captains RICK MATUSZCZAK and DICK MEYER lead the Redmen against Boston College this Saturday. The squad is coming off a 2-1 defeat at hands of Maine, but are looking for a big win over the Eagles.

Donlin, 'MacLean Honored by 'M' Club

Even in a lackluster performance there are good performances and two of them from the U-Mass 16-6 loss to Buffalo were honored yesterday at the weekly Varsity 'M' Club in the Newman Center.

Sophomore Bob Donlin, who appears to be firmly entrenched in his offensive tackle spot for a couple of years to come was named the outstanding offensive player of the week as selected by his coaches. Donlin was superb as a blocker and was instrumental in springing UMass backs on several long runs, all of which went for naught.

Senior linebacker John MacLean who was honored twice last year at 'm' club luncheons, was named outstanding defensive performer, MacLean was the bulwark of a defensive team that was forced to play much of the second half.

Other events on the agenda included a scouting report of a Delaware team previewed elsewhere on this page by assistant coach Bob Graham. In addition to giving glowing descriptions of the 'Fightin Blue Hens', Graham revealed the Delaware motto displayed prominently in the Hen dressing room. Boldly pronounced are the words, Graham relates, "The Blue Hens, the giants of eastern football." And the coach added, "They really believe that slogan."

Head Coach Vic Fusia reviewed the filmed highlights of the Buffalo game, which was a pretty short reel. Fusia, among other things, branded many of the mistakes made by the Redmen, as "mistakes of inexperience." He added, "They are mistakes we feel will be corrected."

And as he has done all season, Fusia reiterated, "This is going to be a good team. You can count on that."

Fusia emphasized the strength of Buffalo throughout his talk, saying "personnel wise they should be a couple of touchdowns better than most teams they play."

The coach had good words for among others guard Pierre Marchando. who he termed "a developing pretty good guard", end John Hulecki, who he said would be "not just another player, but a real fine football player" and sophomore fullback Dick Cummings, who told people to "watch in the coming weeks, because he'll be a good one."

Lederle on Classes. "Not My Decision"

UMass President John W. Lederle said yesterday that it's up to the faculty senate, and only the faculty senate, to call off classes on October 15. The President said he does not have the power to cancel classes.

The President made these comments following a meeting with Student Senate President Bruce Balboni.

Balboni presented Dr. Lederle with the Student Senate's resolution, passed unanimously Wed. night, which calls for "the appropriate authorities to cancel all classes and administrative functions of the University on October 15, to allow members of the University community to extend the impact of the moratorium to the surrounding larger community."

Dr. Lederle told the DAILY COLLEGIAN the "only the faculty senate has the authority to alter the academic calendar."

The President said he agrees with the faculty senate's resolution concerning October 15, which left the decision whether nor not to hold classes up to individual professors and students.

"There are many students and faculty who want to go to class on that day, and they shouldn't be prevented from doing so," Dr. Lederle said. "I think the faculty senate's resolution gave us the flexibility we need."

The President said he told Balboni that he doesn't make the calendar and that the students should express their feelings to the faculty senate.

Dr. Lederle said that he plans to conduct a normal day's work in Whitmore on October 15.

October 15th Plans Aired Under Lights of CBS News

By LOUIS DIMONACO
Asst. News Editor

The Martin Luther King Jr. Social Action Council held a teach-in, concerning the Oct. 15 War Moratorium, amid the camera light of CBS News and shouts of "Bring em home" by more than 900 UMass students. The Moratorium plans were discussed by representatives from colleges and groups in the area. As the discussion focused on the Nixon Administration's attitude toward the moratorium and the meaning of the recent cutbacks in Vietnam troop strength, the teach-in became a rally as students shouted "Come on home, the war is over."

The programs opened with a moment of silence in respect for nine UMass graduates killed in the Vietnam War. Following this Sam Johnson emphasized Nixon's statement that "under no circumstances will I be affected by it (the Moratorium) at all".

Johnson went on to say that the Moratorium was organized "Not to damn the Nation, but to save it". The call for immediate troop withdrawal from Vietnam is "not just a student thing, nor just a local movement, but one involving everyone throughout the nation."

The plans for Oct. 15, include a rally on the UMass campus, door to door canvassing of houses in the area, and a rally and march to the Northampton Draft Board, concluding with a candlelight service.

The University response was cited in the case of Dr. Robert Gages statement that the University Health Services would run on a skeleton crew, and that the UMass English Department voted to cancel classes on the day of the Moratorium.

The president of the Student Senate at Amherst College explained his campus's plans for the Moratorium and the effort that was being made to "get our timid faculty off their asses and do something"

A representative from Mount Holyoke College said that a student petiton was being circulated and in many dorms the response was 100 %. The Mount Holyoke Faculty will be asked to cancel all classes slated for Oct. 15. Among the student s from the South Hadley High School, there are at least 100 students willing to stay out of school that day, and help with Moratorium canvassing.

A representative from the Valley Peace Center spoke of a luncheon planned for business men in the area and "surprise speakers" to meet the business men on a "cold basis."

Jerry Meisner of the Physics Department, in his opening remarks, sarcastically praised the Faculty Senate "for the stroog stand they took" on this issue.

Meisner went on to say that "it is the job of the university to de-

Massive Drug Bust Nails 31 in W. Mass

By DON LeBLANC
Senior Reporter

The biggest wide-spread drug raids in recent Western Massachusetts history Thursday night netted state and local police dozens of suspects, including two from Amherst, and large quantities of illegal drugs. The arrests the result of four months of undercover work by "hippie" state police, are expected to last for the "next few days", according to state police in Northampton.

Thursday night arrests included 31 in Holyoke, including a 16-year old boy and one girl; one person in Northampton and one in South Hadley. Police said several more arrests were expected.

Officials said the raids had netted some of the larger drug dealers in the area. One raid netted $1000 of drugs including heroin and LSD.

Names of those arrested were not released Thursday night, and police declined to name other towns in which arrests would be made.

Officials said arrests in connection with the raids will not be made on the UMass campus.

Police in Northampton expressed concern early Tuesday night when a Springfield radio station announced that arrests were being made. According to a state police sergeant the "pinches were just starting to be made", and he said that many drug law violators would probably dispose of the drugs as a result. But, he added, the raids would continue.

The raids were under the supervision of the State Police Criminal Information Bureau, whose undercover agents had been gathering information for the past few months, according to CIB head Lieutenant William Gross.

At the current rate of troop withdrawal the United States will be out of Vietnam by 1978 or "half way to 1984", Meisner said.

Gil Salk, executive secretary for the MLK Social Action Council, said that "the time for game playing is over. Last week's Vietnam death toll was the lowest since August of 1967." The toll of American dead in Vietnam this past week was 95.

Salk stated that Nixon has not cut the draft quota for the latter part of this year, but instead has spread it out over the last three months of 1969.

In reference to the troop withdrawal, Salk said, that there are still over one half million troops in Vietnam, and the proposed withdrawal plans of Nixon, will be completed by the end of 1970 will "at the rate of approximately 100 American dead per week."

The students, along with Gil Salk shouted "Bring em home" and "Come on home, the war is over", as they waved the sign for victory and peace.

W. Blast Detenated

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) - The United States detonated a one-megaton thermonuclear device 4,000 feet underground on the remote Aleutian island of Amchitka Thursday, without setting off the earthquake some scientists had feared.

The blast set off only 700 miles from the Russian mainland, registered 6.5 on the Richter scale, a device for measuring shock waves of seismic disturbances. It was exactly the reading the Atomic Energy Commission had predicted.

"Everything went just about as expected," said Robert Thalgott, AEC test manager on the island. "We're in real good shape."

Student Senate Passes Bill of Student Rights

The Student Senate passed Bill of Student Rights and amended it as Article III in the Student Government Constitution. The Bill, along with the Constitution, will go on campus-wide referendum Thursday, October 9, 1969.

Among the guarantees presented in the Bill is the assurance that no student "shall be denied the right to receive and express ideas, opinions, or facts . . . nor shall any student be denied the right to associate with whomever he wishes, or to invite and hear exponents of any and all viewpoints."

The Bill also guarantees that "no student shall be made to suffer any University penalty, except upon conviction through due process, before the appropriate Senate approved judicial agency of which at least half the membership shall be students."

Attention was focused on the need for a well-defined Bill of student Rights when the events in Dwight House, concerning dorm autonomy, came into question in the fall of 1968.

Senator Dawn Dudash charged the Student Government Affairs Committee with drafting the resulting Bill of Student Rights for inclusion in the revised Constitution.

As stated in the final report of the Constitution Sub-committee the Bill of Student Rights is "a logical step in the progression of student government and student rights which began over twenty years ago and continues to this day."

SUG Board Discusses, Resolves, Student Issues

Last night the Student Union Governing Board convened to discuss some of the present student problems and issues. The Board has authority to deal with many of the activities and policies concerning the Student Union.

At the meeting, it was decided by a majority vote that the Student Union will not remain open for twenty-four hours as of October 11. The 24-hour policy was a test plan, running for thirty days only. A published report by a reviewing sub-committee indicated little student use of its facilities between the hours of 12:00 midnight and 6:00 a.m.

For example, on September 30 four people were reported in the building between the hours of one and six. October 1 produced 14 people between those same hours. Because of so few students, it is not feasible to pay janitors and security guards during these hours. Therefore the Union will operate on its previous hours of 7:00 a.m. - 11:00 p.m., Sunday through Thursday, with a 1:00 a.m. close on Friday and Saturday.

Also passed at the meeting was a motion to let the telephone company use the Union to collect bills. Soon the students will be able to pay their phone bills in the Cashier's Office, instead of the Newman Center.

Clarification was also made as to who may use the table space in the lobby of the Union. Any RSO group may sell anything except food and tickets in the lobby without permission. A non-RSO group will need permission of the Board. A non-University Organization cannot use the space at all. All the student groups will be charged $1.00 a day for the lobby use.

Other items discussed were space allocations in the new Student Center, barber shop fees, and a proposed raise in student fees. Also selling and usage requests for the Union were granted to various organizations.

The Governing Board also passed a resolution favored by President Sander Ross and secretary Bob Twiss, which declared its support for the October 15 Moratorium.

UMass Reading and Study Program Decentralized

The four-week Reading and Study Skills Improvement Course begins October 7th, 7:30 p.m., in Rooms 226-228 at the School of Education. At this time there will be registration, an introduction to the course and preliminary tests of reading rate and skills. During the remaining seven sessions, (Tuesdays and Thursdays, 7:30 - 9:00 p.m. during October), students may meet in whichever of three locations is most convenient. Classes will be available at Southwest, Orchard Hill and Northeast. Specific rooms will be announced at the opening session.

The Central office of the College Reading Program is on the 2nd floor (front) of Montague House where information and individual help are available. Equipment in the office includes individual Reading-Pacers, Tachistoscopic devices and reading manuals. Call Margaret Frerichs at 5-2048 for information and appointments.

Balboni Says:

New Student Panel "Mere Tokenism"

Student Senate President Bruce Balboni and Vice President Cindi Olken have been appointed to a 17-member panel of students, faculty and administrators to establish procedures for electing student members to the boards of trustees of state colleges and universities.

Also appointed to the committee by Governor Francis W. Sargent was UMass Dean of Students William F. Field.

The election of student trustees was authorized this summer by legislation proposed by Sargent.

But Balboni, in a convocation address earlier this year, called the plan "mere tokenism", implying that the one student's opinion would be only buried by the board.

Sargent has indicated that he wants the trustee elections to take place before the end of the first semester.

Oklahoma Women Return from Paris Meeting

BOSTON (AP) - Seven Oklahoma women returning from a Paris meeting with North Vietnamese officials said Thursday they were promised information by mail about their missing husbands, shot down over that country.

Mrs. Barbara Fieszel of Tulsa, spokesman for the group, said the North Vietnamese "assured us that they would ask information from Hanoi about our men and would notify us as soon as possible."

She said she was "confident we will hear something as a result of this meeting."

The women changed planes here en route to Tulsa.

In addition to Mrs. Fieszel, the group included Mrs. Carol Monlux, Mrs. Jana Walker, both of Tulsa; Mrs. Clara Diehl of Stillwater, Mrs. Berry Stowers, Mrs. Letty Smith and Mrs. Jean Alle, all of Oklahoma City. Mrs. Diehl's mother-in-law, Mrs. Calvin Diehl Sr. of Bartlesville, also was in the party.

Youth and Legislators Hash Grass Laws

(ACP) - THE BATTALION, Texas A & M University, Grass was the topic for a rap session between a group of young people calling themselves the "Beautiful Peoples' Republic" and a group of Austin, Texas, legislators which included one Senator.

The spokesmen for the group of students from the University of Texas set up a table, chairs, and a sound system, and proceeded to ask questions concerning the stringent marijuana laws, in particular seeking the justification for making the penalties for possession of marijuana "the same as those assess ed in some murder and rape cases."

The representatives praised the group for "demonstrating their sincerity" by wearing shirts and shoes and "approaching the Legislature in an orderly fashion," but announced themselves in general to be "unalterably opposed" to the use of marijuana and drugs.

One representative, when asked about the medical justification for the laws, admitted that he "did not have all the information on the subject, but that marijuana should not be legalized just because cigarettes and alcohol are legal" while another said she thought the youths were "incredibly preoccupied with marijuana laws" and should direct their energies to other social problems also.

UMass Theatre Season Opens October 16th

The University of Massachusetts Theatre season is international in scope this year, offering works by two German, one French, and two American playwrights. The season promises color and spectacle, delight and dimension.

The season will open on homecoming weekend, October 16th, with Bertold Brecht's "The Good Woman of Setzuan," directed by Jim Young, Chairman of the Theatre and Oral Interpretation Area of the Department of Speech. It is a modern parable set in China, the story of Shen Te, the prostitute of Setzuan.

In December, Buchner's play "Danton's Death" will be directed by Assistant Professor Gary Stewart. It is a dramatic exploration of the processes and consequences of revolution -- a work which Herbert Blau has called a "truly revolutionary" play, and others have conversely designated a "fascist" play..

Three departments of the University will be cooperating in the production of "West Side Story", scheduled to open in March. Music, Dance, and Theatre faculty and students will be involved in creating the musical, which has been called a "ritual of urban violence." "West Side Story", by Laurents, Sondheim, and Bernstein, will be directed by Assistant Professor Marya Bednerik.

Two major productions will be offered during the Spring semester. In April, three related plays by Edward Albee will be directed by Assistant Professor Vincent Brann, "The Sandbox", "Box", and "Quotations from Chairman Mao Tse-Tung." In these three short plays, Albee turns his witty but savage eye upon contemporary America, and his view is one of widespread decay in every major sector of the social landscape: ethics, morals, religion, art, politics. This bill of entirely unconventional one-act plays, taken as a unit, makes a penetrating comment on modern American life as seen by one of America's least satisfied and most theatrically satisfying young dramatists.

The final major production of the year will be "Becket", by Jean Anouilk, directed by Assistant Professor Harry Mahnken. "Becket" has been described as "a violently emotional drama that probes the changing relationship between two young men - between two close friends bound together by similar pride of flesh and spirit who become deadly enemies as they pursue their separate destinies -- that of king ...and saint." "Becket" will open early in May.

In addition, University Theatre will produce two plays for young audiences. Dorothy Aldrich, Instructor of Children's Theatre, will direct both plays. The first, "The Doctor in Spite of Himself", came originally from the pen of the classic French comedy writer, Moliere and has been freely adapted in this new version for audiences from third to eighth grade. It has to do with a woodcutter, turned doctor, who never will "prescribe" unless beaten, but who, in spite of medical ignorance, performs a miraculous cure and wins the admiration of everyone, including even his hot-tempered wife. The play will open November 14.

The second Children's Theatre production will be "Mr. Popper's Penguins," originally a children's book by Richard and Florence Atwater. It is concerned with the delightful dilemma of a modern family which falls heir to two Antarctic penguins. It is scheduled for production in March.

The season's plays were chosen by University Theatre faculty and students. All performances will be in Bartlett Theater, University of Massachusetts.

Any student who has already applied for financial aid for the current academic year and who is interested in typing for the DAILY COLLEGIAN should see Mr. John Seigrist in the Placement and Financial Aid office in Whitmore, immediately.

SLY AND THE FAMILY STONE

Sly and Family Stone Headline Homecoming Events this Month

When they played at the Newport Jazz Festival this summer, several hundred disappointed fans, who couldn't get tickets, broke through a 10 foot section of wooden fence, swarmed through 21,000 spectators, over chairs and railings and rushed the stage; and now they are coming to UMass. On Saturday, October 18, Homecoming '69 will present Sly and the Family Stones.

Two concerts will be presented in Curry Hicks Cage, one at 7 p.m. and one at 10 p.m. Tickets, which will go on sale at the Student Union Ticket Office Tuesday, October 7, will be $3.50 each.

Although formed only a little more than a year ago in San Francisco, the group of seven has already appeared in major clubs and concert halls in Las Vegas, Chicago, Los Angeles, New York and San Francisco. Their hit records include "Dance to the Music,", "Everyday People", "M'lady", and "Hot Fun in the Summer Time."

The group was organized by Sly Stone who, although only in his early twenties has already achieved success as a composer, producer and disc jockey on a top rhythm and blues station in San Francisco. Sly writes most of the group's songs, including all the cuts on their "a Whole New Thing" album, as well as "Dance to the Music."

Other members of Sly and the Family Stones are singer and guitarist, Freddie Stone; Cynthia Robinson, the girl with the trumpet; singer and bass player, Larry Graham Jr.; drummer Greg "Hand Feet" Errico; Rosie Stone, player of the electric piano and the newest member of the group; and saxiphonist Jerry Martini.

Confusion Revolves Around Wooldridge Court Martial

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Army's provost marshal brushed aside the court-martial record of the No. 1 enlisted man, senators were told Thursday, and refused to permit a probe of charges he led a band of racketeers in uniform.

An Army investigator, Lt.Col. Jack Pruett, said he was told by Maj. Gen. Carl C. Turner that Turner had consulted with Gen. Harold K. Johnson, then Army Chief of Staff, in halting an investigation into the affairs of William O. Wooldridge, then sargeant major of the Army.

"He's just a good old country boy," Pruett quoted Turner as saying. Pruett said he had recommended to Turner, the provost marshal, that Wooldridge be allowed to resign or retire from the Army if there was to be no investigation into allegations of multimillion dollar thefts and conspiracy to manipulate currency.

"The general said many people are accused of many things," Pruett related. "Aand that was the end of the discussion."

Pruett told the Senate investigations subcommittee he had informed Turner that serious accusations of criminal conduct had been made against Wooldridge by members of Army commands on three continents.

He said the charges included involvement in alleged large-scale thefts from the funds, equipment and food and liquor supplies of noncommissioned officers clubs.

At the time accusations against Wooldridge began to reach high-level Army circles in Washington, in 1967, Pruett commanded the Army's Criminal Investigations Division in the Pentagon, reporting directly to the provost marshal.

Both Turner and Johnson are now retired. Wooldridge is serving as sargeant major at White Sands Missile Range in New Mexico.

Turner resigned abruptly this year from his new Nixon administration job as Chief United States Marshall when parts of a renewed Department of Defense probe into the alleged theft ring leaked out.

A few days later, the Army revoked its award to Wooldridge of the Distinguished Service Medal. It said he did not deserve it.

Pruett testified he had heard rumors which he could not confirm, that Turner intervened personally with the U.S. Customs Service to prevent prosecution of Wooldridge and other sargeants or charges of attempting to smuggle duty-free liquor out of Vietnam.

Pruett said customs officials in Hawaii reported they found the liquor hidden aboard the personal aircraft of Gen. Creighton Abrams, U.S. commander in Vietnam. Pruett said he didn't believe Abrams had any knowledge of the alleged smuggling plan.

Hoffa Denied Parole

WASHINGTON (AP) - James R. Hoffa, imprisoned president of the two- million- member Teamsters Union, was denied parole Thursday by the U. S. Parole Board.

Parole Board Chairman George J. Reed said the action was taken by all eight members after reviewing Hoffa's records from Lewisburg, Pa., federal prison, where he is serving an eight-year sentence for jury-tampering.

Hoffa would have been eligible for parole Nov. 6 - two years and eight months of his way into the prison sentence.

The board set March 1971 as the date for a review of its denial of the union leader's application.

Hoffa also faces a five-year term on a Chicago conviction for Teamsters Union pension fraud, but that case is on appeal and has yet to be decided by the Supreme Court.

That sentence was imposed to run consecutively with the one for jury-tampering.

The refusal of parole was the latest of a long series of legal setbacks for the 56-year-old unionist, who never has relinquished the presidency of the Teamsters. A union election in 1966 extended his term until 1971. His longtime friend, Frank Fitzsimmons is acting as a caretaker.

FROM OUR SIDE

Orchestrated Raps

Last Labor Day, the average student somberly contemplating an autumn at the University of Massachusetts could probably have described a geodesic dome, or, for that matter, a Free University, about as precisely as he could outline the Kama Sutra. Nevertheless, Free University City, affectionately known as FUC, has sprouted up beneath the concrete and brick intimidation of the towers of Southwest, like David at the feet of Goliath. One almost expects a menacing flash of light from the towers to send the colony of domes scooting off into Hadley, but in fact UMass, unlike a few paranoid newspaper editors, seems genuinely interested in its strange progeny.

The significance of the Free University is a matter of varied opinion. Many of those instrumental in its creation see it as an alternative to the prefabricated curricula of a formal education, and in this new application of the community's resources seek to receive an education in spite of their status as college students. Or, if you wish, the plastic domes represent a conspiracy organized by some subversive group (SDS? CPUSA? the Newman Center?) to brainwash the as yet innocent "silent majority" into abandoning their path to an ossified cerebral oblivion. It must be conceded, however, that in a community of 18,000 there are many educational resources (ie, people with something to say) festering in lecture halls who, in congregation beneath the plastic, might orchestrate some really magnificent raps together.

Several Connecticut Valley journals, with inspired omniscient objectivism, have been astoundingly childish in ushering the Free University into the world. Some of the most distinguished drivel, witnessed in the pages of the Springfield Union and the Hampshire Gazette, was downright spellbinding in its reliance on sheer Neanderthal logic, and only contributed to the near-pathological skepticism with which the generations view each other. In all fairness it must be conceded that the otherwise inexplicable initial reaction of the local press may be attributed simply to the project's initials, but people who have tolerated a shockingly obscene war for these many years have little right to moral indignation. Society has asked students for constructive innovation, for positive goals, and for responsible commitment, and the administration in Whitmore has recognized these qualities in the Free University. It is time for the press and people of Massachusetts to do likewise.

Campus Comment

Little or No Representation

On Tuesday, after reading Miss Operacz's fine letter, I am ready to challenge the INDEX which she refers to as "an adventure in publication." I do find the INDEX with colorful pictures but falsehoods are written around them. In particular I quote the introductory comments in the sports section, "Sport is the strength of a gymnast, the endurance of a runner, the speed of a swimmer, the timing of a pole vaulter, the power of a tackle, the cleverness of a coach, the teamwork of crew: the skill of an athlete." After reviewing the section, I find all but the tackling segment of this comment missing. I personally am the captain of the varsity gymnastics team and I see our sport used in filling the description of the section to follow but I see no mention of it in reality throughout the remainder of the book (the same is true of the other activities mentioned except for football).

I offer the following statistics for the student body's consideration in evaluating "our" yearbook. There are roughly 18 different men's varsity athletic teams and that many freshman squads, there also are about 4 intercollegiate women's teams. After studying the INDEX, I find six varsity and zero freshman men's teams given any consideration, and also zero women's teams. A quick correlation shows the Index' performance as: Men's sports - .166; women's sports -.000. Anyone can perceive how poorly a job the book's staff did. Furthermore. 13 staff members signed their names to this section, thats 2.16 people per sport or 4.3 people per sports page. A commendable effort (?). Now add to this the fact that the book didn't come to the student body till September (why? who knows..to give us complete coverage, of course, that it). I seriously question the INDEX sports staff's "goals" to use Miss Operacz's description of what the staff has tried to do.

What about the team captains, the outstanding athletes on our school teams, or even more importantly the fellows that got injured giving their finest efforts? What do they have to show for it as far as their senior or 1969 yearbook goes? NOTHING. I'm glad O.J. didn't come here He'd probably go unrecognized.

I believe the INDEX owes every student athlete of last year a sincere apology and explanation. Much of our student funds went into it's publication, so how about it. I appeal to every team captain or member who feels his team got a rotten deal to tell the INDEX. Don't let this misuse of our resources go on.

We, the Tenants...

We, the residents of Mary Lyon House, Northeast Area, protest to conditions under which we and our neighbors are living. The University has not seen fit to supply us with what we consider the minimum equipment necessary for decent living. We do not expect luxury, and we realize that we pay $25. less room rent than students in some areas. However, we insist hthat we should have two bureaus and two desks per room, desk lamps, wastebaskets, drapes, and clean paint! We in the Quad and the majority of the students in the Central Area, now lack the above items.

Our last requests for funds to furnish these and other badly needed items (new furniture for rec rooms, center and lounges) have been overlooked, ignored, or denied. We have chosen the Collegian as a forum in which to present our grievances publicly. We ask all students in the Northeast and Central Areas who share our problem to make their dissatisfaction known through pressure on their area government representatives or by other suitable means.

We must make the Provost, the Treasurer and anyone else with the power to correct this situation aware that we refuse to be the poor relations of the University's showplaces.

THE NORTHEAST AREA CONGRESS

Complacency vs. Stoicism

Go ahead, be pleased with your 'traditional' cement block room. Be very pleased with the missing bureaus and the broken screens and the old brown curtains covering your closet; that is if you've got a curtain. Too bad we don't get new bureaus or the new screens or the new lounge furniture. It's really very stoic of you to live this way. Especially when the money assigned to the Northeast Area is looking good in some new room in Southwest and Orchard Hill. ESPECIALLY WHEN IT'S THE MONEY YOU HELPED TO PUT INTO THIS MASSIVE University. Enjoy your second-rate creations, because no engineer is going to come up here of his own free will and help us. Since the Northeast Area never had a defined and constituted government before now - the other areas were getting thousands of dollars for their 'pleasures.' Did you ever notice how you're always going out of the Northeast Area to see a movie, or to hear a folk singer, or to read a newspaper? We're glad you don't mind old and worn-out furniture, or a dark Quad to walk through at night. Glad even that you remembered your high boots 'cuz the Quad overflows its banks come a few days of rain. Aren't you glad?

NOW, right now, there is a defined and constituted area government. And now, right now, we're not so stoic and happy. Realize now, that all our complacency is not stoicism. It is ridiculous, callous and numb. For the rest of this year, you people of the Northeast Area could care to support a government that will try to change this living and is ready to do it, right NOW. Yeah fellow, we've got some money coming this way if we don't give it away again this year. Are you ready to take part in a big try? Are you ready to give more that your happy nonchalance? Well, then don't sit there and nod your head. You've got people criticizing each other for our good. All different people who are not glad with second-rate, almost-good, or stolen Christmas tree bulbs. If you don't want unity in our Area; if you don't want any better conditions; then the least you could do, would do, would be to know that we are not glad. So sit there and be glad knowing that we are not especially glad with right now.

The Northeast Area Congress

Getting One's Money's Worth

I feel that the opinion expressed in the Daily Collegian as whether or not to close the university on October 15 was totally irresponsible. The fact that the Daily Collegian would ignore those people whose main reason in coming to the university was for an education and advocate a course that would deprive them of this isn't right.

When I received my ibm card billing me for this semester, there were no deductions made for an October 15 moritorium of 1 day or two days in November, etc. etc. I also do not feel that the U.S. is the only country guilty of criminal actions in Vietnam, and I do not want to be forced into showing my support for those so-called doves even if this support is just the absence of my body in class.

Certainly there maybe large numbers of students who will want to disperse into Amherst and other outlying towns on October 15 spouting off like programmed pamphlets. Well if they are so dedicated, then they'll not mind missing their classes for I intend to go to class on October 15. I also not only expect my professors to do the job that they are paid for, but also to fulfill their obligation to me and show up for class.

We're No Illusion

How you 'll doing? Yes my fellow schoolmates the time has come. What you are seeing is a reality. Black people who are seen walking around campus, sitting in classrooms and in the Hatch are real. It is no illusion as some people seem to believe. I hope that by this time people have gotten over the initial shock of being exposed to black people for the first time in their lives.

What I cannot understand is the mass confusion which continues to prevail because of the black faces on campus. White people cannot seem to accept the fact that black people are now a part of this university community. Black people for so long have been systematically excluded and it is now necessary for them to be systematically included to bring about a state of equilibrium. We are still quite a distance from that state of equilibrium.

It is quite difficult for these black students to make the transition from their homes to the white institution anyway, but it is being made even more difficult by reactionary and insensitive people. People are constantly staring at these people and asking all sorts of unethical questions such as, "Why are you here?", or "How did you get here?", and "Why do you do the things you do?"

However this writer can sympathize with this odd expression of behavior being that the "black mystique" is an extremely real thing to those alien to its own cultural roots.

The presence of black people here can be legitimately rationalized, although I don't believe this to be necessary. We have played a very important part in the building of this country. What should amaze you is that we have survived in this society that has done much to exploit and hinder us. My only message to you at this time is that those black people you see are really here and that they are here to stay.

Support Moratorium

October 15th, 1969, is everyone's chance to show what they think of the slaughter going on in Vietnam. And, everyone who is sick of murder and immorality and dirty politics will proclaim that they do! The October 15 Moratorium is calling for the withdrawal of the United States from Vietnam. It is an important step in the anti-war movement, for the people of this country are finally getting down to business in trying to stop the war. The consequences of the Moratorium are of the greatest importance, for it will show President Nixon, who has stated that he is going to ignore it, that we really care! But we need everyone--businessmen and senators alike. For, what would happen if the businessmen don't go to work for a week? Think how the economic system of America would end up And the senators--perhaps they wouldn't attend the Senate on just the day on which President Nixon wants some bills passed. This, then, would be enough to make all those whose eyes and ears are closed, sit up and take notice.

The Vietnam Moratorium, planned by a committee in Washington, is demanding immediate withdrawal from Vietnam. The King Council, on this campus, has planned well its activities for the day. There will be a rally at 9:00 A.M. on the fifteenth, and one in the afternoon in a town building. If this Moratorium fails to work, then there will be two days in November, three in December, and on - until someone realizes that we mean business. The Student Senate has stated that unless the Administration complies with the request, there will be a one day boycott of classes. This is a nationwide campus action--and it will work only with YOUR help.

So all of you who are sick and tired of senseless killing--stand up and prove it! Now it is YOUR turn to show that you care.

"Ordinance" Story Highlights Riot Control Plans

By HERB GOODE
Staff Reporter

The following are excerpts from an article printed in "Ordinance" a magazine of the armed forces, Sept. - Oct. '69 issue. It was entitiled "Riot control 1969", and demonstrates the extent to which the police are going to quell campus unrest.

"Mass and individual violence in ghetto and urban areas. . .has spread to college and high-school campuses. . .The relatively peaceful, non-violent demonstration phases of the civil rights movements of the mid-1960's and of the pacifist 'flower children' largely has been relegated to history.

Increased sniping, ambushing of police, and guerrilla hit-and-run tactics--accompanied by arson and the use of explosives--have forced . . .officials to make drastic revisions in conventional riot-control and crowd-dispersal techniques. . .

At the present time, U. S. law enforcement personnel are being equipped with riot-control weapons and related devices at a rapid rate. In most cases, this equipment is superior to that issued to the military for the same purpose.

In 1967, The Office of the U. S. Attorney General and other government agencies began to urge greater police use of nonlethal riot agents. For the first time, an "official blessing" on the use of tear gas agents was proclaimed.

In the past, . . agencies have relied upon the . . .milder riot agent CN. However, during the past year there was a concentrated effort by the military and other Federal agencies to encourage greater police use of the more potent U. S. Army riot agent, CS.

. . .CS was used the first time. . during the April 1968 disorders in the Nation's Capital. . .

The Peper Fogger, a revolutionary new means of laying down large concentrations of obscuring smoke or CN or CS agents is now being marketed. . .

This device. . .is capable of developing massive concentrations. . It is the fastest, most practical, and most tactically sound means yet developed for police use of tear gas and smoke agents in variable concentrations. . .

The individually carried nonlethal Chemical Mace liquid tear gas projectors are now standard equipment in the majority of medium and major size police agencies in the United States.

. . .Mace CN based formulation has been given a clean bill of health by U. S. Government, police, and medical authorities, as long as normal follow-up precautions are taken. . .

Long a standard police arm in the West, the 12-guage riot shotgun has now become standard patrol-car and riot-issue armament in all sections of the U. S. The variety of sizes in shot loads available, and the rifled slug, make the riot gun the best indicated police weapon for all types of combat situations that occur at city-street ranges. . .

. . .Corporation. . .now is marketing a new 12-guage plastic-projectile round for sniper-barricade situations. This new shotshell round is. . .capable of consistently hitting a standard sized window at ranges up to 100 yards.

The finned plastic projectile is loaded with liquid CS that stomizes on impact. . .

Chemical - light compounds, dusts, and other materials can be loaded into the projectile. . .At the same time, the versatility of the basic police shotgun in increased.

The . . .Company. . .has designed a vehicle specifically for law-enforcement requirements. . .

The R2 unit can carry fifteen armed officers, plus its crew of three, into practically any area. The rubber tracks enable use on city streets as well as climbing over or pushing aside obstacles.

The air-conditioned R2 vehicle is armored to stop caliber .30 armor - piercing projectiles and has an internally controlled, dry-chemical fire - extinguishing system that protects it against fire bombs and other rioter action.

Another vehicle. . .an armored truck, capable of high speed on the highways. It has bulletproof tires and windows, with armor-plated shutters pierced with vision slits over all openings. The vehicle is available in either 2 or 4 wheeled drive and will carry up to 16 men. Various weapon combinations, including a water cannon, can be mounted on the chassis." (And a choice of colors?)

Police are also on the broadcast beam, witness: ". . .This unit has an audible voice range of 2-1/2 miles, and is being adopted by major police agencies for civil disturbance, crowd control, and disaster operations. . .350 watts of power can be directed at given target areas without feedback. . .

One accessory of particular value to police is the 'Curdler' unit. This unit projects a scientifically designed, shrill shrieking, blatting noise at irregular intervals that irritates and disperses rioters. Its decibel range is just below the ear danger level. . .

In 1965, the . . .use of . . .artificial foam was introduced. . .

More recently, the U. S. Army has been developing a more stable type of foam that will last for hours. . .

Various additives such as stench dye or tear gas can be added. . .

Michigan Students Strike Over Bookstore Control

By JOHN GRAY
College Press Service

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (CPS) - Thousands of students stayed out of classes Sept. 29 at the University of Michigan in support of a campus-wide strike called to protest the refusal of the administration to allow the student government to set up a student-faculty controlled bookstore.

The strike was called for in a rally of over 2,000 students Sept. 26 in the wake of the early morning arrest of 107 demonstrators who had been occupying the centrally located Literature, Science and Arts Building since the previous afternoon. The students had tried to occupy the administration building, but found it locked.

The students at the rally approved of the strike in standing cheering acclamation, after University President Robben Flemming told the crowd the university board of regents "is unwilling to consider further the original student government council bookstore proposal" and is "unwilling to hold a meeting (to consider the issue) under the course of circumstances that now exist."

The 107 demonstrators were arrested between 3:25 and 5 a.m. Friday morning Sept. 26 by about 250 Ann Arbor and Washtenaw County police moving under request of Fleming. Fleming had earlier received a temporary restraining order enjoining the students from any further occupation of the building, but was unable to serve it.

The crowd outside the building which grew to almost 4,000 at one point refused to let representatives of the university or local authorities enter the building to serve the papers. The arrested students are being charged with creation of a contention, a Michigan high misdemeanor with vague applications. Among those arrested were the president and vice president of the student government council, leaders of the Ann Arbor rent strike, and one faculty member.

A week ago last Friday, hundreds of students disrupted a meeting of the regents at which the regents approved a "compromise" bookstore proposal which student leaders found unacceptable. The student government has been attempting to get the student discount bookstore since 1963 and before.

The regents proposal would put ultimate authority over the store in the hands of University Vice President and chief financial officer Wilbur Pierpoint, a long time opponent of a student bookstore. The student government president, Marty McLaughlin, blasted the university's refusal to negotiate in a statement Sunday, Sept. 28: "Solutions are found by quiet discussions," but they "cannot produce solutions when the regents reach their decisions in secret. . . and ignore the desires of students."

Any student who has already applied for financial aid for the current academic year and who is interested in typing for the DAILY COLLEGIAN should see Mr. John Seigrist in the Placement and Financial Aid office in Whitmore, immediately.

SCAT has gotten under way and is in need of memberships and volunteer help. The cost of a membership is $10.00, but anyone interested in simply volunteering should let SCAT know what they can do - paint, type, etc. - or any contacts they might have.

This non-profit organization is planning to expand to food co-ops, textbook and supply co-ops, and student services.

A placement service run by SCAT is in the planning stages and will hopefully operate so as to ensure students a good place to live without overcharging.

Apathy is not a means for change. Direct your gripes into ACTION.

MUSIC REVIEW

Olevsky Concert Hailed as Powerful

By J.W. WADE

The Brahms F minor Sonata, Opus 5, in a "big" work -- one of the most engrossing sonatas in the entire piano literature. In performing it Wednesday night at Bowker Auditorium, Pianist Estela Olevsky couldn't have better exemplified this type of powerful, lyric style required by this work.

The Sonata is thoroughly Brahms romanticism with an awesomeness and scope thrilling to hear. Not only did Mrs. Olevsky beautifully handle the big moments, but there was unity and direction in the lesser moments. Indeed -- it was playing of the most sensational caliber.

Mozart's Six Variations on the theme "Mio Caro Adone" by Salieri was sheer elegance. It was uninhibited Mozart, flowing and warm, with the emphasis on sprightly nuances and unified phrasing.

Robert Stern's Fantasy Piece is a college of brief suggestions of works former faculty pianist Howard Lebow performed and loved. Woven together in an extremely personal and intricate pattern, the piece provided an interesting image. Mrs. Olevsky's deeply concentrated performance was certainly a fitting tribute to both composer and Lebow.

Mrs. Olevsky concluded the evening with Ravel's colorful Sonatina and one of the all-time hair-raisers of the keyboard, Liszt's Mephisto Waltz. In both works, Mrs. Olevsky exhibited controlled expression and dynamics; that is to say she stressed the musical aspects of the works rather than only the bravura overtones.

The Free University City has endorsed Student's Cooperative Association, Today (SCAT), and its bid to reform the Amherst town housing situation.

In a statement released yesterday, City spokesmen explained, "SCAT gives the students direct control of the structures in which they live. This is one of the basic issues the City has been dealing with: a voice in the decisions that affect our lives."

The statement continues, "Because in one way, SCAT's program can serve to continue the spirit and purpose of fsc, we endorse it and call upon the student body to support it."

UMass Film Study Series Highlights Big Name Screen Stars

Joseph von Sternberg, Rene Clair, Laurence Olivier and Ingmar Bergman are among the directors whose works will be represented in the sixth season of the University of Massachusetts Theatre Film Study Series which began on Sunday, September 21. The first series program was devoted to the silent screen comedian Buster Keaton.

The series will continue on October 5 with the showing of von Sternberg's The Blue Angel, the first sound film to be made in Germany, which stars Marlene Dietrich and Emil Jannings as the eccentric Professor and cabaret singer from Heinrich Mann's story of Professor Unrath. This showing will be followed on October 19 by Rene Clair's celebrated satire on the effects of the machine age - A Nous la Liberte.

On October 26 the series focuses on the American sound feature as represented by the gangster films of the thirties. The film is William Wellman's Public Enemy which stars James Cagney as the hero-villain who rises from slum child to big-time gang leadership.

Representing the British and Italian cinema will be Olivier's Henry V to be shown on November 9, and Ermanno Olmi's Sound of Trumpets (Il Posto), a delicate and often humorous protest against the dehumanizing effects of big business on a boy settling into his first job with a large corporation.

The first semester of the series will conclude on December 7 with Ingmar Bergman's Winter Light, the second film of Bergman's trilogy on alienation and faith which stars Ingrid Thulin and Gunnar Bjornstrand.

All seven showings are on Sunday evenings and will begin at 7:30 p.m. in 104 Thompson Hall. Tickets for both the series and individual films will be available at the door.

16 Billion Seen Lost From Abandoned ABM Site

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Army lost nearly $16 million on the abandoned antiballistic missile site near Boston, says the chief of the program.

Lt. Gen. A. D. Starbird, system manager of the Safeguard missile program, told the House Appropriations Committee in testimony released Wednesday the Boston site was the only one to which design and construction funds had been committed.

Starbird said the Army was also studying sites near Chicago and Seattle when the program was revised, but the Army committed no funds to these sites.

President Nixon decided in February to switch President Lyndon B. Johnson's Sentinel, which was to be deployed around cities, to the Safeguard, to be deployed around Minuteman missile sites.

Starbird said the Army had already committed $25 million to the Boston sites when Nixon ordered the revision.

But Starbird said the titles to the land had not passed to the Army, so it was able to get back a little over $8 million.

He said the Army had already started building an access road, however, and might still decide to retain a small portion of the land connected to the road.

Of the money still wrapped up in the Boston site, $11.5 million was in land and acquisition costs and $6.2 million was for construction started, then stopped.

Starbird said the government spent $492,000 restoring the site and closing out construction.

He noted that $2 million listed as a Boston site obligation was for power equipment, which could be used at other proposed Safeguard sites.

Parking Czar Had

A funny thing happened to the chief UMass parking control officer. He was given a ticket by the Chief of Police's son-in-law.

Robert Ferriter, the new head of the parking and traffic office was parked in front of the photo center behind Machmer Hall. When he returned to his car he found a parking ticket signed by Steve Warren, Chief Blasko's son-in-law, attached to his windshield.

Harriers to Boston Search for 1st Win

Coming out of the blocks slowly with opening losses to Harvard and Providence, the UMass cross-country team goes against Northeastern tomorrow in hopes of recording their first win.

"We need that initial win to pick up our spirit," explained coach Ken O'Brien. "I expect a close meet like last year when we won 27-28. Northeastern is probably our most intense rival outside the conference and this rivalry produces good competition."

The coach feels that it will be UMass' three through seven men who will decide the meet. 'Ron (Wayne) and Leo (Duart) can match Joseph and Scanlon, so the result will depend on who's middle group of runners are stronger,' UMass chances rest on Tom Derderian and Don Dunsky who both hope to rebound from below par performances last week; and continuing strong performances from Larry Paulson, Bruce Blackburn and Steve Whicher.

Last year the Redmen won the dual contest by one point and the frosh won their race by two points. NU currently owns a 2-1 record with a staggering 15-47 loss to Harvard and a double victory against Vermont and New Hampshire, 24-55-57. The Northeastern course is a new one, lengthened to 5 miles, within the confines of Franklin Park, in Boston. Only Wayne, Blackburn and Paulson have competed on the course in the Northeastern Track Club race earlier this Fall.

The Little Redmen will compete on familiar grounds when they meet the Huskie pups. The course they run on is the same one used by Harvard frosh last week. The NU squad has two top runners in Paul McElroy and Steve Ralowicz and this meet, like the varsity contest, should be very close.

Ted Green Worsens

OTTAWA (AP) - Boston Bruins' Ted Green is suffering a partial paralysis of his left arm and hand as a result of the fractured skull he received in a National Hockey League fight Sept. 20, Dr. Leslie P. Ivan said Thursday. But the ailment may vanish in time, the doctor added.

Green and Wayne Maki of the St. Louis Blues engaged in a stick-swinging battle and the Boston player has been operated on twice since. The left side of his face is also controted but Dr. Ivan said that the paralysis could correct itself naturally.

Eddie Kasko Appointed Sox Pilot Promises: "Firmness, Fairness

BOSTON (AP) - Eddie Kasko, a 10-year veteran infielder in the major leagues, was named manager of the Boston Red Sox Thursday, promising to be "firm, fair and to treat ballplayers like men."

Kasko, 38, who finished his playing career with the Red Sox in 1966, was signed to a two-year contract to succeed Dick Williams, who was fired for "lack of communications" with the players on Sept. 23.

No terms were announced by the Red Sox. Kasko's salary was believed to be slightly less than the $50,000 per year Williams received the past two seasons after leading the Red Sox to the pennant as a rookie manager in 1967.

THIS IS Ken Harrelson in a Red Sox uniform. Now, this picture doesn't have anything to do with anything contained in this newspaper. But, it sure is a great picture sports fans.

"I don't consider myself a strict disciplinarian," the soft-spoken Kasko told a news conference. "I think being firm and fair is better than being a strict disciplinarian."

"I'm sure I'll have no problems," he said.

Kasko was promoted after managing a Red Sox farm club the past three seasons. He succeeded Williams as Toronto manager in 1967, and then spent the last two years with the International League club after it was moved to Louisville.

"I think we have a very, very good manager for many reasons," Red Sox general Manager Dick O'Connell said. "He did a fine job in Toronto two years ago under difficult circumstances, while the club was having financial difficulties. Then he did a fine job at Louisville, reaching the playoff finals."

Kasko said his managerial career was influenced principally by the late Fred Hutchinson, who was manager at Cincinnati when the Reds won the 1961 National League pennant.

"I played for him the longest," Kasko said of Hutchinson. "He was fair but firm. He tried to treat the players like men. That's what I'll try to do here."

"Being aloof is not my style. I enjoyed being a ballplayer, and enjoyed being spoken to. That's what I want to do."

UMass Seeks Revenge Against Delaware

Hughes to See Qb Action Hens Have Slick Attack

By PETER PASCARELLI
Sports Editor

A year ago, UMass, after a 1-1 start, lost a demoralizing thriller to Delaware, 28-23, and never fully recovered enroute to a 2-8 season. Tomorrow afternoon at 1:30 in Alumni Stadium, the Redmen will again tangle with the Blue Hens, after a 1-1 start.

Things aren't quite like they were a year ago. UMass does not have the host of injuries that wrecked the squad a year ago. Instead the Redmen appear to have much more depth, and are, quite frankly, a better football team.

Delaware, on the other hand is just about the same as the team that defeated UMass in the last five minutes and went on to capture the eastern small college championship, Explosive offensively with a questionable defense, the Blue Hens are also 1-1.

UMass who has never defeated a Delaware team in three meetings will be out to regain the consistency so evident in the Maine opener and so absent last week against Buffalo. The Redmen will be starting essentially the same squad that has started the first two games.

However, Coach Vic Fusia indicated that alternate quarterback Ken Hughes will be seeing plenty of action tomorrow and will share the signal-caller spot with veteran Tim Adams. Hughes, essentially a passer, who has good successes in his limited appearances will be counted on to provide some offensive balance in addition to improving the Redman ability to sustain drives.

Fusia is concerned with how his defense will combat the flying Blue Hen offense that has averaged 564 yards in their first two games while amassing 85 points. And, he sees Delaware using the familiar quarterback option play that killed UMass last week. "They have the option in their attack," said the coach," and after seeing what Buffalo did with it last week, I'm sure they will be coming at us with it."

KEY OFFENSIVE LINE MEMBERS

Fusia is also apprehensive about Delaware's tremendous speed, their outside running game, and the play action passing of Delaware career total offense leader Tom DiMuzio.

The Redman defense, which has been for the most part solid, may be missing one of its main cogs. End Paul Toner has had bronchitis this week and has missed practice for most of the week. However Fusia expressed confidence that Toner could be ready tomorrow.

Revenge has to be a factor for the Redmen. "I'm sure we remember what happened a year ago and the team has to feel that Delaware was the team that started them on the way down."

Delaware coach Tubby Raymond, earlier this week, praised UMass as being "a well-coached team with excellent size. We expect them to come right at us and try to just ram the ball down our throats."

It could turn into a high-scoring circus, as Delaware, while being able to score themselves, is prone to give up a few points themselves as is evident from the 33-7 lead they blew a week ago to Villanova. Fusia hopes it doesn't turn out to be a high scoring game however. "We had better control that football or it will be a tough afternoon."

"UMass will have a size advantage on both offense and defense, while the Blue Hens may have more speed. But the key will probably be whether the Redmen can hold in check a offense that is as deceptive and explosive as any in the east.

F.U.C. Wrecked by Wind, Seeks-Out New Housing

Due to strong winds and weak stakes, the geodesic domes which housed Free University City have all fallen. Because of this wind problem in the area where the domes were constructed, a new housing arrangement may have to be found instead of the domes.

As of now, the indoors Free University City is located in the Project 10 office in the Southwest College's Moore House. However, Southwest Master John Hunt has said that after this weekend the office will be used for faculty and class meetings and Free University will have to find another home. The FUC leaders are looking for another place but as of now, have not been successful. So far only a baggage room has been offered and this does not suit the needs of the city. The leaders of the city are afraid that there may be a disruption of communications because the phone number which everyone associates with FUC will be changed.

However, classes and siminars are still being held and members of the faculty are still co-operating with and instructing at the City.

Free University has also announced that it is supporting the October 15th Moratorium. Members of the City will participate in the day's proceedings and will help spread information about the Moratorium to the community.

To help organize the Free University itself, committees on construction curriculum, and public relations and a coordinating committee have been formed.

The coordinating committee has been formed in anticipation of the development of special interest groups within the Free University City.

Also designated were persons who will serve as sources of information in such areas as the recruitment of faculty, the use of state appropriations on campus, and the investigation of possible and the investigation of possibilities of changes in grading and course requirements.

Drug Sentence Suspended For Three UMass Students

The sentences of three students convicted for growing marijuana have been lightened and suspended until the students' graduation in June.

Boston District Court Judge Joseph Ford lowered 18 month sentences set last June to six months and suspended the sentences to next June to allow Harry J. Gold, George Moser and Patrick Flaherty, all seniors, to finish their studies at the university.

Although attorney for the trio Stephen Silverman argued that surveys have questioned whether marijuana is harmful to those using it, Judge Ford refused to consider the question of whether marijuana should be legalized.

"Many students and young people involved in these drug cases are being used by those seeking to legitimatize the use of marijuana. They do not do a service to either the defendants or to the law," he said.

The three were caught growing marijuana in window boxes and other containers in their apartment in Sunderland.

Assistant District Attorney Stanley Cummings said that $500, in small bills, assorted pills, and hashish, a virulent form of marijuana, were also found in the apartment. "In a small way, they were manufacturing marijuana," he said.

Cummings appeared disappointed at the lightening of the sentences.

English Dept. Supports Vietnam War Moratorium

By RICHARD HANSON
Staff Reporter

The English department gave support to the Vietnam Moratorium last Thursday by passing three motions, introduced by Prof. John C. Weston.

The three resolutions communicate to the President of the United States the English Dept.'s support for the "National Vietnam Moratorium Committee's call for political and educational activity on Oct. 15 towards immediate withdrawal of all American troops in Vietnam."

It asks the Head of the English Dept. "to submit strong recommendation to Pres. Lederle to cancal all regular administrative and academic functions at the University", and "recommends that all teaching and clerical staff who wish to participate in the events of Oct. 15 may absent themselves from their ordinary duties without prejudice.

Spokesman John P. Nelson for the Dept. of English and for the Faculty for the Vietnam Moratorium, said that the first two motions passed with "a very strong majority", while the third passed "unanimously". He further stated that they, as a department would like to see the University as a whole participate in the moratorium, but that the decision for participation as the present situation demands is up to the individual instructor.

The motions read as follows: The faculty and official student representatives of the Department of English at the University of Mass. at Amherst records its support for the call of the National Vietnam Moratorium Committee for political and educational activity on Oct. 15 toward immediate withdrawal of all American troops in Vietnam and requests this record be communicated to the President of the United States.

The faculty and the official student representatives of the department of English asks its head to submit our strong recommendation to President Lederle to cancel all regular administrative and educational functions at the University on Oct. 15 so that the University community can devote itself to activities planned for that day.

The faculty and the official student representatives of the Department recommend that all teaching and clerical staff who wish to participate in the events of Oct. 15 may absent themselves from their ordinary duties without prejudice.

McGovern Bids for Leadership Of Democratic Antiwar Forces

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. George S. McGovern had made a new bid for leadership of Democratic antiwar forces by announcing plans to invade the territory of two potential presidential rivals for the Oct. 15 Vietnam Day Moratorium.

In what political observers consider a neat bit of political one-upmanship, the South Dakota Democrat announced he would speak that day in Washington, on the Boston Common and at the University of Maine.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts also has been invited to speak at the Common, as well as at some Massachusetts colleges, but has made no decision.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine said in Milwaukee Saturday night he will participate in Vietnam Moratorium Day. Bates College of Lewiston, Maine, said Muskie will be there on Oct. 15 to speak on Vietnam. Maine has endorsed the student-run moratorium.

In the two months since Kennedy's automobile accident, McGovern has broadened his activities in what his aides said is an effort to build a "national constituency."

Unlike Muskie, who won wide support as the 1968 vice presidential nominee and is now trying to lie low, McGovern is trying to make himself visible.

Meanwhile in other news relating to the upcoming Moratorium the Maine Democratic State Committee Sunday endorsed the Oct. 15 Vietnam Moratorium Day and went on record as criticizing President Nixon's suggestion for a cessation of war debate.

A committee spokesman said the 25 members present at the monthly meeting in Augusta, Maine, unanimously passed the resolve rejecting "any attempt to stifle or restrict public discussion of Vietnam."

Terming the planned Oct. 15 demonstrations "a responsible expression of concern toward the policy, the committee noted that such democratic leaders as Sen. Edmund S. Muskie have endorsed the antiwar demonstration plans.

The Committee said that national unity on the matter will not be achieved by stifling debate "not for 60 days nor one day."

Some 300 colleges around the nation, including most colleges in Maine, will be the focal points for the antiwar protests. Sen. Muskie will be speaking at Bates College in Lewiston on Vietnam, and Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D. will speak at the University of Maine at Orono the day of the moratorium.

THE NEWS IN BRIEF

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) - The UN General Assembly is expected to agree this week with little or no apposition, to debate a resolution that would have it urge governments to make sure that all airliner hijackers are punished.

Eleven countries are sending Secretary-General U Thant a letter Monday proposing that the question be added to the agenda of the assembly's current 24th session. The resolution will be attached.

SAIGON (AP) - The Viet Cong and North Vietnamese launched their heaviest rocket and mortar attacks in nearly three weeks during the weekend, concentrating most of them in the Mekong Delta southwest of Saigon, the U.S. Command reported. Sharp action was also reported near the Cambodian border.

ATHENS, Greece (AP) - The Athens newspaper To Vima openly rejected Sunday the government's terms on restoration of press freedom. It said the restrictions still do not leave any margin for political commentary.

The provisions announced by Premier George Papadopoulos Friday were among a series of measures partly easing press censorship and relaxing martial law.

ALGIERS (AP) - A U.S. Air Force C130 landed at Algiers' Maison Blanche airport Sunday with 125 outsize tents, a gift of the U.S. government to flood victims in Algeria.

The two countries have had no diplomatic relations since Algeria broke off following the 1967 six-day war in the Middle East because of alleged U.S. military aid to Israel.

The 125 tents, accommodating 15 persons each, were flown from Italy and handed over to representatives of the Algerian Red Crescent.

Other special planes arrived from Kuwait, Iraq and Libya with relief supplies for more than 80,000 persons left homeless in Algeria by torrential rain and floods in the past few days.

HAMILTON, Bermuda (AP) - Hurricane Inga struck Bermuda a glancing blow early Sunday, hammering this mid-ocean island with 80-mile-an-hour gusts. Inga was 150 miles southeast of Bermuda in the early hours and moved away to the east northeast at 13 knots.

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) - British troops used tear gas to break up a demonstration of militant Protestants in the second clash here in 12 hours Sunday.

Concert Association Series Debuts Wed

The UMass Concert Association's First Celebrity Series concerts this season will take place in Bowker Auditorium Wed. and Thurs. when the brilliant young pianist Misha Dichter will appear. Highly regarded internationally as one of the most exciting musicians of the younger generation, Dichter will perform piano recitals on Wednesday and Thursday evenings at 8 p.m.

Misha Dichter first achieved prominence as an artist when he won second prize at the 1966 Tschaikovsky International Piano Competition in Moscow. Returning home, he was immediately signed to a management contract by the noted impressario, S. Hurok and to a recording contract by RCA Victor. Since then, Dichter has appeared throughout North America and in Europe as a recitalist and as a soloist with major symphony orchestras. Typical of critical acclaim came from Allen Hughes of the New York Times: "This young man. . .still in his early twenties. . .can do almost anything he wants pianistically, he is a whiz of a pianist, an estimable musician and a promising interpreter of great works.

For his appearances at the University, Mr. Dichter has selected a program that includes two piano sonatas by Beethoven and one by Prokofiev, as well as works by Bach-Busoni and Brahms.

MISHA DICHTER

Reserved tickets for these concerts can now be obtained through the University's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202. Other artists appearing on the 1969/70 Celebrity Series are Zara Nelsova, cellist, and Grant Johannesen, pianist, November 4 and 5; Carlos Montoya, guitarist, Dec. 9 and 10; violinist Henryk Szeryng in February; The Bach Aria Group in March; Die Reihe in April and Stars of the American Ballet Theatre in May.

'70 Council Supports Moratorium

The Senior Class Executive Council voted unanimously last night to support the Oct. 15 moratorium against the war in Vietnam. The resolution urged that classes be cancelled so that students could spend the day working towards ending the Vietnam war.

The Student Senate last week urged the administration to cancel classes on the 15th. If they are not cancelled the resolution calls for a boycott of all classes.

President John W. Lederle said Thursday that he does not have the power to call off classes. He said the decision must be made by the faculty senate.

The faculty senate earlier passed a resolution saying it is up to the individual faculty member and his students to decide.

Other organizations who have announced their support of the day-long moratorium include the Student Union Governing Board and the DAILY COLLEGIAN board of editors.

Grad. Student Senate to Discuss Housing

University sponsored housing for married students will be the main business before the second meeting of the 1969-70 academic year of the Graduate Student Senate tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

According to the agenda recently released David Yelton Graduate Senate President, University Planning Officer Jack Littlefield will present a sketch of plans for a project to provide over 200 units of housing for married students, to open next June and to be complete by next fall.

After Mr. Littlefield's presentation, the Graduate Student Senate will consider a resolution requesting the Board of Trustees to authorize the University Building Authority to proceed forthwith with the project, but at the same time requesting that the planning office make every effort to find economies which will substantially reduce the rental which was projected in the sketch of the plan at $140 per month for a furnished unit with full utilities. President Yelton said that if the Graduate Senate approves the idea, the chances look good for university sponsored housing next summer.

According to Yelton the Master Planning Committee of the Faculty Senate recently okayed the idea of allotting a 30 acre tract of land off North Pleasant St. between Puffton Village and Presidential Apartments for use in construction of housing for married students. If the sketch receives GSS approval Yelton said that he he expects the idea will go before the Board of Trustees for approval and that it will be presented to town officials for their reaction.

According to Yelton, the Graduate Senate was instrumental in causing the university administration to consider the construction of university sponsored housing as one method of dealing with the Amherst housing crisis. The present plan is the university's first step in this direction since the building of Lincoln Apartments over a dozen years ago.

Also included on the agenda for tonight's meeting are a report from Yelton and a report from the Social Committee. Yelton also announced that the Viet Nam War Moratorium will be considered.

Tonight's meeting is open to the public.

Tim Hardin to Perform Cadence Of Blues and Rock to Homecoming

Tim Hardin

Hardinesque - that's what they call it - the "mellow creamtones, that throaty vibrato on the sad words" with a special cadence that makes Tim Hardin's music flow around you like summertime. And it will flow on October 17 at UMass for Homecoming '69.

Hardin is a twenty-seven year old singing, guitar and piano playing writer. He thinks of himself as a jazz artist and feels that "jazz is blues is jazz is blues is . . ." His showcase spectrum runs from blues to hard rock. He has had appearances ranging from San Francisco to the Philharmonic and Town Hall in New York to Montreal to London's Albert Hall. A log country house in Woodstock, N.Y., is where he calls home.

"As a writer, Hardin is almost invariably a romantic, never topical, didactic or surrealistic." He is most noted for writing and singing the original version of "If I Were a Carpenter". His most recent hit is "Simple Song of Freedom".

Both of Hardin's parents hold master's degrees in music but Hardin took few piano lessons when he was a kid. By ear, he assimilated reading music. He started to play guitar and eventually formed a band which played for fifteen weeks in Greenwich Village at the Night Owl Cafe. John Sebastian formerly of the Lovin' Spoonful played harmonica. His first album was "This is Tim Hardin". Musicians with him now are Donald MacDonald on drums, Warren Bernhardt-piano, clavinet, Daniel Hankin-guitar, Eddie Gomez-bass, and Mike Mainieri on vibes.

Hardin's sensitivity which marks his songs is illustrated by excerpts from his notes on his album "Tim Hardin 2" in which he traces his feelings about fatherhood. His voice is soft and quavers between the blues and joy. He can sing nasty songs, but his forte is gentle songs such as "Reason to Believe" and "Misty Roses".

He doesn't put on an "act" on stage, he's not a sex symbol, not a put-on, just Tim Hardin. He won't shout at you nor will he bore you. He will entertain you - at the one hundreth Homecoming of the University of Massachusetts on October 17 at 10 p.m. in the Cage.

Student Forum for Peace Deals with Role of War

"War is intrinsic in the basic values of the American culture. Even if complete global peace were to be reached, most Americans wouldn't be able to accept and live with it. Violence and destruction are as much a part of our way of life as it is a part of our economy. Television is an example of this. Murder and tension are glorified in programs and advertising."

Bill Sheehan and Patsy Parker, Executive Committee members of the Student Forum for World Peace and World Order, told the DAILY COLLEGION yesterday, these and other related facts about the problems the Student Forum is trying to deal with.

Sheehan, and Parker, in the course of their activities, travel to American campuses to look for, and help facilitate the initiation of inter-departmental peace studies programs and to work with already existing groups towards peace education.

Sheehan explained, "The University campus is one definite place to begin a program in peace education. Students should have the chance to find out just how great a role war plays in their lives, and how much it dominates their thinking."

The Student Forum is a non-profit, foundation - supported group, operating out of New York City. This organization not only helps facilitate peace studies on campuses, but also serves as expertise to students on many social issues. "Sometimes other issues need attention on the campuses we visit," Parker stated, "which we can be resource people for. Umass seems to be fairly well oriented in most areas, but some smaller colleges have such problems as making private colleges co - educational, and liberalizing strict social regulations."

Both Sheehan and Parker participated in a Free University City workshop last weekend. Their response was that more creative programs, like F.U.C. are needed in every area of American higher education.

They said they are planning to return to UMass in mid-November to look into the subject of peace education.

UMass Speech Prof to Preside At N.E. Convention Workshop

Dr. Jane Blankenship, Professor of Speech at the University o Massachusetts, will preside at a workshop presenting debut papers on oral communication at the New England Speech Association Convention on October 10 at the Somerset Hotel in Boston.

More than 200 members of the association will participate in the convention, which has become the largest in New England to address itself to communication problems in public speaking, speech pathology and audiology, and oral interpretation.

Speech for the Disadvantaged, Confrontation on the College Campus, and Speech and the Pulpit are some of the workshops which will be presented.

Tonight at 9 p.m. WMUA's "Focus" will examine the operations of the Government program known as Volunteers in Service to America, or VISTA. Ken Mosakowski's guests will be VISTA workers who are recruiting this week on the UMass campus. A special feature of tonight's program will be a taped interview with UMass alumnus and Delta Chi brother Gary Greenberg, who is currently a VISTA worker in the Puerto Rican community in Cleveland, Ohio.

Interested persons are invited to tune in on "Focus" at 91.1 FM.

More Construction!

Fine Arts Building, Tobin Hall To Be Started at End of Month

Construction on the new fine arts building and Tobin Hall will commence late this month, according to the Campus master plan.

The 13.6 million dollar fine arts building, to be located at the southern end of the campus pond will include: a 2,200 seat concert hall, a 200 seat experimental theatre, an art gallery, studios, offices and classrooms for the art, music and speech departments.

Jack Littlefield, University Planning Officer, emphasized the point that construction around the campus pond is a temporary necessity. "The pond is there to stay. The grass is there to stay. We are centering around the pond some of the more prominent campus buildings. No one is going to do anything permanent to change the center of the campus," Littlefield added.

Tobin Hall will provide expansion space for the psychology department's new offices, laboratories and classrooms. It will cost 6.4 million dollars, and is to be situated north west of Boyden Gym, where the tennis courts are now.

"Twenty-four courts to replace the old ones have been provided appropriations and possibly up to thrity-two will be built if funds can be found," Littlefield stated. The new courts will be built west of the barn complex next to the athletic fields.

Construction will begin this Spring and terminate next fall. Partial use of the old tennis courts will be permitted until the new courts have been completed.

Contractor limit lines provide for the fencing of walks and roadway where Ellis Drive runs along the southern end of the pond area. A temporary bridge across the pond and lighted walks will be built according to the bidding costs.

Projected construction time for the fine arts building is three years, while Tobin Hall will take approximately until the Spring of 1972.

Brooke Charges House Bill On Grants Intimidates Colleges

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. Edward W. Brooke,R-Mass., charged yesterday the House version of the military procurement authorization bill contains language "plainly intended to itimidate colleges and universities" which receive defense research grants.

The provision he said, suggests "research support will be limited or terminated if the schools do not cooperate in ROTC, military recruitment and other such matters."

The provision written by the House Armed Services Committee and approved Friday by the House, requires that Congress be notified 60 days before research awards are made, including a report of past grants to the school and of the school's record "with regard to cooperation on military matters such as the Reserve Officer's Training Corps and military recruiting on campus."

"It is difficult," Brooke said, "to conceive of a provision better calculated to prevent efficient allocation of research funds." It would " complicate an already cumbersome procedure," he said, while requiring "wholly irrelevant information that has no bearing on the institution's capacity to serve the national security by perfroming the desired research."

UMass Arab Students Send Telegrams to Nixon

The Organization of Arab Students at UMass recently sent a telegram to President Nixon in response to his reception and statements to Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir.

The Telegram read: "President Nixon, White House. We urge you to use good judgement in not sending more planes to Israel to be used to napalm our people. We urge you to stand for justice and support the right of the Palestinians struggling against Israeli occupation and to support a democratic Palestinian State for Christiams, Muslims and Jews."

A similar telegram was sent to President Nixon by the Muslim Student Association at UMass. It read; "We appeal to your sense of justice in not sending more planes to Israel to be used to napalm civilians. We urge you to stand against Israeli occupation of Arab lands and to support the right of Palestinians in returning to their homeland."

Deadline for Notices is 2:00 p.m. for all listings expected to go in the following day.

An Inadequate Bone

After much blood and sweat and the gnashing of teeth, we have finally gotten a "say" in the direction that our education is taking. We have been generously granted the addition of one student to the Board of Trustees which was formally void of student representation.

We find this an unacceptable gesture on the part of the governor. As it stands now, there is one, that's right, one student on the 23 member board. This means that we comprise only about 6% of our own governing board, a rather poor showing of the democratic principle.

We believe that for the board to be truly representative, there should be a minimum of 11 students or enough to comprise at least 50% of that board.

It would seem that in this age of societal "decay" that we see all around us, our colleges and universities would take the lead in putting the democratic principle back into play. With students comprising a larger and larger portion of the population, their political power should also assume larger and larger proportions. It would seem that the logical place for this growth to start would be in the governing of ourselves.

Elevator Fun

It appalls me to walk into an elevator and descend through a dormitory or academic building with a group of people packed close enough to determine olfactorily what each had for lunch and see everyone hypnotized by the floor indicator light as it proceeds hebraically from the penthouse to the lobby. I would remind you of two facts. First of all, the car will make it to the bottom without your grim gaze, and, secondly, Madison Avenue does not lie below. There is no need to assume the appearance I'd expect on the face of someone going to an emergency meeting of the National Security Council. Really, you too can have fun on an elevator ride.

But as a wise old man once said: "It is one thing to point out a sad situation. To offer a remedy is something else." The rest of this column is something else.

From now on Monday will be considered "Be Kind to Elevator Day." How can you be kind to an elevator? DON'T STARE AT IT. Talk to the person next to you instead. Every Monday that you ride in an elevator you now have the responsibility to meet someone new. Someone recently pointed out to me that with essentially everyone at UMass eating the same food, seeing the same movies, listening to the same music, going to the same dances, concerts, and parties, wearing the same clothes, even existing in the same weather, it's a wonder anyone has anything to say to anyone else that the latter doesn't already know. Fortunately this point is absurd. It is all these common bonds that form the basis of communication, for we all experience these events differently. Without having to describe a film or concert, we can spend more time describing how that diversion related to us as unique individuals. What better place than a crowded elevator to let this happen. One sniff, for example, would indicate to you who had hamburgers for lunch. Immediately you could start a discussion comparing today's hamburger to yesterday's and to the day before that's and to last week's. You could discuss various condiments eaten with a hamburger, and even why you selected a hamburger over the second choice meal (which was invariably a hot dog). What you talk about is really unimportant, just communicate. Remind us that you are someone.

You may as well create something constructive out of an otherwise abominable period of time, for, if you go on as you have been you will surely wear away that entire light panel with your eyes, and then no one will know when to bend his knee to prepare to absorb the end. . .of his own trip.

Another Point of View

In reference to the October 3rd. letter entitled "Getting One's Money's Worth", I would like to offer a few ideas that Mr. Sigleman overlooked.

First of all, a college education is much more than attending classes. It's a total experience that includes living as well as learning. Certainly the learning portion is important, but being able to apply the knowledge gained in college throughout life is equally, if not more, important. Most educators would agree that college is a social, as well as an educational experience.

Secondly, the moratorium on October 15 is probably the first time that the nation, as a whole, will be able to protest a war that is immoral, illegal, and totally absurd. The arguments of Mr. Sigleman uses in defending his point of view are essentially of the same format as arguments used by the Nazis at Nuremberg.

Thirdly, if Mr. Sigleman would climb out from under his books, he would realize that this country is not only guilty of criminal actions in Vietnam, but is completely to blame for 39,000 dead Americans.

Finally, Mr. Sigleman, if the moratorium on October 15 arouses any favorable response in Washington, I would gladly forfeit the cost of a day's classes.

A Day Off for What?

At this time, before the October 15th insanity, the students of this university should be commended for the good sense they have displayed in rejecting the student radical minority.

I must admit that when I first arrived here this fall, the fear that this would not be the case did occur. In one day I was exposed to SDS propaganda announcing some type of mass meeting to "plan for actions." And then the same day I saw wandering about this campus last year's editor of the radical Lowell newspaper The Advocate, Frank M. Baglione, Mr. Baglione, whose words probably and happily are known only in the Lowell area, in an Advocate editorial last year called for the radical minority in America to "take the next logical step in the Revolutionary movement -- the use of Revolutionary Terror."

The combination of an active SDS and Baglione led me to fear the implimentation of last year's Avocate editor's program of massive property destruction and "selective" assassinations. In fairness, it must be mentioned that this program was intended to be used against the federal and local governments only, and was called by the editor his prediction and not his program.

Nevertheless, I had expected to hear of plans to burn this campus to the ground on October 15th., or the plans of some radical group to bring Governor Sargent's head to the Student Union. But on the contrary it seems that the Oct. 15th. moratorium will be no more than a mass class cut inspired more by the healthy American desire for a day-off than by the treasonour propaganda of the radical minority.

It seems that despite the ranting of the radical press and the dribble from certain radical mouths, the students of this university, like the people in the country as a whole, have kept to the liberal-moderate policies that have preserved order and insured progress in our society.

THOMAS CARDELLO

Something More Needed

The idea of a nation-wide strike to protest the war is long overdue. It's about time we students who have been sitting guiltily stateside on 2-S deferments make a personal sacrifice. But declaring October 15th a holiday from classes? So what? By cutting classes students won't be interfering with the smooth flow of the Federal government. But they aren't even willing to take the small risk of missing an exam, and are demanding that the University call off classes.

The idea of nation-wide unity is good, but the moratorium should be something the government can't ignore or chuckle at. Teach-ins were necessary in 1965; now the problem is apathy, not ignorance. Nixon knows how the students feel about the war; we must demonstrate how strongly we feel about it. Perhaps we could use Gandhi's tactic of massive passive resistance. There are enough students in this country to successfully block commuter traffic on several major highways, just by sitting on them. Since money speaks to U.S. businessmen, bureaucrats, politicians, and workers alike, fowling up the economy for even one day might scare Nixon into some action. Of course, if only a handful of students turn out they will be gassed, clubbed, and jailed, but if all the students who are willing to cut classes are also willing to take personal risks, the police and national guard could not deal with the strike, and Walter Cronkite viewers would see a far more thought-provoking traffic jam than Woodstock.

Figures In Effect

Many people have questioned me about the consequences of the Index budget cut. As editor, it is my duty to explain its effect.

To start off, this $14,500 which we asked for was not unreasonable. Last year, after the Student Senate had appropriated full funds, the executive committee, in a last minute attempt to trim the total budget, cut $10,000 blindly out of our printing category. This left us with the same amount of money as last year, but with 1500 more books to print. Over the summer, paper costs went up some 12% (we use about $20,000 worth of paper each year) and labor costs also rose, reflecting in the extra $4,500.

The effect of this cut cannot easily be predicted. There is not now enough money to print a yearbook which at all resembles what the UMass student has become used to seeing. The present appropriation stands at $5.54 per student (how much did your high school book cost?) Of this, base price, which includes printing and paper only, is $3.96 each yearbook. To bind it and put a cover on costs another 80¢, bringing the total of $4.76. Photograph, film, office expenses, and proofing charges add up to another 80¢, bringing the total cost to about the $5.54 which has been appropriated. However, this book doesn't yet have any color pictures, in fact this figure doesn't include any special effects at all, not even colored ink on the title page.

The logical reply to these figures is to economize. This turns out to be almost impossible. We could go down in paper quality. By using a grade II matte paper we could save $3,500, but this paper is actually equivalent to the paper that Yahoo uses, and is not suitable for printing color, thereby defeating its purpose. Another way to economize might be to cut down the number of pages. Each page pays for about one color picture, and pages can only be cut in multiples of 16. In order to put in 50 color pictures, about 20 pages worth (compared to last years 340 color pictures), about 48 pages would have to be cut. This is the equivalent of the entire Sports section, or all of the Greek and Dorm pages combined.

There are no other items in our printing contract that alone or collectively can result in sizeable savings, aside from using a paper cover and stapling instead of sewing the book together, such as in the University Directory.

This Wednesday, I will bring a proposal to the Student Senate asking for $8,676. This will bring the per student cost up from $5.54 to $6. Forty six cents will give the Index over 200 color pictures, and allow us to print a book which is fitting of this University and its students.

MUSIC REVIEW

Simone, "I Have My Soul on Ice."

Three Black males clad in African garb abruptly appeared on the stage at Bowker Auditorium Saturday night for the performance of Nina Simone. Later, when I held my interview, I found out that their names were: Tommy Smith on guitar, Don Alias, "Juma" on bongos and Weldon Irvine, musical director, on piano. Their instrumental music introduced a duet, the Swordsmen, Eddie & Ray. The soul rhythm was easily discernible, for there was the usual lyrics of this type of music. One of the best songs that they did was "If I had a Hammer", soul style. As I listened more closely, I ascertained that there was a touch of spiritualistic singing so often found in Black performers, for usually they start off by singing in church groups. The other song that seemed to affect the audience more was their rendition of the Beatles' "Hard Day's Night". This was the last song on their repertoire and they exited as soulfully as they had entered. They were given a round of applause commensurate to their performance.

There was a lapse of about five minutes as the pianist set the stage for the next act in which the same musicians aforementioned were joined by Ammile Lattimore on guitar. They started doing "their thing" and suddenly there appeared on stage for the next act a female attired in a low-cut black pant suit outfit accentuated with gold hooped earrings, a black corsage (compliments of the Black students on campus) on both wrists, an "Afro" hair-do, and high black boots fully bloused. As one could see, the epitome of beauty expressed in being Black. Her repertoire consisted of songs like "Black is the Color of My True Love", in which she accompanied herself on piano. This song depicted the physical characteristics of her Black amour. She took one of her songs from the widely acclaimed musical, "Hair". In her first show prior to singing the latter song she noticed a design placed on stage. As the audience tried to perceive what she was staring at, I noticed that it was a design made out of brown horseshoe chestnuts arranged so as to make the peace symbol.

She was somewhat taken aback for she stated that she had not seen this before, but after being told what it represented, she thanked the anonymous person who had put it there. Then she gyrated and said: "I have my soul on ice." (Incidentally, there is a book entitled "Soul on Ice", by Eldridge Cleaver.) Her tempo changed and she began to sing a song in which she described the diverseness of the Black people in regard to pigmentation, using such feminine characters as "Safrona", who represents the Creole, "Sweet Thing", the girl who is seen on 25th Street, and "Peaches", who is like Aunt Jemima with the head rag and worn out body. "No Opportunity Necessary, No Experience Needed", originally done by Richie Haven was next, followed by "The Assignment" in which she stated "there is a psychological, sexual, and love distance among people."

Her music had a mollifying effect on the audience. This was definitely so when she did her last song, written originally by the deceased Lorraine Hansbury, entitled: "To Be Young, Gifted, and Black", dedicated to the Black students on campus. She asked the audience what was the Black student population, and when they responded, she said addressing the Black student population mainly: "You need this song to keep you going." This was the grandiose climax to the whole show and she received a standing ovation by all of the Blacks there as well as from some of the whites.

After the first performance, I requested and got an interview. I found Nina quite charming and at east in speaking with me. The interview went like this:

Q. How long have you been singing and who was your tutor?

A. "I have been singing Black songs for about fifteen years. Some time ago, I was not liked by my own people because the songs that I sang reminded them of their past. A woman volunteered to help me and I studied under her for fourteen years as well as attending the Julliard School of Music for a year and a half. I used to play for church choirs and turned professional in 1953."

UConn Quartet Opens Chamber Music Series

By STEPHEN WALT
Fine Arts Editor

Last Friday night, October 3, the New England String Quartet opened the University Chamber Music Series at Bowker Auditorium. The group is the residence faculty quartet at the University of Connecticut. Playing to a two-thirds capacity crowd, the group performed Haydn's String Quartet in D-Major, Bartok's String Quartet No. 6, and Beethoven's String Quartet in B-flat.

The Haydn, which opened the program, is a lively piece which was played with too much reserve. Throughout there were intonation problems. When it opened, the group sounded like four individual musicians and not like a single ensemble, a problem which was not resolved during the entire first half of the program. Only in the final section of the third movement was there any life to the group's playing. Cellist Bruno DiCecco was outstanding in his efforts to instill life into the performance.

The Bartok Quartet No. 6, which concluded the first half, casts a somber, despairing mood. The piece opens with a haunting viola solo, played superbly by violist Robert Coleman. Movements two and three are highly rhythmic and vaguely exciting; again Mr. Di cecco deserves the honors for his solo in the second movement. The final movement, which is very sombre, almost died in performance due to poor intonation and an apparent lack of rapport between the musicians. As in the Haydn, the performance of this piece was too reserved and lifeless.

After an extended intermission, to allow for the ventilation of overheated Bowker, the Beethoven String Quartet in B-flat was performed to a more meager audience. It was difficult to believe that this was the same quartet which had played the first half of the program. With the exception of more intonation trouble in the first violin, the group gave a spirited and professional-sounding performance. Second violinist Theodore Arm was outstanding in the opening movement. The next two movements were very lively and musical, with the third movement being perhaps the highlight of the evening. The last three movements were unfortunately more reminiscent of the first half.

The concert was not overly long by the clock and, had one entered after intermission, he would have enjoyed the evening.

Senate Expected To Hear Claims Of Gun Selling

WASHINGTON (AP) - Senate investigators are expected to bring into the open soon allegations of improper gun selling by some Army officers.

At least one high-ranking officer is said by Pentagon sources to have been involved.

This would mark a new turn in the parallel Senate and Army inquiries which so far have concentrated on charges that a ring of sergeants systematically stole money and property belonging to service clubs, and that some generals shielded them.

Antiwar Groups Aiding American Servicemen to Canada

NEW YORK - A loosely organized network of antiwar groups and individuals is now helping hundreds of American servicemen a month to desert to Canada, the New York Times News Service reports.

The new "underground railroad" is composed of pacifist and religious organizations, campus radicals, draft counselors middle-class professionals and business people, suburbanites and youthful friends and acquaintances of servicemen.

It is providing shelter, advice, false identification papers, money and transportation for a rapidly growing number of deserters.

The flow of deserters over the border has shown a marked increase in the last summer, becoming a new factor in the pattern of immigration into Canada, for the last several years a refuge for young men avoiding the draft.

Each night in Montreal in the warm months, dozens of Americans, newly arrived with their small leather or canvas "ditty bags", sometimes also known as "AWOL," bags could be seen sleeping in the park near McGill University.

In Toronto, Tom Needham, a staff member of the union of American exiles, said, "The big influx of deserters began this summer. Last spring it was two or three draft dodgers to every deserter, but now it's running about even."

In the first 27 days of September, the Exiles Union, one of several organizations in Toronto providing assistance to American draft resisters and deserters, said it found temporary housing for 153 new arrivals.

Among the factors that indicate and contribute to the situation are the following:

A mounting disenchantment with the war in Vietnam, coupled with the side effects of the free-wheeling, anti-authoritarian youth culture, has created a climate of opinion in which desertion is no longer the unthinkable, disgraceful act it would have been considered five years ago.

A steadily increasing rate of desertion from the armed services, now running at a projected rate of over 73,000 a year, up from 40,227 in 1967.

A change in immigration policy by the Canadian government, after a public furor, that openly welcomes American deserters.

The existence of a network of 26 organizations across Canada, grown up in the last three years, providing information and assistance to Americans avoiding the military.

The full-time work of a number of antiwar activists in this country in funneling soldiers over the border and, perhaps more important, the almost unquestioning willingness of large numbers of Americans -- particularly among the young - to aid deserters.

The filtering of word through the military by escaped deserters, discontended GIs, underground newspapers and radical organizers about the possibility of fleeing to Canada.

One day last week, a light color sedan rolled up to the customs booth on the Canadian side of the Rainbow Bridge at Niagara Falls.

"Where are you from?" the blue-coated official asked the young men in the car. "How long are you going to stay?"

"West Virginia," replied Craig, a short, stocky youth with closely cropped hair and the beginnings of sideburns and a goatee. "Just a few hours."

The Canadian gave a languid wave of his arm, and Craig's shoulders, tensed under a battered black ski parka, fell back against the seat.

"Free," Craig said, exhaling a large sigh as the car pulled away from the booth. "It's beautiful. I'm not gonna stop smiling for weeks."

Five days after his 20th birthday, three months nine days after he was drafted into the United States Army, 27 days after he slipped through the woods at Ft. Gordon, Ga., Craig had deserted and fled to another country.

His journey was part of a startling new phenomenon in American history: with thousands of young men refusing to remain in the military, there has spring up over the last year a growing, informal network of their countrymen willing to break federal laws by helping them escape.

The magnitude of the situation can be seen in the sharp rise in desertion figures released by the Department of Defense over the last three years.

For the Fiscal Year 1967, ended June 30, 1967, there were 40,227 servicemen classified as deserters after being away from their posts more than 30 days without authorization.

In the fiscal year 1968, Pentagon figures show, the number of deserters rose to 53,352. The figures broke down as follows: Army 39,234; Navy 5,621; Marines 8,104 and Air Force 393.

The figures for the first three quarters of the fiscal year ended last June 30 -- all that are currently available -- are already ahead of last year at 55,454.

There were 43,223 deserters from the Army, 3,756 from the Navy, 8,092 from the Marines and 383 from the Air Force.

If the desertion rate remained constant for April, May and June, the year's total would be 73,839. But all indications are that it will be even higher.

Many of these men -- the majority, according to the Pentagon -- turn themselves in voluntarily, and others are apprehended, some still carrying frayed round-trip bus or train tickets back to their posts, which are offered as evidence of their intention to return eventually.

But growing numbers are remaining on the run and, according to antiwar workers and deserters here and in Canada, a major exodus across the border has been taking place in the last four months.

A major factor in the sudden flow of deserters into Canada was a change in the country's immigration regulations late this spring reversing an anti-deserter policy adopted the previous year.

On July 29, 1968, the Canadian Department of Manpower and Immigration issued a memorandum telling immigration officers that, in exercising their broad discretion over applicants for permanent residence, they should consider whether the applicants were "serving on an active basis in the armed forces of their country."

Neither draft evasion nor desertion is covered by Canada's extradition treaty with the U.S., but the government was clearly telling its inspectors to consider desertion a debit in evaluating the worth of a potential Canadian citizen.

But a public outcry over the new regulations, including heated debate in the House of Commons, forced Minister of Immigration Allan J. MacEachen to rescind the memorandum on May 21 and to announce that deserters would be welcome as immigrants.

"If a serviceman from another country meets our immigration criteria, he will not be turned down because he is still in the active service of his country," MacEachen told Commons.

In British Columbia, the vancouver Committee to aid American War Objectors said that an average of 10 new American arrivals a day were going into its offices for help and about half were deserters.

"We're getting between 20 and 40 guys a day," said a spokesman for the Toronto Anti-Draft Programme, "and it is not unusual for half the people who come here today to be deserters."

The Toronto group is one of the most active of 26 organizations throughout Canada that provide temporary housing, job information and advice and help on im-

DVP & Hillel to Host Folk Singer

The Distinguished Visitors Program of the University has joined the Hillel Foundation in sponsoring the folk singing Rabbi Shlomo Carlebach in a free concert tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Rabbi Carlebach, who left the pulpit in order to express his message in song, is particularly relevant to the young people of today. The last issue of Life Magazine shows him performing at a hippie wedding in San Francisco's Golden Gate Park to which "the whole world was invited" to celebrate with the young wedding couple.

Carlebach is billed as a singer in the Hasidic tradition, and his performances to take on the character of a fervant religious celebration in which the Hasid's love of God and fellow man is expressed joyously and emotionally through singing and dancing. Carlebach turns on all types of audiences, hippie and straight, young and old, Jew and Gentile. All are invited to partake of this exciting concert of soulsong. No admission will be charged.

Parking Rules To be Enforced

Beginning today, all parking restrictions in commuter and numbered parking lots, as well as posted two-away zones, will be strictly enforced. All illegally parked vehicles will be ticketed and towed, by University Security Forces.

Washington Journalism Center Seeks Negroes for Fellowships

The Washington Journalism Center, an independent educational institution, is accepting applications from young Negroes interested in fellowships leading to careers in journalism.

Julius Dusha, Director of the Center, said the Center will award 10 fellowships for its Spring session, which begins February 2, 1970, for 16 weeks of study in Washington. Each fellowship provides a stipend of $2,000 to cover living expenses. There are no tuition charges.

The fellowship program includes special seminars with top Government officials, Members of Congress, and leading Washington reporters, editors, and commentators to help the Fellows develop a better understanding of public affairs.

The purpose of the program, Dusha explained, is to encourage more Negroes to pursue careers in journalism by giving them a sense of the excitement and relevancy of journalism in today's world. The seminar program enables them to explore such problems as the relationship between Government and the press, the role of Congress, the American presidency, the politics of the United States, the Nation's foreign policy, and the urban crisis. They also will work with the Center's staff on the technique of journalism.

Eligible for the program are men and women who have majored in such areas of study as political science, history, economics, sociology, and English, and who have expressed an interest in journalism through work on school or community publications or in discussions with their advisers.

The deadline for submission of applications for the Spring session is November 1, 1969.

Further information and application forms may be obtained by writing to the Director, The Washington Journalism Center, 2401 Virginia Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20037.

New Mass. Policy For Blood Donors

A recent ruling by the Massachusetts Legislature has made it easier for the 18 to 21 year old age group to donate blood. This ruling was termed " a compliment to both the parent and the responsible young adult who are aware enough of a valuable humanitarian contribution to be willing to eliminate a bit of red-tape."

This does not mean that the emphasis of the parent is being "by-passed" but that it is thought that people in the mentioned age group can make decisions on their own and they will still be Individuals while helping the community in general.

There is an urgent need for blood, of all types, and students at this school will have the chance to ease this need. The Blood Drive will take place on campus on November 4,5, and 6. Registration will take place this week, and October 14 - 17. All donors will be welcome.

A Paulist Goes Forward ...not backward

Time never stands still — and neither does a Paulist.

Issues are raised, conflicts appear and the world changes, but the Paulist is always part of the new . . . blending the best of the old with the hope and promise of the future.

Because one of the major characteristics of the Paulist is his ability to cope with, and welcome, change, he's better able to meet the needs of modern man: he uses his own talents to work for Christ and is given the freedom to do so.

If you've given thought to the priesthood, find out more about the order that never stands still. Write today for an illustrated brochure and a summary of our recent Renewal Chapter Guidelines.

A good cry cleanses the soul

After all is shed and done, your soul may be saved but your contacts need help. They need Lensine. Lensine is the one contact lens solution for complete contact care: preparing, cleansing, and soaking.

There was a time when you needed two or more different lens solutions to properly prepare and maintain your contacts. No more. Lensine, from The Murine Company, makes caring for contact lenses as convenient as wearing them.

Just a drop or two of Lensine coats and lubricates your lens. This allows the lens to float more freely in the eye, reducing tearful irritation. Why? Because Lensine is a compatible, "isotonic" solution, very much like your eye's natural fluids.

Cleaning your contacts with Lensine retards the build-up of foreign deposits on the lenses. And soaking your contacts in Lensine between wearing periods assures you of proper lens hygiene. You get a free soaking-storage case with individual lens compartments on the bottom of every bottle of Lensine.

It has been demonstrated the improper storage between wearings permits the growth of bacteria on the lenses. This is a sure cause of eye irritation and in some cases can endanger your vision. Bacteria cannot grow in Lensine because it's sterile, self-sanitizing, and antiseptic.

Lensine . . . the solution for complete contact lens care. Made by the Murine Company, Inc.

The "underground railroad" has its major centers in pacifist organizations in New York, Boston, and San Francisco. In San Francisco the offices of a group known as The Movement, become overrun every time there is a large troop shipment to Vietnam from nearby Travis Air Force Base.

But it is a largely uncoordinated series of acts by groups and individuals across the country -- Quakers and religious antiwar organizations, the Resistance, coffee houses near Army bases or campuses, middle-age suburbanites increasingly upset by the war and young people -- who respond to a plea for help from the fugitive GI, that is contributing to the flow of deserters.

Hepatitis Sidelines HC Football Players

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) - Nineteen Holy Cross football players, including seven starters, are victims of hepatitis, the college said Sunday.

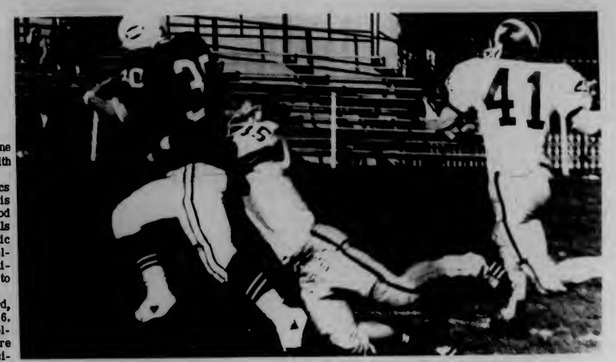
Holy Cross head coach Bill Whitten said "We're past the point of no return. We just can't play under these circumstances. The healthy players are affected mentally."

Heading the list of offensive players who are in the college infirmary is starting quarterback Mark Mowatt and his relief signal caller Jim Granger. Also out of the lineup are both starting ends, Ed Murphy and Jim McClowry. Starting wingback Joe Hart is also out of the lineup.

Three defensive team starters are also hospitalized. They are defensive end Jim Mahone, linebacker Fran Kittredge and defensive back Bill Stachowski. One manager is also hospitalized with hepatitis.

Holy Cross director of Athletics Vincent G. Dougherty said he is waiting for results of the blood tests, but said he may ask officials of the Eastern College Athletic Association and the National Collegiate Athletic Association to waive the rule and allow freshmen to play varsity ball.

Holy Cross, with a 0 - 2 record, lost to Dartmouth Saturday 38-6. They are scheduled to meet Colgate next Saturday. They were ranked 6th in the latest Associated Press college football poll for New England.



LIKE AN EXPRESS TRAIN - UMass soph fullback Dick Cummings displays his power-running in the losing Redman cause against Delaware on Saturday. The 6' - 230 pounder was very impressive as he gained 89 yards on 11 carries. In on the play for the Blue Hens is Pete Sundheim (45) and Ron Klein (41).

UMass Loses 2nd, 33-21, to Delaware

Redmen Couldn't Hold Slim Lead, Record Drops to 1-2

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Assistant Sports Editor

UMass lost its second football contest in succession, 33-21, to the University of Delaware at Alumni Stadium as one of the visitors' reserve quarterbacks, Carmen Infante, ran for a four-yard touchdown with 7:17 to go in the game snapping a 21-20 lead that the Redmen had maintained since late in the first half. The loss left UMass with a 1-2 record, Delaware stands at 2-1.

A Bruce Fad interception, mo ments before set up the Blue Hens' go-ahead score. UMass had control of the football, second down and 12 on Delaware's 18 yard line, two plays earlier.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Sports
VOLUME XCVIII ISSUE 21
MONDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1969

Quarterback Ken Hughes set up in the pocket and fired a pass intended for Nick McGarry. Fad, however, got to the ball first, picked it off and speeded down the right sideline until he was knocked out of bounds on the Redmen 30.

Six running plays later and Infante had the six points which put the Blue Hens out in front, 26-20. A passing attempt for the extra points went for naught.

On the ensuing kickoff the Redmen made their last serious effort to pull out a victory in what was a hard-fought grid war. Pat Scavone returned the boot to his own 16. After two running plays brought the ball to the 23 yard line, Scavone took a jump pass on the right from Hughes and advanced the ball up to the 30 for a first down.

OFF AND RUNNING - UMass halfback Pat Scavone was one of the main offensive attractions against Delaware as he scored two 5$'s on runs of 66 and 14 yards. Ho. 84 is Bruce Hanley. (MDC photo by Ken Emery)

Sophomore Dick Cummings lugged the pigskin on the next two plays for gains of 19 and 4 yards bringing UMass into Delaware territory at the 46 yard stripe. After two straight passes by Hughes fell incomplete, the Redmen were left with a fourth-and-six situation that they had to make to keep their threat alive. However, defensive tackle Ralph Borgess killed it as he nailed Hughes for a big loss back to the UMass 37.

Faced with a third-and-goal-to-go from the home 15 yard line and with only 45 seconds left in the game, Delaware's starting quarterback Tom DiMuzio rifled a TD pass to his halfback Dick Kelley to wrap up the victory for the Blue Hens. The extra point attempt was good and the scoreboard flashed the final story of 33-21.

Delaware's fourth quarter victory marches overshadow the memory of the firewords display which characterized a first half in which UMass out-pointed its foe, 21-20.

The Redmen opened the fray by kicking off to a Blue Hen offense that everyone had heard and read about. It lived up to its name, scoring in eight plays; the last one was a romp by halfback Bill Armstrong from 22 yards out. Placekicker Jim Albertso n gave the visitors their seventh point.

The 10,500 fans were stunned. However, 18 seconds of play later found all of them on their feet jumping and screaming as Scavone scored on a 66-yard run on the first UMass play from scrimmage.

Scavone had taken a handoff from Tim Adams on the 34 and swept left behind good blocking in the line. He kept on moving to his left until he was free down the sideline. At about 25 yards from paydirt Ed Sarno bumped away the last Delaware defender and Scavone scampered into the end zone.

The game was only three minutes, 47 seconds old as Dennis Gagnon tied the score at 7-7 with his p.a.t.

UMass followers had even more to cheer about as their favorites came back seven minutes later for another score as Scavone again rambled in, this time from 14 yards away.

The Redmen initiated this drive on the visitors' 42 as Delaware's fake punt attempt on fourth down was snuffed out by the UMass defense. On second down, Adams fireballed a pass complete to Steve Parnell on the right at the 28. The Blue Hens were tagged with a personal foul on the play advancing the ball half the distance to the goal line.

The next play saw Scavone take off to his left, always veering to the outside of would-be tacklers to tally his second TD. Gagnon was on target and, with 4:38 to go in the quarter, UMass owned a 14-7 lead.

Infante replaced DiMuzio on the next Blue Hen drive and promptly brought his team to the Redmen 12. DiMuzio came in at this point and threw a touchdown pass on the right to end Pat Walker. With 1:04 left in still the first quarter, Albertson's kick tied the score at 14.

Adams was replaced by Hughes in the early stages of the second period. Later in the period he led the offense to what was to be UMass' last touchdown of the day, a 13-yard jaunt by Jerry Grasso.

The drive was highlighted by Hughes' call of a full-back draw on a third-and-ten situation on the Delaware 48. Cummings answered the call, making his way through heavy traffic all the way to the 13 to set up Grasso's run. Gagnon's p.a.t. with 2:28 to go in the half put the Redmen ahead, 21-14.

Booters Clip BC, 3-0

By: BOB GANLEY

By beating Boston College 3-0 on Saturday, the UMass soccer team gained its first win of the season. The Redmen completely dominated the game, allowing BC only two shots on goal.

The first period was scoreless, as UMass missed on several scoring opportunities. Early in the second period, Lindo Alves put the Redmen in front by converting a penalty kick. Alves just missed another score when his shot hit the post.

Duane Brown put the Redmen in front 2-0 in the third period by heading in a high pass from Alves in the corner. Brown also assisted on the last Redmen goal when he set up Larry DeFelice in front of the net to make it 3-0.

UMass had 20 shots on net in the game and the BC goalie made many fine saves to keep the score down. Coach Peter Broaca was happy to be a winner but he felt his offense was too inconsistant. On several occasions, a Redman pass was placed in front of the net but there was no one to knock it in. The offense was the best defense for UMass.

The Redmen had the ball in BC territory for most of the game. Augie Calheno, Dick Matuszczak and all of the fullbacks did a fine job of keeping the ball in the offensive zone.

The win evened the record at 1-1 for the Redmen with an 0-1 conference mark.

ACTION FROM SATURDAY 'S SOCCER MATCH VS. BC

X-Country Team Whips NU, 18-48

Putting everything together into what Coach Ken O'Brien called "a good competitive team effort," the UMass cross country team thrashed Northeastern University 14-48, on the way to their first win of the still young season.

Leading a one, two, three sweep for the Redmen was top five-miler Ron Wayne, who covered the new Franklin Park five-mile course in 24-minutes and 45 seconds. Running second for UMass was long distance ace, Leo Duart, who traveled the distance in 25:25. Following him was Tom Derderian, rebounding from a poor race last week, to take third in 25:45.

The Redmen controlled the race from the beginning when Larry Paulson, who finished fifth for UMass and seventh in the race, sprinted into the lead and went through the mile in first place in 4:45. The pack slowly crept up on Paulson, with Wayne and Duart taking command and moving out over the last half of the race.

Northeastern hopes of having a closer meet disappeared when two of their top runners, Larry Josephs and Mike Scanlon, dropped out of the race at different points, severely depleting the Huskies scoring punch.

Placing fourth for the Redmen and fifth in the race was senior Dave Evans, who for the second straight week produced a top effort as he powered his way through the pack to grap fifth in a good time of 26:02.

Completing the strong team effort were sophomores Don Dunsky and Bruce Blackburn in the top seven. Also running good, steady races and improving their efforts over last week were Steve Whicher, Jeff Scagnelli, Dave Elben, Bob Benshimol and Mike Cowles.

Competing on a 3.1 mile course, the freshmen harriers duplicated the efforts of the varsity with an overpowering 23-47 win. Leading the frosh was Tom Jasmin who battled Paul McElroy of Northeastern for two miles before pulling in front to win a fast 15:57.

UMass poured a group of runners over the finish line after two Huskies scored behing Jasmin. Tom Swain 4th, Phil Riley 5th, Rick Barry 6th and Gary O'Dell 7th closed the scoring and finished off Northeastern's hope of victory.

Gluckstern to Become Associate Provost

DR. ROBERT L. GLUCKSTERN, head of the physics department, will be recommended to the board of trustees as the University's second associate Provost. He has already moved into an office in Whitmore to assume his new duties. He became head of the physics department in 1964. (MDC photo by Bill Dickinson)

Dr. Robert L. Gluckstern, professor and head of the physics department at UMass, will be appointed to the position of Associate Provost, the DAILY COLLEGIAN learned Monday night.

Provost Oswald Tippo will recommend the appointment at the next board of trustees meeting, October 18.

However, Gluckstern has already given up his position as head of the physics department and has moved into a third floor office in Whitmore.

Gluckstern told the DAILY COLLEGIAN he will work on budgetary matters and other projects.

The appointment will not be official until the trustees take a final vote.

Physics Professor Leroy Cook has been recommended by the department to fill the existing vacancy of department head. Cook headed the committee which produced the "Cook Report", a guide to curriculum reform. The trustees will also consider this appointment at their next meeting.

Last fall, Dr. Jeremiah Allen was named the University's first Associate Provost. The addition of Gluckstern as another Associate Provost is aimed at relieving Dr. Tippo of some of the work load of his office.

Dr. Gluckstern assumed his position as head of the UMass physics department in 1964.

He was born in Atlantic City, N.J. in 1924. He received a bachelor of electrical engineering degree from the City College of New York in 1944 and his Ph.D. degree from MIT in 1948.

Campus-Wide Referendum on New S.G.A. Constitution Set

By MARK SILVERMAN
News Editor

A school-wide referendum on the new Student Government Constitution will be held in the Student Union Lobby for commuters, and in Dorms for resident students this Thursday.

Included in the Constitution, which was passed by the Student Senate's Constitutional Convention last week but which still needs student body approval, are the "landmark" provisions of a popularly elected student body president, and a student Bill of Rights.

The constitution would provide for an election each February for a Student Body President, an office which would have the power to propose legislation to the Senate, ask the Senate to reconsider any action which it does take, and make appointments to campus-wide committees.

Other responsibilities include making sure that "regulations duly enacted by the Senate are duly executed, and the power of issuing orders."

Included in the constitution is a provision that the Senate elect a speaker who would serve as its main presiding officer.

Currently the Senate elects a president, vice president, secretary and treasurer as its executive officers.

Student Senator John Dubois said of the Student Body Presidency provision, which has been on the drawing boards for the past 2-1/2 years, "The Presidency provides the means to move the student body on an issue, and this is something which we've never had before."

"It takes a respected leader to lead an issue," he went on to say, "and only a popularly elected President can claim to speak for the students, and thus effectively lead them."

"The Student Bill of Rights included in the Constitution," he continued, "is vital to the realization of student power on campus. Students finally have control of their lives on campus."

Highlighting the Bill of Rights is the provision that "no student shall be denied the right to receive and express opinions, ideas or facts . . . nor shall any student be denied the right to associate with whomever he wishes or to invite and hear exponents of any and all viewpoints."

The Bill guarantees that "no student shall be made to suffer any University penalty, except upon conviction through due process, before the appropriate senate approved judiciary, of which at least half the members shall be students."

The complete text of the proposed Constitution appears on pages four and five of this morning's MDC.

Commuter Referendum Thursday

Along with the Student Senate elections this Thursday, there will be two referendum questions for the commuter community. All ballots will include a question concerning the new Student Government Association Constitution but the second question asking if the voters support the proposed Commuter Assembly Constitution.

This constitution will set up a commuter area government composed of an Assembly of all commuters and a Council to be comprised of eight elected officers and the three top vote-getting commuter senators.

Oct. 15 Peace Mail Hits Campus Tonight

By JOHN HICKEY
Special to the MDC

The entire UMass campus will be canvassed between seven and ten this evening by Moratorium Peace Mail in an effort to gather support for the letter campaign. Representatives of many campus groups, including the Scrolls, the Maroon Keys, the Revelers, the Southwest Patriots, the Pan-Hellenic Council, and the Inter-Fraternity Council, along with individual volunteers, will ask students to contribute to the success of the drive.

Moratorium Peace Mail will mail a letter to the parents of all UMass students asking their support for the October 15 Peace Action Day. The letter will also urge parents to write to President Nixon telling him of their wish to see the war ended.

The campus canvassers will be seeking contributions from the residents of the campus to help defray the costs of printing and mailing the letter. Several RSO groups governing bodies, and fraternities and sororities have already pledged financial assistance to the letter-writing effort.

Sargent Likes Moratorium, Tufts Halts Classes

BOSTON (AP) - Gov. Francis W. Sargent said Monday he supports the setting aside of Oct. 15 as a day to protest the Vietnam War "both as governor and as a concerned citizen."

"Every American looks to the day when this war can be brought to an end. What we must discuss, what we must determine is how to reach that goal," Sargent said.

But Sargent added: "We must remember the sacrifices of those who waged this war over these long years."

He said he plans to take part in observances set for the day and said he hoped many citizens of Massachusetts will do the same.

Senate President Maurice A. Donahue echoed Sargent's sentiments.

"The Vietnam moratorium of Oct. 15 has my complete and enthusiastic support as an effective means of demonstrating in a non-violent manner the popular opposition to the continuance of the Vietnam War," Donahue said.

Meanwhile, the faculty of arts and sciences at Tufts University voted Monday to suspend all classes in the undergraduate college Oct. 15, the day of a nationwide demonstration against the Vietnam War.

The vote was by a narrow margin of 63-63 with 10 abstentions.

The decision affects only undergraduate classes and does not apply to graduate schools.

On Oct. 3, 60 faculty members signed a petition stating their intention to refrain from "all business as usual" on Oct. 15.

Indians 'Sick, Tired, Disappointed' With Government Aid Programs

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) - Federal and state assistance to the American Indian was rapped Monday for "lip service" and "political tokenism."

"We are sad that all of our pleading, all of our prodding and requests have been shrugged off and fallen on deaf ears to be ignored," said Wendell Chino, president of the National Congress of American Indians.

"We are sick, tired, and disappointed with tokenism, political platitudes and promises that were never intended to be kept," he told nearly 600 delegates to the Congress' 26th annual convention.

He said the American Indian is asking that "the historic commitment of 1775 to the Indian people be fulfilled in this century."

As Chino spoke, it was learned in Washington that the Nixon Administration, which came under criticism from Chino, plans to unveil its new Indian policy during the week-long convention.

It may come Wednesday noon when Interior Secretary Walter Hickel addresses the convention.

Or, Indian Commissioner Louis R. Bruce may detail it when he speaks Thursday night.

They are expected to emphasize that the administration rejects the "termination" policy expressed in a 1953 congressional resolution, which aimed at ending trusteeship over reservations.

Chino told the Congress Monday, however, that the present condition of "certain terminated tribes, doesn't speak well of the federal government and its termination policy.

"Our lands have dwindled and the administration of this country has made the American Indian people and their problems a political football resulting in vacillating policies. We have seen what termination can do to our people. The Indian must have the right of self-determination on the selection of his way of life."

He called on Indians to unite into a "strong, positive leadership that must come to grips with local problems. . ."

Bruce said he had read Chino's speech, but didn't hear it.

He told a newsman, "I thought he laid it right on the line."

Bruce said he told a Senate hearing on his confirmation that restructuring of the Bureau of Indian Affairs is "our No. one priority."

A telegram from President Nixon to the convention "assures our unrelenting pledge for the well being of all Indian citizens."

The telegram, read to the delegates, said Bruce and Hickle have been "given the highest priority to restructuring the BIA."

Amherst College Professor Discusses "A Crisis in Contemporary Society"

A professor of history from Amherst College says that the present crisis in the colleges reflects also " a crisis in contemporary society."

Professor Theodore P. Greene told 400 representatives from the 136 congregations of the United Churches of Christ from Western Massachusetts that at least four qualities are needed in present-day campus life. The meeting took place in Holyoke.

These qualities, which he said were characteristic of the 19th century college, are a sense of community, a sense of mission, a strong sense of vocation and a sense of salvation.

Greene challenged the churchmen and women to be active in seeking to find answers to the lack of direction now prevalent in both society and colleges and universities.

He asked the churches: "What are you doing to civilize and evangelize a miserable world?"

A panel of students and a Chaplin from area colleges responded to Greene's speech.

There included William Reichert, Williams College; Sid Finehirsh, University of Massachusetts; John Dover, Springfield College; and Rev. Robert Parsonage, Springfield College.

Parsonage observed that colleges should be "places of conflict and not concensus, for questions as well as answers."

Finehirsh, a student leftist, charged that the present university in America is a captive to the technological economy and that education has as its purpose greater productivity.

Reichert said that present student rebellion is asking for freedom during the educational experience.

He said students today are baffled "by the church, which should open up to students."

Ontario May Ban Phosphates In Detergents

TORONTO, Ont. (AP) - George Kerr, Ontario's energy minister, said today the provincial government may have to ban phosphates in detergents in 1972 if other methods of reducing the phosphate content of Ontario waters haven't worked by then.

Kerr said in an interview in Toronto that if legislation becomes necessary, the Ontario goverament would like to see it on a national basis.

However, he said Ontario might act alone to conform with an International Joint Commission report on pollution. The report calls for 1972 as the deadline for ending municipal and industrial phosphate discharges into Lake Erie, and 1975 for Lake Ontario.

The report says phosphates are the most serious pollution problem in the Great Lakes, accounting for 50 per cent of the pollution. The other half is human waste that is not properly treated before being discharged, and agricultural chemicals that are washed into streams and rivers.

Kerr said the government is considering legislation that would require detergent manufacturers to list the phosphate content of their product packages.

Buyers would then be able to choose between newer detergents which have up to 32 per cent phosphate content and older products with five per cent phosphate.

Kerr also said Ontario hopes to make great use of a lime precipitation process. The Ontario Water Resources Commission says the system will drastically cut nitrogen and phosphorus in treated waste.

Starting today, movie tickets for both Sunday and Thursday night movies will be sold during the week towards the rear of the Student Union, next to the bus ticket window.

If, however, the certification occurs on or after the first meeting in the spring semester, the Senate may, by a two-thirds vote, alter this procedure. The Senate shall establish procedures regarding the temporary absence of officers.

A Love Story

"My songs may disturb you. My songs may help you to become closer. My songs may make you understand. But all that doesn't matter as long as I have reached you. If I have reached you in any way, I will have achieved my purpose." Nina Simone was explaining.

Nina is great. It's as simple as that. She's great. Any attempt to dissect her performance Saturday night at Bowker Auditorium would be like trying to tell Mr. Nixon that he is not really president; so instead of reviewing another concert, I'll try to tell of alove story between a woman who is Black, and an audience.

She has a classical African beauty which, for centuries, was mocked and spurned by white Europeans. Her facial expression is that of bitter knowledge and power, so disquieting that the audience pleads for a relieving smile. Nina is not a dancer, but a graceful contortionist who does not interpret, but feels. She does not exhort the audience, "Let me take you higher," but, "Let me take you deeper." She stares into the audience, shades her eyes from the spotlight, points, and while the honored victim squirms, she turns her back, laughs inwardly, and walks to her piano.

Nina can also soothe. She has known sorrow, and she has known love. She understands the tortures a black person endures living in a white world, and the discomfort of a person who stands out in a conformist world. Reaching out and into all people, she emotes and feels "Suzanne" as a vibrant love chant, while "Black is the Color of My True Love's Hair" is a sensitive, yet jarring ballad of blues and undefinable modern-classical piano chords.

Nina is a woman and other women laugh at their dates when Nina scornfully says, "What does it take to turn you on?" But Nina is also a Black woman, and she knows of the "Nee-grows" with the rags in their hair, of the whores who sell a soul they do not have, of the daughters of rapists. She berates them, but they know that she understands.

I can think of all the words that could be used to describe Nina and her audience --- cajole, plead, empathize, love, bait --- but words are prisons that can never fully describe feelings. Being a white, liberal, suburbanite, I've read all the proper books --- MALCOME X, SOUL ON ICE, CRISIS IN BLACK AND WHITE --- and I thought I knew the proper answers. By the time Nina finished her last song, "To Be Young, Gifted, and Black", I had learned something which I would never find in a book, and something I cannot express in words. Nina reached me. She's Black. I love her.

Majority Wishes

The issue of the proposed moratorium has been betted back and forth between the President and the faculty senate for no reason. They both claim not to be responsible, or to have the power to cancel classes, and in part they are correct.

The decision to cancel classes really rests with the students and faculty. If, as is claimed, this is a "democratic" community, on an issue such as this, the entire community should be involved in the decision. That is exactly what is happening.

For almost two weeks now students, and this week faculty, have been voting on two questions. The first, "Are you in favor of the cancelation of classes on October 15, in observance of the moratorium?" the vote has been more than eight to one in favor. On the second question, "Will you support the moratorium if the University refuses to officially cancel classes on this day?" the response was more than two to one in favor. Also the Student Senate, Department of English, Health Services, and the Executive Council of the Class of '70, have all voted their support.

From this, it is clear that at least the students, the largest segment of the University population, is overwhelmingly in support of class cancellation in observance of the moratorium. If there is no radical shift in the voting, then, it would seem that the majority of the University supports the moratorium.

Since the sentiment of the University seems so obvious, it is up to Lederle to carry out their wishes. He may have been correct when he said the decision wasn't his, but he is not correct when he says he doesn't have the power. The fact that most people support the cancellation, gives him that power.

Now, if he doesn't cancel classes he is ignoring the wishes of the majority of the community. He has already said that he will carry on a normal day of business. This means he does not support the moratorium as an individual But that should not influence his decision.

He must act as President of the University of Massachusetts, and act in accordance with majority wishes.

Captain America and Billy?

We feel it important that we answer the letter in the Collegian attacking Tommy Walker. You may not want to take this, but we're going to tell you who Tommy is, and you have to follow him. The prophet Jesus has gone unheeded for nearly two thousand years. Many battlefields are strewn with the remnants of those who "followed Jesus." Today we have new prophets whom we cannot afford to ignore. Tommy, Arlo, Ratso, Captain America, and Billy are preaching the modern gospel, for those who can hear. If eyesight can cut through your blindness, if you can dig where it's at, get on the amazing journey. Travel is no hassle. You can take the train south to Morocco. A red VW microbus or a motorcycle are just as good, although you should avoid Greyhound. Open your eyes to America (take in New York and the Southwest, but avoid Florida). After Stockbridge you should split the country and see the rest of the world. Do up a little Soho and a bit of Brighton. Then follow Suzanne down Penny Lane until you reach Marrakesh. Love is waiting there, but not in a beautiful balloon.

Sad words were spoken to Benjamin the Baptist. "Plastics," he was told. But Ratso knew the truth. Ratso died for your sins. So did we: Diana Ross lives. When you can see and hear you'll know the truth. Then you too will be able to speak. You will be cleansed with the lather of love, or the love of lather.

Tommy, can you hear me? You'll dig pinball. Doodoo doodoodoo doodoodoodoodoodoo. These people are gonna make it.

p.s. When the movie version of this letter comes out, don't see it, having read the book.

A Violation of Rights

In the DAILY COLLEGIAN of October 2, there was printed an article that said the DAILY COLLEGIAN supported and urged President Lederle to shut down the university on October 15 to observe the Moratorium. There was also an article saying the Student Senate unanimously passed a resolution requesting the administration to cancel classes for the Vietnam Moratorium.

Part of the bill printed went like this, ". . .and be it further resolved that the Student Senate expresses its intention to use any and all means necessary consistent with the Student Senate Picketing Code to insure that all classes and administrative functions will not be conducted if the proper authorities do not comply with the above requestes."

The Vietnam Moratorium is a political issue. Whether you feel like participating in it or not is a matter of your political persuasions. For a paper to recommend individual support for a political issue is not out of line with a paper's perogative. However, I don't think a paper should recommend that the administration cancel classes so that those of one political persuasion will be free to indulge in their political activities and deny those of other or no political persuasion their right to go to classes for which they have paid. This is not just and it violates the civil liberties of those who are not of that political persuasion.

Furthermore I do not think that it is justifiable for the student senate, of all bodies, to rule by fiat; to threaten to coerce those who do not do as demanded, to observe a political action which they may not support. This is in violation of the civil liberties of those whose politics are not the same. The Senate has no right to force a person to conform his politics to any one mode.

A Case of Malpractice

Everyday I lose more faith in this country in which we live. The Army has dropped the charges against the Green Berets. Today I received a letter from a good friend who graduated from this illustrious institution two years ago, Phi Beta Kappa. He is presently serving his time with the Air Force in Saigon. After reading his letter, I am really wondering why I am living in the United States. But he can say it better than I:

> I must, before I forget, get across to the world an important fact. The Vietnamese are trained and instructed on how to make and use dum-dum bullets. If you don't know what dum-dum bullets are, they are the bullets whose heads have been quartered with a knife, thus assuring almost certain death for anyone hit in the torso, for the bullet will break into four pieces and break off in directions different from the original path. This is expressly forbidden in the Geneva Convention which the U. S. so bravely flaunts in the face of the North Vietnamese when running its propaganda. If you could I'd appreciate it if you could inform as many people as possible since you have an access to the media that I don't. As your source, you can use everything about me except my name. It might upset a few people, but without my name, there's nothing they can do. Particulars: 1) Making of dum-dums is taught to all Army officer candidates in basic training; 2) Dum-dums are used in target practice; 3) By reports of Vietnamese soldiers, they are used in the field; 4) The Vietnamese show no hesitation in talking about it since they have no idea that it's illegal. Verification: seven Air Force pilot trainees who went through Army basic training.
> I have found some use of my time here in such insights as these. The military can't actually prosecute me, but they could make life unbearable like putting the tights on so I couldn't look the wrong way. Now that I remain innocent, they can't do a damn thing and my freedom to report other such delectables remains unimpaired.

So much from Saigon. I am not sure that there is any hope whatsoever for this hypocritical country of ours.

Mr. Nixon and Electoral College Reform

President Nixon has been a political professional for most of his adult life, and accordingly, few things impress him as much as the raw statistics of popularity that pass bills and elect candidates. Witness the following sequence:

Last April 29, the House Judiciary Committee approved a plan to abolish the Electoral College and substitute direct election of the President by a 29 to 6 vote, or a favorable percentage of 83, substantially larger than anticipated.

On Sept. 18, the House, which had been expected to eke out a bare two-thirds margin, voted 339 to 70 for the same direct-election plan, with 83 per cent of its members in support.

On Sept. 24, the Gallup Poll reported that 81 per cent of the people they questioned approved choosing the President on the basis of total vote cast, rather than electoral votes earned by carrying various states.

On Sept. 30, Mr. Nixon, who had stoutly refused for nine months to back the direct-election plan on the grounds that it was not popular enough with politicians and elected officials, announced that he had reversed his position and urged the Senate to join him in an endorsement of the basic reform. Since this change cannot be made without amending the Constitution and amendments require a two-thirds majority in Congress, direct election will need 67 votes in the Senate. Three weeks ago, the most optimistic estimate could not conjure up more than 50, but that forecast, like the old Nixon position, has now changed.

No one knows yet how many votes the President's move may shift in the Senate, but some evidence of White House power began to accumulate almost at once. A few hours after the announcement, Senator Gordon Allott of Colorado announced that if the choice came down to the direct-election plan or no reform at all, he would support direct election. As a conservative small-state Republican, Mr. Allott was supposed to be the archetype of the Senate to-the-death defender of the electoral vote system, which gives the less populous states a disproportionate share of political power, although a very small one altogether.

Senator Allott only casts one vote, but the fact that he is chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee is certainly going to encourage some of his conservative colleagues to follow his lead.

UNITED FRONT

The combination of the Nixon endorsement and the death of Senator Everett McKinley Dirksen, a foe of direct election, has produced a united Republican front at the highest party levels. The new minority leader, Senator Hugh Scott, takes the Allott approach, and the new whip, Senator Robert P. Griffin, is a zealous convert to the direct-election cause.

Still, the Senate picture remains very close. The Judiciary Committee actually has up for consideration, as a result of sub-committee action, one of the competing electoral reforms, the district plan. But there clearly are enough votes to substitute the direct plan in committee, and report it out onto the floor. There, the greatest present strength of the direct-election forces lies in their more or less unchallenged claim to enough votes to defeat the district plan and another alternative, the proportional plan. (Both these alternatives retain the electoral vote with its built-in inequities but divide the numbers up differently.)

It only takes a simple majority of 51 votes to block a substitute proposal in the Senate, but to move from there to 67 may yet prove a formidable task. What it will require is the transferred loyalty of substantial numbers of men like Senators Allott and Scott who prefer a different plan but will settle for direct election rather than keep the present imperfect system.

Attempts to count House noses before the electoral reform vote were not very accurate, because they do not reflect such transfers - men and women who would rather have seen it otherwise but simply could not afford, personally or politically, to oppose establishing a system where every voter's vote counts.

Beyond the Senate vote, if it is favorable, lies a last barrier to direct election, one that may prove difficult to scale. The legislatures of three-quarters of the states, or 38, must ratify the new electoral amendment. Refusal to act by only 13 would block the movement, and there is reported reluctance in at least that number.

Venture: Use a love call to count bacteria.

The lampyridae beetle family. Delight of small boys. Biological light bulb. And prime source of raw material for another Du Pont innovation.

Luciferase, an enzymatic protein with intriguing properties, obtainable only from fireflies. Luciferin, an organic molecule also found in fireflies, but synthesizable. Adenosine triphosphate (ATP), a common energy-yielding substance found in all living cells.

Those are the three main ingredients in lampyridae's love light. And because ATP is common to all living cells, university researchers discovered they could produce an artificial glow by mixing luciferin and luciferase wherever life is present.

Noting that phenomenon, Du Pont scientists and engineers went on to develop it into a practical analytical system. Correlating the intensity of the artificial "glow" with the amount of ATP present in bacteria, they designed a means of measuring the reaction.

The result is the luminescence biometer—the first really basic improvement in bacteria-counting methods since the time of Louis Pasteur. Rather than waiting days for a culture to demonstrate growth density, a doctor or technician can now get a digital readout of bacteria concentration in a matter of minutes.

Other potentially lifesaving uses for the biometer are being suggested every day—such as diagnosing metabolic rates, enzyme deficiencies and nerve damage.

Innovation—applying the known to discover the unknown, inventing new materials and putting them to work, using research and engineering to create the ideas and products of the future—this is the venture Du Pont people are engaged in.

McGovern to Speak in Boston Oct.15

United States Senator George McGovern, Democrat of South Dakota, will address a mass rally on the Boston Common October 15th to commemorate Vietnam Peace Action Day.

Senator McGovern, a persistent critic of the Vietnam War, will give the keynote address at the 3:00 p.m. demonstration, following student marches from Northeastern University, Boston University, and Harvard-Radcliff-M.I.T., to the Charles Street side of the Common.

Chairing the rally is Everett Mendelsohn, professor at Harvard University. Others scheduled to speak include Cora WEISS, National Co-chairman, New Mobilization to End the War in Vietnam, Boston University Professor Howard Zinn, Kay Hurley of the Massachusetts Welfare Rights Organization and Peter Camejo, Student Mobilization Committee.

The rally is sponsored jointly by the Vietnam Moratorium Committee, Washington, D.C., and the Vietnam Peace Action Committee, 44 Brattle Street, Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Thousands of students, businessmen, lawyers, clergy and others taking a day off from "business as usual" in protest against the War are expected to attend the rally.

Marches will begin from Cambridge Common at 2 p.m., proceed down Massachusetts Avenue past M.I.T. and cross the river to Commonwealth Avenue. Boston University students will gather in front of Sherman Union on Commonwealth Avenue at 2:30 p.m., while Northeastern University students gather in the Northeastern University Quadrangle at 2:30 p.m.
